Everything hangs on the outcome of the action raging in the north. Both armies have brought up tremendous reinforcements, and it would seem that either one or the other must break through. In his effort to effect this end, Gen. Von Kluk is using the protection of night for major assaults. When the Germans advance they turn great searchlights on the allied positions and send up rockets which give a brilliant illumination for 40 seconds. Then the bugles blare and on come the sturdy Teutons. The fighting is desperate and the losses enormous, but the allies are standing firm with proverbial English stubbornness and French gallantry. The two elements are combining to make a marvelous defensive machine. Their offensive qualities have been proven at the Marne, and for the last twenty-six days on the Aisne and neighboring rivers.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The keeper of his Majesty's purse, Lt.-Col. Sir William Carrington, was found dead in his bed yesterday morning. He was born in 1845.

It is reported that Rear Admiral Story, who is on the retired list, and a resident of Guelph, has been sent for by the Imperial Government, and has left for Ottawa.

Col. Septimus Denison, who is in command of the Montreal military division, was appointed yesterday to the headquarters' staff at Ottawa as acting adjutant-general.

The sum bequeathed by Mrs. Frank Leslie, of New York, who died recently, to Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the American suffrage leader, is in excess of $800,000.

Another milestone was passed in the history of hydro-electric power in Ontario yesterday when Sir Adam Beck pressed the button which turned on hydro power in the village of Beaverton.

The second session of the third Legislature of Alberta was convened yesterday with the usual ceremony. The speech from the throne gave but little indication of the business that will be considered.

There was a great gathering of Masons at Read's Cemetery in the Township of Augusta, near Brockville, yesterday at the unveiling of a monument to the memory of Dr. Ziba M. Phillips, a pioneer Mason of Eastern Ontario.

The Ontario Government has sold another township of timber. This went to Manley Chew, of Midland, former member and defeated Liberal candidate for East Simcoe, for $8.50 per thousand feet and $2 per thousand feet timber dues.

ENGINEER WANTED WAR.

So He Stole Submarine To Commit Italy To Hostilities.

SPEZIA, Italy, Oct. 8. — (Via Rome.—The authorities have received a letter from the engineer who disappeared with the Italian-built submarine while the vessel supposedly was having her trials in the Gulf of Spezia and later landed her at Bastia, France.

The letter was written before the submarine left her moorings here. The writer says that he considers Italy's attitude of neutrality a mistake and that it is the duty of every Italian citizen to act individually in an effort to ignite the spark which will render Italian intervention in the war inevitable.

It is supposed that the engineer has placed himself in the hands of the French military authorities.

SHOT IN DISPUTE

Guard at Welland Canal is Murdered by Fellow-soldier — Other Tragedies

MURDER AND SUICIDE

ST. CATHARINES, Oct. 8. — Pte. Theodore Burgoyne of the 19th Regiment was shot dead while on guard duty on the Welland Canal last night, in full view of several comrades, by a fellow-member, of the same detail, known as Pte. Frank Hartley, aged 26 years, who was immediately placed under arrest, brought to this city and lodged in the police station on a charge of murder.

The victim is a son of the late E. W. Burgoyne, and a nephew of Ald. Burgoyne, proprietor of The Daily Standard. In private life he was a clerk in the St. Catharines branch of the Bank of Toronto, 19 years of age, and a great favorite. Of Hartley little is known. He joined the regiment a few weeks ago, since the guard had been placed upon the canal, and as far as can be learned, has no relatives here. He came to St. Catharines from some place in the United States and gave his birthplace as England.

The tragedy took place just outside the lock shanty at lock 9, near Merritton, neither of the men being on sentry-go at the time. An altercation over some trivial matter took place between Burgoyne and Hartley, according to other members of the guard who were close at hand, but very few words of the discussion appear to have been heard. All however agree that with an imprecation, and with no visible provocation, Hartley raised his rifle, pointed it hurriedly at Burgoyne's face, and discharged it before Burgoyne, who was standing just a few feet away, could brush the weapon aside, the bullet passing through Burgoyne's eye. The shot was fired at 7.05, and the victim was dead in seven minutes. Four comrades who witnessed the tragedy, surprised and enraged, sprang upon Hartley before he could again use the rifle, wrenched it away from him, bore him to the ground and handled him rather roughly before he was formally arrested.

Murder and Suicide.

TORONTO, Oct. 8. — Lying side by side, in gruesome dishevelment, on the floor of the kitchen of their home, the police found a foreigner and his wife. The woman's throat had been cut from ear to ear. She was quite dead. The man lay unconscious, likewise slashed across the neck, bleeding to death.

The man, Frank Sakeski, a Polish butcher at 707 Queen street west, was hurried to the Western Hospital, where he died without recovering consciousness. The body of his wife, Caroline, was sent to the morgue.

Murder and suicide was the decision of the officers who investigated. A debauch was the cause.

Young Man Murdered.

HAMILTON, Oct. 8. — Andrew Richardson, a single man, 31 years of age, who gave up his work on the farm of William Nash in order to come to the city to enlist for the second contingent, died in the central police station about 7.30 o'clock last night as the result of a razor gash on the left side of his throat, said to have been inflicted in the Bethel Mission, a cheap lodging-house across the street from the police station. Thomas Brown, 48 years of age, well known to the police, is held in connection with the crime.

The dead man was a son of Mrs. D. Richardson, 172 Cardigan street, Guelph, and was born there. He bore an excellent reputation.

Island of Yap Taken.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8. — At the Japanese embassy here yesterday the seizure by the Japanese Pacific squadron of the Island of Yap was said to be only one development in the general plan agreed upon by the British and the Japanese to seize all of the German naval stations in the Pacific. This is regarded as necessary in order to terminate the activities of the German cruisers, which have inflicted serious injury upon British commerce.

THE BATTLE IN BELGIUM

Siege of Antwerp Has Become a Far-extended Struggle—Operations in the Surrounding Country

ANOTHER AISNE BATTLE

LONDON, Oct. 8.—The Daily News has the following from its correspondent in Belgium:

"The siege of Antwerp is developing into a second Battle of the Rivers (the Aisne battle.) It is raging from Termonde on the west to Lierre on the east, along the banks of the Scheldt, the Rupel and the Nehte, which the Belgian army is defending against odds but with stubborn determination.

"The main attack at the moment is being launched against Lierre, the enemy having apparently determined to cross the Nethe at this point. But vigorous pressure is also being applied along the Termonde-Malines road, in the neighborhood of St. Amand, with the object of forcing the Belgian field army beyond what can best be described as "the elbow of the Scheldt."

It cannot be too clearly understood that there is a vital difference between the defences of Antwerp and those of Liege and Namur. While the 52-centimetre howitzers of the Germans may dispose of a Briahmont ring fortress, it by no means follows that they will be equally successful against a widespread network of flood, mine, and wire entanglements intersected by water courses, such as that which I passed through yesterday afternoon while I was in the western area of the operations.

"There is nothing, as the position stands at the present, to indicate the least possibility of the Germans being able to secure possession of Antwerp, or even to invest it successfully. Everything points in the opposite direction. Comparatively small results have followed the several days' pounding on the advance forts by the siege guns, and failure has met the successive infantry attempts to break through, carried out, as they undoubtedly have been, with bravery and utter indifference to the loss of life involved."

TO DUPLICATE EQUIPMENT.

War Office Ask Canada For 100 Per Cent. of Extra Outfits.

OTTAWA, Oct. 8.—The War Office has asked the Canadian Government to provide 100 per cent. extra equipment for the Canadian troops. There had already been provided 70 per cent. The securing of the additional 30 per cent. for the first contingent of 33,000 men and also the double equipment for the second contingent of 22,000 men is giving the Militia Department a busy time, and will keep the mills all over the country going day and night in order to turn out the equipment in time.

The second contingent will consist of regiments organized in the regular way. There will be no regiments organized as independent units.

Many requests are still coming in from members of the Northwest Mounted Police to be allowed to enlist and go to the war.

Men even from the Yukon have asked to be permitted to go, but the Government still holds to its decision made some time ago that no members of the force can be spared.

CANADIANS ARRIVE.

They Will Land In England To-day and Go Into Camp.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—The Canadian troops will be landed in England today and sent to an inland training camp.

Col. Hughes at New York.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Canada is willing and able to furnish 500,000 picked men to fight against Germany, if the British Government needs them, according to Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Canadian Minister of Militia, who sailed for England yesterday on the steamer Cedric.

Col. Hughes follows in the wake of the first Canadian contingent of about 33,000 men, who left Valcartier, Que., for England about two weeks ago.

"They are all crack shots,' he said, "and trained to the minute. When we supplement their numbers with the additional volunteers who are now in camp at Valcartier we shall have about 50,000 men at the front, and good men, too—the best in the world."

GERMAN DESTROYER SUNK.

Intrepid Submarine E9 Has Another Victory To Her Credit.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—The Admiralty announces that the British submarine E9 has returned safely after having torpedoed and sunk a German torpedo-boat destroyer off the estuary of the River Ems, between the Netherlands and East Friesland in the North Sea. An earlier report of the sinking of the destroyer, from Amsterdam, said that the vessel had struck a mine.

The British submarine is commanded by Lieut.-Commander Max E. Horton, and this was her second successful raid in German waters. Earlier she sank the German cruiser Hela in the North Sea.

The action took place at 1 o'clock Tuesday and was witnessed by the Dutch coastguards on the Dutch island Schiermonnikog, in the North Sea, off the province of Friesland.

The weather was clear and the sea calm, and the destroyer could plainly be seen cruising before the mouth of the Ems. Suddenly the observers saw a column of water rise near the bow of the destroyer. The vessel immediately turned over and sank in three minutes.

Shortly after the explosion the periscope of the submarine came above the surface of the water for a moment, but as soon as these on board the plunger saw that their torpedo had struck its mark the vessel was again submerged.

A German cruiser and torpedo boats came quickly to the rescue of the crew of the ill-fated destroyer who could be seen swimming about in the vicinity of the disaster or clinging to the wreckage of their sunken ship. As Schiermonnikog is close to the Island of Borkum, where the Germans have a naval base and within 60 miles of Heligoland and the naval arsenal at Wilhelmshaven, the dash of the submarine is considered here a particularly daring one.

A despatch to the Central News from Harwich, England, says that a rumor is in circulation there of the sinking of a German cruiser in addition to the German torpedo-boat destroyer.

GOVERNMENT AT OSTEND.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 8.—(Via London.)—The Nieuws Van Der Dag says that the Belgian Government yesterday was moved from Antwerp to Ostend.

The paper says that the German commander of the forces besieging Antwerp sent an officer carrying a white flag into the city yesterday morning to announce that the bombardment of the temporary capital would commence at 9.30 o'clock yesterday morning. Many refugees left for Holland, and at noon the Government was transferred to Ostend.

An Amsterdam despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. says: "Among the refugees who left Antwerp yesterday morning were Cardinal Mercier and the Minister of Justice and other high officials. They traveled by automobile to Flushing, from which point they proceeded to Ostend.

"More than 10,000 fugitives have arrived at Rosendeal, at which place the bombardment of Antwerp can clearly be heard."

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

With a strong effort he flung off these fancies and faced his sneering foe, who now—his red-wealed face puckered into a malicious grin—stood waiting.

Stern all at once saw the patriarch once more.

"Go, son!" cried the old man. "Now is the moment! When the drums cease, lay hold of him!"

Even as he spoke the great drums slowed their beat, then stopped.

All the advantage lay with Kamrou. Familiar with the place was he, and with the rules of this incredible contest. Everywhere about him stood crowding hundreds of his Folks, owing him their allegiance, hostile to the newcomer, the man from another world. Out of all that multitude only two hearts beat in sympathy and hope for him; only two human beings gave him their thoughts and their support—a helpless girl; a feeble, blind old man.

Kamrou stood taller, too, than did Stern, and certainly bulked heavier. He was in perfect condition, while Stern had not yet fully recovered from the fight in the Abyss, from the great change in living conditions there in the depths, and—more important still—from the harsh blow of the rock that had numbed his elbow on the beach.

His arms and hands, too, still felt the cramping of the cords that had bound him. He needed a few hours yet to work them into suppleness and perfect strength. But respite there was none.

He must fight now at once under all handicaps, or die—and in his death yield Beatrice to the barbaric passions of the chief.

Oddly enough there recurred to his mind, as he drew near the waiting, sneering Kamrou, that brave old war cry of the Greeks of Xenophon as they hurled themselves against the vastly greater army of the Persians—"Zeus Sotor kai Nike!—Zeus Saviour and victory!"

The shout burst from his lips. Forward he ran, on to the battle where either he or the barbarian must perish in the boiling pit—forward, to what? To victory—to death?

But suddenly he slipped aside; and as Stern swerved for him, made a quick leap.

With an agility, a strength and skill tigerlike and marvellous, he caught Stern round the waist, whirled him and would have dashed him toward the pit. But already the engineer's right arm was under Kamrou's left; the right had had him by the throat and Kamrou's head went sharply back till the vertebrae strained hard.

A moment they swayed, tugging, straining, panting. In the old days Stern would not for one moment have been a match for this barbaric athlete, but the long months of life close to nature had hardened him and toughened every fibre. And now a stab of joy thrilled through him as he realized that in his muscles lay at least a force to balk the savage for a little while.

To Stern came back his wrestling lore of the very long ago, the days of Harvard, in the dim, vanished past. He freed his left arm from the force-like grip of Kamrou, and, quick as lightning, got a jiu-jitsu strangle-hold.

The savage choked, gurgled, writhed; his face grew purple with stagnant blood. Then he leaped, dragging the engineer with him; they fell, rolled, twisted—and Stern's hold was broken.

A great shout rose as Kamrou struggled up and once more seized the American. He raised him like a child, and took a step, two, three, toward the infernal cauldron in the rock floor.

Stern, desperate, wrenched his oiled arms clear. A second later they had closed again about the chief's throat—the one point of attack that Stern had chosen for his best.

The barbarian faltered. Grunting, panting, he shook the engineer as a dog shakes a rat, but the hold was secure. Kamrou's great arms wrapped themselves in a formidable "body-scissors" grip; Stern felt the breath squeezed from his body.

Then suddenly the chief's oily heel slipped on the smooth-worn rock, not ten feet from the lip of the bubbling vat—and for the second time both fell.

This time Stern was atop. Over they rolled, once, twice, straining with madness. Stern's thumbs were sunk deep in the throat of the barbarian at either side. As he gouged harder, deeper, he felt the terrific pounding of the chief's jugular. Hot on his own neck panted the choking breath of Kamrou. Oh, could he only hold the grip a minute longer—even a half-minute!

But already his own breath was gone. A buzzing filled his ears; sparkling lights danced, quivering before his eyes. The blood seemed bursting his brain; far off and vague he heard the droning of the flame, the shouts and cries of the great horde of watchers.

A whiff of steam—hot, damp, terrifying—passed across his face, in which the veins were starting from the oily skin. His eyes, half closed, bulged from the sockets. He knew the pit was very close now; dully he heard its steady bubbling.

"If I go—he goes too!" the engineer swore to himself. "He'll never have—Beatrice—anyway!"

Over and over they rolled, their grips tight-locked as steel. Now Kamrou was on top, now Stern. But the chief's muscles were still strong as ever; Stern's already had begun to weaken.

Strive as he might, he could not get another hold, nor could he throw another ounce of power into that he already had. Up, up, slowly up slipped the chief's arms; Stern knew the savage meant to throttle him; and once those long, prehensile fingers reached his throat, good-bye!

Then it seemed to him a voice very far and small, was speaking to him coolly, impersonally, in a matter-of-fact way as though suggesting an experiment.

Dazed as he was, he recognized that voice—it was the voice of Dr. Harbutt, who once had taught him many a wily trick upon the mat; Harbutt, dead and gone these thousand years or more.

"Why not try the satsu-da, Stern?" the voice was saying. "Excellent, at times"

Though Stern's face was black and swollen, eyes shut and mouth all twisted awry in this titanic struggle with the ape-hold of the huge chief, yet the soul within him calmly smiled.

The satsu-da—yes, he remembered it now, strongest and best of all the jiu-jutsu feats.

A second later the "killing-blow" had fallen on the barbarian's neck, just where the swelling protuberance behind the ear marked the vital spot.

Terrible was the force of that blow, struck for the life, for the honour, of Beatrice, the salvation of the world.

Kamrou gave a strange grunt. His head fell backward. Both eyes closed; the mouth lolled open and a glairy froth began to trickle down.

The frightful grip of the long, hairy arms relaxed. Exhausted, Stern fell prone right on the slippery edge of the boiling pit.

He felt a sudden scalding dash of water, steam, and boiling spray; he heard a sudden splash, then a wild, barbarous, long-drawn howling of the massed Folk.

Lying there, spent, gasping, all but dead in the thick steam-drift of the vat, he opened his eyes.

Gamrou was nowhere to be seen.

Seemingly very distant, he heard the copper drums begin to beat once more with feverish haste.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.
THE SUN OF SPRING.

"What altitude now? Can you make out, Allan?"

"No. The aneroid's only good up to five miles. We must have made two hundred, vertically, since morning. The way the propeller takes hold and the planes climb in this condensed air is just a miracle!"

"Two passengers at that!" Beatrice answered, leaning back in her seat again. She turned to the patriarch, who, sitting in an extra place in the thoroughly overhauled and newly equipped Pauillac, was holding with nervous hands to the wire stays in front of him.

"Patience, father," she cheered him. "Two hours more—not over three, at the outside—and you shall breathe the upper air again! For the first time the sunlight shall fall upon your face!"

"The sun! The sun! Oh, is it possible?" murmured the aged man. "Verily, I had never thought to live until this day! The sun!"

Came silence between these three for a time, while the strong heart of the machine beat steadily; and the engineer, with deft and skillful hand, guided it in wide-swept spirals upward, ever up, up, up, back toward the realms of day, of life, once more; up through the fogs and clouds, away from heat and dark and mystery, toward the clear, pure, refreshing air of heaven again.

At last Stern spoke.

"Well, father," said he, "I never would have thought it; but you were right, after all. They're like so much clay in the potter's hand now, for me. I see I can do with them whatever I will."

"I was afraid some of them might object, after all, to any such proposition. It's one thing for them to accept me as boss down here, and quite another for them to consent to wholesale transplanting, such as we've got under way. But I can't see any possible reason why—with plenty of time and patience—the thing can't be accomplished all right. The main difficulty was their consent; and now we've got that, the rest is mere detail and routine work."

"Time and patience," repeated the girl. "Those are our watchwords now, boy. And we've got lots of them, haven't we?"

"Two passengers each trip," the engineer continued, more practical than she, "and three trips a week, at the most, makes six of the Folk landed on the surface weekly. In other words, it'll take—"

"No matter about that now!" interrupted Beatrice. "We've got all the time there is! Even if it takes five years, what of that What are months or even years in the life-history of the world?"

Stern kept silence again. In his mind he was revolving a hundred vital questions of shelter, feeding, acclimatisation for these men, now to be transported from a place of dark and damp and heat to the strange outer regions of the surface-world.

Plainly he saw it would be a task of unparalleled skill, delicacy, and difficult accomplishment; but his spirits rose only the higher as he faced its actual details. After all that he and Beatrice had been through since their awakening in the tower, he feared no failure to solve any questions that now might rise. By case, by keeping the Folk at first in the caves, then gradually accustoming them to stronger and brighter light, more air, more cold, he knew he could bridge the gap of centuries in a few years.

Ever adaptable, the human body would respond to changed environments. Patience and time—these would solve all!

And as for this Folk's barbarism, it mattered not. Much better such stock to rebuild from than some mild supine race of far higher culture. To fight the rough battles of life and re-establishment still ahead, the bold and warlike Merucaans were all that he could wish.

"Imagine me as a school-teacher," suddenly exclaimed the girl, laughing, "giving the children A B C and making them read: 'I see the cat'—when there aren't any cats nowadays—no tame ones, anyhow! Imagine ——"

"Sh-h-h!" cautioned Stern. "Don't waste your energies imagining things just yet. There's more than enough real work, food-getting, house-building in caves, and all that, before we ever get to schools. That's years ahead yet, education is!"

Silence again, save for the strong and ceaseless chatter of the engine, that, noisy as a score of mowing machines, flung its indomitable challenge to gravitation out into the fathomless void on every hand.

The girl was first to see that blest and wondrous thing. Hours had passed, long, weary hours; steadily the air-pressure sad sunk, the vapours thinned; but light had not yet filtered through the mists. And Allan's mind had been sore troubled thereat. He had not thought of the simple reason that they were reaching the surface at night.

But now he knew, and as she cried to him "A star!" he, too, looked and saw it, and as though he had been a little child he felt the sudden tears start to his weary eyes.

"A star!" he answered. "Oh, thank God—a star!"

It faded almost at once, as vapours shrouded it; but soon it came again, and others, many more; and now the first breath of the cool and blessed outer air was wafted to them.

Used as they had been, all these long months—for now the year had turned again and early spring was coming up the world—used to the closed and stifling atmosphere of the Abyss, its chemicalised fogs and mists, the first effect of the pure surface-air was almost intoxicating as they mounted higher, higher, toward the lip of the titanic gulf.

The patriarch, trembling with eagerness and with exhaustion—for he was very old and now his vital forces were all but spent—breathed it only with difficulty. Rapid was his respiration; on either pallid cheek a strange and vivid patch of colour showed.

Suddenly he spoke.

WOMEN WHO ARE ALWAYS TIRED

May Find Help in This Letter.

Swan Creek, Mich.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When through neglect or overwork I get run down and my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a great blessing to women, and I cannot speak too highly of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, R.F.D., No. 1, Swan Creek, Michigan.

Another Sufferer Relieved.

Hebron, Me.—"Before taking your remedies I was all run down, discouraged and had female weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used the Sanative Wash, and find today that I am an entirely new woman, ready and willing to do my housework now, where before taking your medicine it was a dread. I try to impress upon the minds of all ailing women I meet the benefits they can derive from your medicines."—Mrs. CHARLES ROWE, R. F. D., No. 1, Hebron, Maine.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Had No Power Over The Limbs

It would be easy to tell you how not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervousness. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures locomotor ataxia and derangements of heart and nerves, but it may be more satisfactory to you to read this letter. Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D. 8, Sombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could vous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbours of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I

Why He Left His House.

In the Paris Louvre is a famous art collection, valued at £800,000, which was given to the institution by M. Camille Groult. In the collection are some of the finest works of Watteau, Fragonard, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Turner and Constable. M. Groult's house on the Avenue Malakoff was so interesting that Alexandre Dumas fils once told the collector that he could not understand why he ever wanted to leave it. "I will tell you," replied M. Groult; "it is for the pleasure of entering it again."

The Culprit.

A schoolteacher complained to the principal one day that one of the big boys was flirting outrageously with the music teacher, who came in once a day. The principal spoke severely to the class and ended by saying that out of consideration for the feelings of the culprit he would not name him in public. At the close of the session, however, he was to come to the principal's office for an interview.

Yes, you guessed it. All the boys in the class showed up.

MANAGING DIRECTOR

THE FIRST SEA LORD WON HIS POSITION

Prince Louis of Battenberg Was Not Favored on Account of His Blood—Refused a Crown

Royal rank has played no part in the career of Prince Louis of Battenberg, the First Sea Lord of the Admiralty. He is a man who has won his position solely by hard work, cleverness, and ability. Forty-six years ago, at the age of fourteen, having become a naturalised British subject, he began his career by sailing round the world as a cadet on the old Arethusa, and at forty, having by that time been selected for captain's rank, he had won the distinction of being referred to by Lord Fisher (then Sir John Fisher) as "my best captain."

His organising ability, unusual mechanical inventiveness—he has devised a long signalling apparatus, also an ingenious instrument for indicating a vessel's course and speed—and his good, all-round qualities have made Prince Louis of Battenberg one of the most popular officers in the British Navy, in spite of the fact that he is a German by birth and the husband of Princess Victoria, daughter of the Grand Duke Louis IV. of Hesse.

Might Have Been a King

It is not the least distinction of Prince Louis of Battenberg that he once refused the crown of Bulgaria.

PRINCE LOUIS OF BATTENBERG

His brother, Prince Alexander, once ruled that turbulent European country, but was obliged to abdicate on the spot by a mob, the leader of which held a revolver at his head. Prince Louis interposed with such effect that a few months later the throne was offered to him, but apparently the Prince preferred the perils of the sea to the perils of Bulgaria, and decided to sail the British main.

When about two years ago Prince Louis was chosen as First Sea Lord, on the retirement of Sir Francis Bridgeman, everyone agreed that the right man had been chosen. He fully deserved the post, for it was recognised that he was a scientific sailor to whom naval warfare is a fine art. How carefully the Prince has studied the international and military situation is illustrated by an important and prophetic speech he made at the Union Jack Club.

A Prophetic Speech

"I trust," he said, "that one great truth will always be remembered—that no one Service can dispense with the other. There are people who go about saying: 'If war comes the Fleet alone is quite enough to keep anybody from coming anywhere near the shores of this island kingdom.'

"There can be no more foolish or mischievous statement. The Fleet alone could not do it, and the presence of a sufficient trained, professional army in this island at all times is quite as necessary as the other arm of the Service."

The lads on the quarter-deck have the greatest faith in the Prince. Throughout the Navy he is known by the nickname of "All Serene."

War brings out all that is worst in some men, but it also brings out the very best in others, and a best far exceeding expectations in many cases. Depths of unselfishness and self-sacrifice have been revealed in lives of which the rock bottom seemed very near the surface under the normal conditions of living. The grip of the upper encrustation of indifference and self-indulgence has been loosened in many lives and this must inevitably make for a freer flow of spiritual possibilities so long compressed. Unless the change in outlook and in attitude be the momentary effect of transient emotionalism it will be accompanied by recognition of and desire for further possibilities away from self. As self recedes from, God advances into, the vision of a life that is honestly seeking to learn its possibilities. The value of this extended hour of trial and heart-tearing anxiety lies in its latent blessing as an hour of special opportunity to offer unto Him the sacrifice He so much desires, "an humble and a contrite heart." "Lift up your hearts" will be pregnant with new meaning to many and with a new power will they cry, "We lift them up unto the Lord."—Church Life.

One Pound Notes Not New

In issuing £1 notes, the Bank of England simply revived what was once part of the currency of the realm. It is about ninety years since their issue was discontinued in England, in deference to a popular agitation. Forgeries had become extremely common, and the penalty for the offence being death, many a wretched criminal suffered for it on the gallows.

LAST AWFUL DAYS IN FORTS AT LIEGE

Graphic Account of Gallant Defence by General Leman, the Belgian Commander

This is the story of the fall of Liege in the simple graphic language of a German officer. It was told to a Dutch representative employed by a big international news bureau.

General Leman's defence of Liege combined all that is noble and all that is tragic. The commander of one fort, at the moment when the bombardment was at its heaviest, went mad and shot his own men. He was disarmed and bound.

Capola and another fort were destroyed by bombs dropped from a Zeppelin. The other forts were swept away like sand castles on the seashore before the relentless waves of our 11-inch siege guns.

As long as was possible, General Leman inspected the forts daily to see that everything was in order.

General Leman decided to hold his ground or die. Steadily his gunners were shot down and he, himself, helped to man the guns. For some time, with a mere handful of men, he held out, but nothing could have stood against the hail of shells from our guns.

When the end was inevitable, the Belgians disabled the kit, and exploded a supply of shells kept in readiness. Before this General Leman destroyed all plans, maps and papers relating to the defences. All food supplies were also destroyed.

With about one hundred men, General Leman attempted to retire to a higher fort, but we had cut off their retreat. By this time our heaviest guns were in position and well placed shells tore through the cracked and battered masonry and exploded in the main magazines. Pieces of stone and concrete 25 cubic metres in size were hurled into the air. When the dust and fumes passed away we stormed the fort across ground literally strewn with the bodies of one hundred defenders. All the men in the fort were wounded, most all were unconscious. A corporal with one arm shattered valiantly tried to drive us back by firing his rifle at us.

Buried beneath the debris and pinned beneath a massive beam we found General Leman. With a gentleness and care which showed our respect for the man who had resisted us so valiantly and stubbornly, our infantryman released the General's limp form and carried him away. We thought him dead, but he recovered consciousness, and looking around, said, "Put in the despatches that I was unconscious." We brought him to our commander, General Von Emmich, and the generals saluted. We tried to speak words of comfort to the old General, but he was headless."

"I was unconscious, be sure to put that in your despatches," and more he would not say. Extending his hand, our commander said: 'General, you have fought gallantly and nobly held your forts.'"

"General Leman replied: 'I thank you, our troops have lived up to their reputations.'"

With a smile, he added, "War is not like manoeuvres." He referred to the fact that General Von Emmich was with General Leman during the last Belgian manoeuvres. Then unbuckling his sword, General Leman tendered it to General Von Emmich.

"No," replied the German commander with a bow, "Keep your sword. To have crossed swords with you is a great honor."

DOGS DRAW LIGHT GUNS

After Hauling Carts in Peace They Find Place in Battle Line

All who have visited Brussels must have been greatly struck with its dogs. For the dog is used as a worker in Belgium, and he is part and parcel of the day's toil. There are the draught dogs of the milk and vegetable sellers. Now many are being used in the Belgian army for the purpose of pulling light machine guns and appliances associated with the army medical corps.

The draught dog of Belgium is a fine and husky fellow. He is an offshoot of the Danish dog, his strength is considerable and his pace is good. He is firm on his feet and his pads are so hard, tough, and tried that he is free from foot weariness, and when there is no work going he lies down in his harness between the shafts of the two-wheel cart and dozes off with his big and sensible head between his forefeet. Awaks he either barks his greetings to a passing friend or greets an old enemy with a savage salute.

At a conference held in connection with the application to the British Board of Trade for permission to dredge St. Ives Bay for tin, it was stated that there was in the bay at present $100,000,000 worth of tin.

MADE REPUTATION IN JAPANESE WAR

General Rennenkampf Proved Himself an Able Leader in Campaign of Many Disasters

One of the heroes of the Russo-Japanese war is out to make another reputation in the present conflict. He is Lieutenant General Rennenkampf, who, as commander of a Russian division, was a constant obstacle to the Japanese in that war.

Rennenkampf played a brilliant part in Manchuria and was promoted from Major-General to Lieutenant-General and otherwise honored during that war. He commanded a cavalry division and a brigade of infantry under Count Keller, who confronted Gen. Kuroki's army on the march to Liao-yang.

Rennenkampf showed himself a determined, energetic, and enterprising commander and was a perpetual thorn in the side of the Japanese and was Kuropatkin's right arm until the battle of Mukden, where Keller was killed and Rennenkampf was wounded.

MAJOR-GENERAL RENNENKAMPF

As a consequence, he was not able to take part in the battle of Liao-yang.

The high esteem in which he was held was illustrated in the battle of Mukden, when he was hastily shifted from the extreme right of the Russian forces to the extreme left, owing to the inability of Gen. Alexiev, commanding in that quarter, to check the Japanese army under Gen. Kawamura.

Rennenkampf speedily brought Kawamura to a halt, inflicting very severe losses, and the Japanese were unable afterward to dislodge him.

It is doubtful if any other Russian wrung such an enhanced reputation from that disastrous war as did Gen. Rennenkampf.

WHAT SEA POWER HAS DONE

It was sea power which induced the Assyrians and Babylonians to subjugate Tyre. It was sea power which made King Solomon seek an alliance with Hiram, of Tyre. It was sea power which made the Medes and Persians conquer Phoenicia. It was sea power which finally saved Greece from the power of Aerxes in the battle of Salamis.

It was sea power which was won from Carthage by Rome in the Battle of the Aegates Islands, B.C. 241, and forced Hannibal to invade Rome by land instead of by sea to meet his defeat in the Battle of the Metaurus. It was sea power which carried the Scipeons westward across Africa, and gave them Spain, Sicily, and a large part of Italy.

It was sea power which made the Crusades possible, and established the Christian Kingdom of Jerusalem in the heart of the Moslem world for a hundred years. It was sea power preserved the Byzantine Empire at Constantinople for a thousand years. It was sea power which made the Italian cities of Venice, Genoa, and Pisa as powerful as empires. It was sea power which carried the Turks to the conquest of a great part of Europe, and which, in their defeat at Lepanto in 1571 by the Venetian and Spanish navies under Don John of Austria, turned back the oncoming wave of their conquering arms.

It was sea power which made the Pacific a Spanish lake, and lifted Spain to her undisputed rule of the world—undisputed until sea power in the form of the little British navy sent the Spanish Armada to the bottom, and won a world. It was sea power which waged the wars between the English and Dutch for dominion over the waves—in which England won. And sea power has made England the arbiter of Europe's destinies to this day.

This war will settle the sea power of the future—and the sea power of to-day will settle this war.

FIRTH ON CANADA

Mr Algernon Firth, London, referring to Canada, said:" It is the fashion to say Canada is going to the dogs, but with that I do not agree. The possibilities of the country are unlimited. The sums they are receiving for crops, and minerals must enable them very soon to discharge any obligations, and the need of the rest of the world for all the products Canada can provide, even at high prices, justifies the hope that British investors will not close their pockets too tightly."

Their Lime-juice Ration

Whenever possible British soldiers on active service are served with a weekly ration of lime-juice, to prevent scurvy. It is the raw material, sour enough to turn the edge of a cold chisel. Treacle and golden syrup are also excellent for preventing men from suffering from the effects of a more or less continual diet of tinned meat and dried or tinned vegetables.

FIXING THE BLAME

When historians look back upon this time when the world went mad and mighty nations made up of people supposed to be rational permitted their remorseless war lords to herd them like sheep and drive them to the shambles, their first concern will be to fix the responsibility for the outbreak. They will not fail to remark that a single word from Germany would have prevented the Austrian ultimatum to Servia, or would have induced the dual monarchy to accept the Servian concessions as sufficient. That word was not forthcoming, as they will note. Germany was as ready for the conflict as she could ever expect to be. She had just completed her Kiel canal. She had just increased her army to a prodigious total by a special war tax in time of peace, a tax which she could never expect to repeat until war had begun. She had made all possible financial preparation for the conflict and her storehouses were bursting with a two years' supply of war munitions and necessities. In fine, the Kaiser, after twenty years of herculean effort, was ready for the test. He had strained the national resources to the uttermost, was as ready as he could ever hope to be, and gave the word to fire at a time when Great Britain seemed to have a rebellion on her hands which would keep her out of the conflict.—Rochester Post Express.

Many Races in Austria

The population of Austria embraces a greater number of races, distinct in origin and language, than that of any other European country except Russia. The Slavs are the most numerous race, amounting to nearly 43 per cent. of the whole population. They are, however, split up into a number of peoples or tribes, differing greatly in language, religion, culture, and manners, so that their seeming preponderance in the empire is thus lost.

Servians Good Fighters

The quality of the Servian army stands very high. The men are drawn from a hardy peasant class, and are used to hardships and fatigue. Though the majority are illiterate, they are quite intelligent, and among them are a number of leading spirits who, thanks to warlike experiences with the roving bands which infest the Balkans, have been men of war from their youth up.

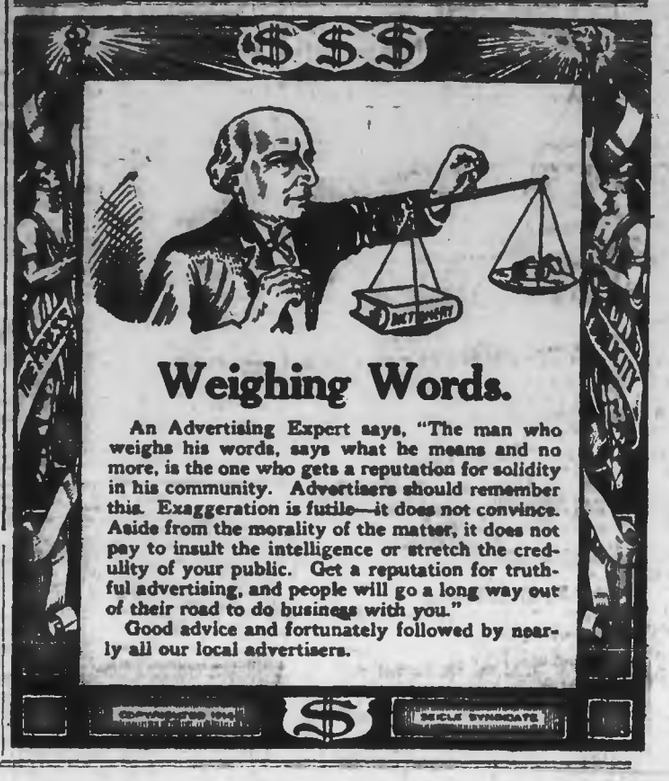
Horses For the War

In war the horse is a very valuable adjunct. If it were not so the demand for the animals would not be so great, and British owners, carters, grooms, and horse keepers generally have felt the wrench of parting with a favorite horse. In one instance in the West Midlands a groom tried to persuade the officials that the two horses to which he was greatly attached were blind, and therefore could not be of any service. He was unable to work off the little ruse. The parting between the grooms and the horses was quite pathetic. In another case a horse seemed to quite understand there was to be a separation, and threw out its forefeet and refused to budge an inch. It was almost by force that it was got to the railway station. Many of the owners and grooms went to see their favorite steeds off.

DUPED GERMANS.

Private E. Harkness, Royal Irish Regiment, to his mother in Dublin:

"There's plenty of hard fighting coming our way these days, and though we suffer cruelly once in a while, we always give them something to let them know that we have not lost our fighting powers in "Paddy's land," whatever else we may have lost. You could not help laughing at some of the tales the German prisoners have about us. When they knew they had been captured by an Irish regiment they wanted to know how it was we were not at home in the civil war that was going on. Says I to one of them that came off with that blarney in his queer English: "This is the only war we know, or want to know about for the time being, and there's mightily little that is civil about it or the way you are behaving yourselves."



One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices plied with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

Who, among our manufacturers, is willing to be left out in the cold? Who, among such Firms, will fail to Advertise?

How to Have the Best Cough Remedy and Save $2 by Making It at Home

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. Two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50—a clear saving of nearly $2. Full directions with Pinex. It keeps perfectly and tastes good.

It takes hold of the usual cough or chest cold at once and conquers it in 24 hours. Splendid for whooping cough, bronchitis and winter coughs.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

THE NEEDED UTENSIL.

The scene is a village on the outskirts of Mulhausen. A lieutenant of German scouts dashes up to the door of the only inn in the village, posts men at the doorway and, entering, seats himself at a deal table.

He draws his sabre and places it on the table at his side and orders food.

The village waiter is equal to the occasion. He goes to an outhouse and fetches a hay fork and places it at the other side of the visitor.

"Stop! What does this mean?" roars the lieutenant furiously.

"Why," said the waiter innocently, pointing to the sabre, "I thought that was your knife, so I brought you a fork to match."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Orange Beetle

Or the Story of the Search For a Supposedly Rare Orchid of South America

By CLARISSA [illegible]KIE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1913.

Jack Hedges was not a zoologist, yet he had traveled thousands of miles in search of the orange beetle. The finding of it meant a fortune for him as well as the winning of the girl he loved. Not that Dorothy's answer would be influenced by the turn of fortune's wheel, only it happened that Dorothy was the daughter of a rich man, and Jack was a poor young landscape gardener who had not yet received his first big commission.

It was Chalmers who had sent him on this strange quest for the orange beetle. "Jack, old man," Chalmers had said, "I've got a commission for you that will knock the spots out of the landscape business. My uncle, Cassius Chalmers, the banker, you know, is batty about orchids—has the finest collection in the country, so he says. Now, there's another old chap, a crony of his, who also has the finest collection. Understand? As I understand it, the collections are about neck and neck as to value. They both lack one very rare specimen, which they have been unable to obtain, although they both have trained orchid hunters down along the Amazon now. My uncle has declared he will give $10,000 and pay all expenses to the man who brings him back the orchid he's after. Now, there's a chance for you. You've heard of amateurs' luck, haven't you?"

"You're joking," said Jack calmly.

"Never. Come with me and I'll introduce you to Uncle Cassius, the battiest old gentleman in New York where orchids are concerned," said Chalmers, rising, and because he had nothing in particular to do that afternoon Jack went with him and soon was deeply interested in the long talk with Mr. Chalmers, the banker, which followed.

"My man is not only looking for the orange beetle, but he's looking for a dozen other sorts at the same time.

"MAY DOROTHY COME WITH ME?"

and I want you to go and concentrate your search on that one object—see? I'll raise that prize money to twenty thousand if you find it. I can tell you just where to go and give you all directions concerning preparations for the journey, and so forth. It's an easy way to earn the money, and it will give you a start in your business. What do you say?"

"I'll think it over," said Jack cautiously.

He did think it over with the result that he closed his office for a year and made preparation to depart upon this special mission for Cassius Chalmers. As for Dorothy Payton, he did not exact her promise to wait for him, but he did say he would come back to ask her for an answer when the year was up. He could not tell her the secret of his mission, but he hinted at the little fortune that might be his if he was successful and that would enable him to approach her father.

He knew that the orange beetle was not the name of the orchid he was to seek. That, too, was orange tinted and of most peculiar form. The orange beetle would prove his clew to the presence of the coveted orchid. Chalmers had said the beetle was three inches in length and of horrible appearance, though quite harmless. Wherever the precious orchid grew, in its close vicinity might be found the orange beetle.

His guides were Carajonos Indians from one of the hill tribes, and he conversed with them in a broken mixture of bad Spanish and elaborate gesticulations. Never a day passed but that he came upon strange specimens of parasitic plants swaying aloft on some towering tree trunk far above his reach, and his strong glasses enabled him to study them at close range, and, so far as his book taught knowledge went, there was nothing new that he might take to Cassius Chalmers.

At last one day they made a noonday landing in a quiet lagoon where long creepers reached down to brush their faces as the canoe grounded against the muddy shore.

While the guides prepared a simple meal of coffee and cassava cakes Jack took his glasses and splashed through the spongy morass into an open space where tall trees towered above the forest as if seeking a purer air than that afforded below.

Suddenly he leaped backward, and he nearly fell. Quickly recovering himself, he leaned over and scanned the uncanny form of the orange beetle. At last he was within reach of the fortune for which he had risked so much.

About three inches long, with closely folded glossy wings, all of a deep orange tint, the insect jerked a small sticky black head and with a slow, awkward gait crawled slickly over the damp ground, avoiding the wet spots and choosing a dry leaf or bit of fallen twig for its path.

Jack followed patiently until his way was stopped by the massive trunk of a huge sycamore up which the beetle was making its laborious way. Jack threw back his head and looked upward among the twisted limbs at the top of the tree and then brought his gaze slowly downward until his eyes rested on the glowing mass of some parasitic blossom. This was the orange orchid.

Two days afterward he was speeding down the river again, the orange orchids confined in a wicker cage stuffed with rotting vegetation; the orange beetle, quietly chloroformed, sleeping its last sleep in an air tight tin box. Six weeks later he was leaving South America behind, and there was no regret in his heart as he set his face toward the north.

On the steamer he made several acquaintances, among them a renowned orchid hunter. In the course of conversation he mentioned the object of his search, and after an incredulous stare the orchid hunter, Jackson by name, spoke bluntly:

"Who sent you on such a fool's errand?"

"Fool's errand!" stuttered Jack. "Surely I was successful in my quest. I found what I went for. What do you mean, sir?"

"Pardon my abruptness, Mr. Hedges, I was surprised," said the other courteously. "The orchid you have described to me is a very common variety and is hardly worth a place in any collection."

"How about the orange beetle?" demanded Jack, chagrined. "I could not have mistaken the variety of orchid, for the beetle was in one of the flower cups when I picked it from the tree. By Jove!, if I've made a mess of this expedition after all!"— He paused tragically.

Jackson expressed a desire to see the orchid, and the wicker cage was brought and the exotic displayed, to the expert's suppressed amusement. "Deuced queer the old boy's sending you off after that," he muttered after reading the copious notes with which Cassius Chalmers had filled Jack's notebook. "Any reason for his wanting to get you out of the way?"

Jack shook his head hopelessly. "Search me!" he exploded. "A year out of my life—all for nothing, and not a word from"— He bit off Dorothy's name and walked away to conceal his anger and mortification.

At last when they were in the port of New York Jack felt his confidence returning. While he was now convinced that Cassius Chalmers had sent him on a wild goose chase (as well as a beetle hunt), he was determined to press that eccentric millionaire for some explanation of the whole matter. Therefore his first errand on landing was to go straight to the office of Cassius Chalmers.

There bitter disappointment awaited him. Cassius Chalmers had been dead for two months, and his estate had not only been settled, but his heir, the nephew whom Jack knew, had sailed for a voyage around the world. The lawyers knew nothing whatever about the matter save that the collection of orchids had been sold at auction and, it was believed, had been scattered among various collectors.

When he presented himself before Dorothy Payton Jack threw out his hands with a hopeless gesture. "Failed!" he said bitterly. And then into her sympathetic ear he poured the story of the past year. "I've got to begin at the bottom and start over again," he concluded, "and, hang it all, Dorothy, I can't ask you what I wanted to!"

"I shall ask you, then," said Dorothy bravely, and when she had convinced him of her willingness to share his struggles she confessed that old Cassius Chalmers had evidently sent Jack away to get rid of a dangerous rival, for both uncle and nephew had courted Dorothy without the slightest encouragement until death had removed one and her stern repulse had sent the other to the uttermost ends of the earth.

"Show dad the orange beetle. He's quite a 'bugologist,'" urged Dorothy after awhile. And when Jack had approached Mr. Payton and retold his story that genial financier examined the orange beetle with great interest. "I know a man who has a standing offer out of $15,000 for that specimen," he said calmly. "Will you sell?"

"Sell!" yelled Jack. "I'd sell it for 30 cents. I've wasted a year of my life over that thing!"

"Never!" returned Mr. Payton emphatically. "You didn't find out how much pluck and perseverance you had till you set out to search for that orchid. Whenever you feel down in the mouth and distrust your own courage just come up here and look in my collection and survey that orange beetle."

"May Dorothy come with me?" asked Jack daringly.

Mr. Payton smiled indulgently at his daughter and clapped a hand on Jack's shoulder. "She said some time ago she was going to marry you, so I suppose you'll have to bring her along."

"Oh, dad!" cried Dorothy, really tearful.

But her father had escaped from the room.

Much Pain From Kidney Disease

Kidney derangements are often associated with disorders of the liver and bowels, and under these conditions ordinary kidney medicines usually fail to effect cure. It is because of their unique, combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so generally successful, even in the most complicated cases.

Mr. Emanuel Bernard, farmer, St. Paul's, Kent County, N.B., writes:—"About eighteen years ago my wife was bad with kidney disease, and suffered greatly from headaches, pains in bowels and stomach, and her heart was affected. For a year she was treated by her doctor, with no apparent benefit. She then used five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with most satisfactory results. This gave us such a good opinion of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills that we always keep them in the house to be used for all derangements of the kidneys, liver and bowels." TRAMP STEAMERS.

Why are some ships dubbed "tramps"?

Well, they are tramps just as some individuals are tramps. They go here and there, just as circumstances may dictate looking for employment.

But there is this difference—the tramp we meet on our roads says he is looking for work, but often enough he is secretly praying very hard that he may not find it. The ocean tramp simply has to find it. If she doesn't there is trouble. Here, although some ocean tramps are dishevelled in appearance, by far the greater proportion of them have not the slightest suggestion about them of the untidiness of the tramp on which the policeman has to keep such a wary eye.

As a matter of fact many modern cargo boats are of huge dimensions, bearing comparison with the liners which quite a few years ago were regarded as prodigies of size. A tramp of six thousand tons is quite an ordinary vessel in regard to its dimensions. There are many much larger, and, of course, many much smaller.

They go anywhere. Where there is cargo to be found there is also the ocean tramp. She is bound to no particular port of call. She may be in the Orient one voyage, and in a short time may be nosing round the ports of, say, South America. Then freights from Mexican and American ports may show greater profit, and forthwith our tramp is off on a series of voyages between the Old and the New Worlds, until perhaps more profitable work offers elsewhere.

Throwing the Dart.

In widely differing communities—Venice and Cork — there obtains a curious ceremony, that of throwing the dart. In the first case this is an ancient custom signifying the marriage of the Adriatic. Every year, since 1177, on Ascension day, Venice has been made the bride of the sea, and the throwing of the dart is a picturesque feature of a picturesque ceremony.

Equally interesting are the circumstances attaching to the similar functions on the first Thursday of September in Cork harbor, Ireland. By virtue of a clause in the city charter the mayor of Cork is constituted admiral of the port. Every three years he must evidence his jurisdiction by throwing a dart into the sea.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the mayor, the town council, all the civic officers and the band of the Cork Civil Artillery embark on a vessel and proceed to a point between Poor Head and Cork Head, which is held to be the maritime boundary of the borough. The mayor dons his official robes, and attended by the mace and sword bearer, the city treasurer and the town clerk, likewise wearing their official robes goes to the prow of the vessel and launches into the sea a dart made of mahogany tipped and winged with bronze, in this way asserting his authority as lord high admiral of the port.

First Coined Money.

To Lydia, the industrial power of the ancient world, belongs the honor of having issued the first coined money. The earliest known coins were stamped on one side with a lion's head or the figure of a king with bow and quiver. So far as we know the first coinage of gold dates from King Croesus of Lydia. It is impossible to say just what form the earliest money (medium of exchange) took. Probably it was cattle, from which our word pecuniary comes.

PROGRESS IS SLOW.

Germans Fighting Hard in Marshes of Eastern Prussia.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 8.—The Russian general staff yesterday issued the following statement:

"On the East Prussian frontier the Germans, having brought reinforcements from Koenigsberg, continue to oppose tenacious resistance upon battlefront of Vladislavoff and Ratchka, profiting by the defiles, lakes and marshes in the region of Tchernenganja.

"Beyond the Vistula advance guard battles have occurred in the region of Opatow and Sandomir.

"In the Carpathians, west of the River Sanok an Austrian detachment was defeated and machine guns and prisoners captured.

"At Saliva, 20 kilometres from the city of Munkatch, we have captured an artillery park and numerous convoys."

GERMANS BOSS ARMY.

Austrian Emperor Not Pleased With Action of Kaiser's Staff.

MILAN, Oct. 8.—(Via Paris.)—A despatch from Vienna to The Corriere della Serra, confirms a previous report that the Austrian army in Galicia has been placed under the control of the German staff, despite the opposition of Emperor Francis Joseph.

The despatch adds that Maj.-Gen. Conrad, chief of the Austrian general staff, has virtually been deprived of all power on account of his alleged condition, resulting from the death of his son, who was killed in action.

Dealing with the removal of Gen. Auffenberg from his command the correspondent asserts this action was taken ostensibly because of the general's ill-health, but that in reality it was due to his move on Lublin, which was considered an ominous mistake, and responsible in great part for the Austrian defeat.

Japs Occupy Chinan.

PEKIN, Oct. 8.—According to advices received here, the railroad station at Chinan, in Shantung Province, west of Kiaochow, has been occupied by 30 Japanese soldiers. One hundred and fifty more are expected today.

A despatch received here by the Associated Press from Chinan says no trains are running over the Shantung Railroad. The rolling stock has been mostly collected at Chinan.

Germans from along the Jihu, including women and children, have taken refuge in Chinan.

Russians Near Budapest.

BORDEAUX, Oct. 8.—A message from Petrograd, via Rome, says that the Russian have occupied Marmaros Gulget after annihilating an Austrian corps, following a battle of six days' duration.

A message from Budapest states that the Russians are now pursuing the offensive, but are six hours by railway from Budapest.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

BRITAIN WAITED.

LONDON, Oct. 7. — The official press bureau last night issued a statement declaring to be "absolutely untrue" the allegations made by Prof. Harnack and other prominent Germans that Great Britain had stored quantities of ammunition at the French fortress of Maubeuge before the outbreak of the war, which the Germans claimed was evidence that she intended to violate the neutrality of Belgium. The statement adds:

"No decision to send British forces abroad was taken till after Germany had violated Belgian neutrality and Belgium had appealed for assistance. No British ammunition or stores had been placed at Maubeuge before these events. Any British ammunition or stores found at Maubeuge were sent there after and no before the outbreak of the war and the violation of Belgian territory by Germany."

Spain Favors Neutrality.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7—The Spanish Ambassador, Senor Riano, yesterday issued a statement in which he said the trend of public opinion in Spain is overwhelmingly in favor of neutrality. He declares that recent copies of Spanish newspapers show that telegrams of enquiry were sent to leading Spaniards in all parts of the kingdom, who decided almost unanimously for neutrality.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

If you care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff; you cannot have pretty, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy or too oily get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine at any drug store or toilet counter; apply a little as directed and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually—why not now?

Outlook Is Not Serious.

LONDON, Oct. 8. — David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a speech yesterday to a deputation of the workers' national committee, said if was not at all sure that they were not premature in anticipating a very considerable amount of unemployment as the war progressed. The demands on the industries in this country, the Chancellor said, would be enormous, but in the cotton trade the distress undoubtedly would be severe. This was the only trade, he added, which had completely broken down so far.

Anti-German League Formed.

PARIS, Oct. 8.—For the purpose of exterminating German thought, commerce and science, an organization has been founded at Marseilles, known as the Anti-German League, which hopes to make it impossible for a German to live in France, either now or after the war. It is planned to completely ostracize the Germanic race.

Pillagers Sentenced To Death.

PARIS, Oct. 8.—Charged with pillaging houses between Chantilly and Senlis, four captured German soldiers were sentenced yesterday by a drum head court-martial. Jewelry, money and watches were found in their possession. Two of the men were sentenced to death, one to hard labor for life and the fourth to ten years' imprisonment.

Two of the men pleaded that their actions were in accordance with an actual official order, and another said: "If I had not taken the things, my officers would."

Another Lie Nailed.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 8.—(Via London.)—An official statement declares to be "absolutely without foundation" the report from Vienna that a formidable Russian anti-movement was in progress in Persia, and that the Russians had been defeated in a battle there. It is asserted that only insignificant skirmishes with brigands from Turkey have taken place, and that the brigands were driven across the frontier.

Pope's First Encyclical.

PARIS, Oct. 8.—The Echo de Paris is in receipt of a despatch from Rome which declares that Benedict XV. will issue his first encyclical letter on All Saints Day, Nov. 1. It is to follow the general form set by Leo XIII. and Cardinal Rampolla, and it is stated will contain an allusion to the war.

HOME OF THE BIG TREES.

Forest Giants in the Sequoia and General Grant National Parks.

The Sequoia and General Grant National parks, the home of the big trees, are situated in Tulare and Fresno counties, Cal., and are celebrated mainly for the great groves of the big trees which are scattered through them. Sequoia National park may be reached from Visalia, thence by way of electric railway to Lemon cove, thence forty miles by stage or private conveyance to Camp Sierra, in the park. General Grant National park can be best reached from Hanger, thence by automobile, stage or private conveyance, a distance of forty-six miles to the park.

The streams and lakes in these parks afford splendid trout fishing, boating and bathing. The waters are all pure and fit to drink. The forests contain the largest, oldest, tallest and most valuable trees in the world. Aside from the giant Sequoia, there are other forests of pine, fir, cedar and many deciduous trees that are truly royal. There are many shrubs, wild flowers, ferns and mosses of superb beauty, while frolicking wild animals and beautiful song birds are another enjoyable feature of the parks.

In four of the groves certain trees within them have been named, while in all other groves they have not. The General Sherman tree was discovered by James Wolverton, a hunter and trapper, on Aug. 7, 1879, at which time he named the tree in honor of General Sherman, under whom he had served during the war. The General Grant tree was named by Mrs. Lucretia P. Baker, who was a member of the party which camped near the tree in August, 1867. This tree has a height of 264 feet and a base diameter of thirty-five feet.

EXPECTATION OF LIFE.

Years One May Count Upon Living at Any Given Age.

No statistics have been calculated with greater care than the tables which give the exact expectation of life for men and women at various ages. These mortality tables are officially accepted by the various states in the United States, and from them the life insurance companies compute their rates of insurance. They are as accurate as the most carefully gathered figures can make them.

At ten years of age the expectation of life is 48.72 years. When one has reached the age of twenty the chances are much improved, and there is still an expectation of 42.20 years before one. At the age of twenty-five the average has improved, and there are still some thirty-nine years ahead.

For the normal man or woman thirty years of age the average length of life is sixty-five years. A person thirty-five years old may count, according to these tables, on thirty-two years more.

As each milestone is passed the prospect brightens. Thus at the age of forty the prospect is for nearly twenty-nine years more, and at forty-five there is an expectation of twenty-five more years.

By the fiftieth year the expectation is about twenty-one years, and in the fifty-fifth year it is nearly eighteen more. A man of sixty may look forward with some confidence to fifteen more years of life, and this increases so that at seventy years the prospect is eight years. On having successfully passed the eightieth year there is an expectation of about five years.—Exchange.

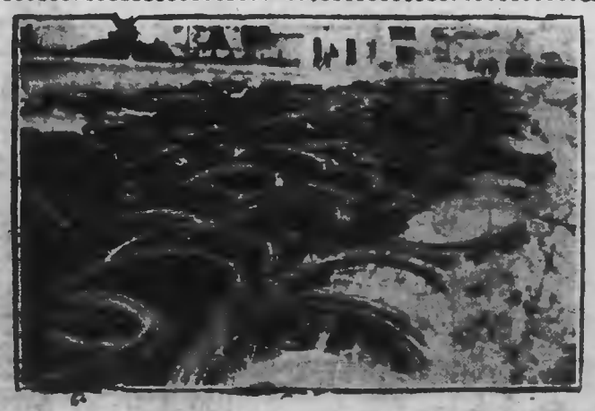
Of Great Price.

The lion had been teased and prodded by an ill conditioned keeper until his patience was quite spent. The enraged beast leaped upon the fellow, knocked him down and fetched him such a blow on the head that his skull was crushed like an eggshell.

"That means the end of you, your majesty," sniggered the jackal in the next cage.

"It would, old night prowler, but I were a mere man," replied the lion, speaking in dignity now, "but you forget that I cost $5,000."

The surviving keepers came, soothed the costly creature with a quarter of fresh beef and hastily removed the body of their comrade from the cage.—New York Post.



PROTECTION OF GERMAN TRENCHES.—The Germans have found a new plan for the protection of their soldiers in trenches. Coils of wire are placed before the trenches and when a shell falls, they prevent the fragments of the shell from spreading to the trenches.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Oct. 5.—Railway earnings may be taken as a fair indication of the condition of business in a big country such as Canada where transportation demands for so much. Judging of business on this basis does not offer much encouragement. The Canadian Pacific Railway, for instance, state that in August their revenues fell off $697,85, or 15.1 per cent. Wholesale merchants, too, state that their volume of business is diminishing. This weakness is due to a falling off in the city trade. Country trade is normal, except in some sections of the West.

Orchard men are becoming more optimistic as to the prospects of marketing their fruit. Exports from the port of Montreal of this year's crop have exceeded exports to the same date last year by several thousand barrels. Red apples are meeting with a fair demand at $4 to $4.25 on the other side, with green apples a little better than half as much. Grapes during the week have almost invariably been on the down grade, and the same is true of cattle.

WHEAT

Wheat has suffered a sharp falling away. Estimates of the United States surplus, which will be a record one, have been partly responsible. Prices have been too high for an export business, and when this is coupled with a slack demand from local millers quotations must go down. No. 1 Northern is quoted $1.15; No. 2, $1.12½; new crop, No. 1 nom; Ontario wheat, $1.04 to $1.05. Some dealers declare they will not pay over $1 for Ontario wheat.

COARSE GRAINS

Oats have slumped decidedly, barley quotations are uneasy and corn is down a trifle. Rye alone shows a small increase. Quotations: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 56c; No. 3 43c; Ontario oats, new 40c to 46c; corn, 81c to 82c; peas, $1.10 to $1.15; barley, malting, 63c to 67c; rye 70c to 80c; Montreal dealers quote: Oats, C.W. No. 2 42c to 43c; No. 3, 41c; corn, 84c to 85c; barley, malting, 80c to 85c; Manitoba barley, 75c; peas, $1.75 to $2; rye, 80c to 85c.

MILL FEEDS

Quotations here are steady: Bran, $22 to $25; shorts, $25 to $27; middlings, $28 to $30; feed flour, $30 to $32. At Montreal demand is good at a lower quotation: Bran, $24 to $25; shorts, $26 to $27; middlings, $29 to $30; feed flour, $30 to $32.

HAY AND STRAW

Quotations on this market are steady: No. 1 baled hay, $15 to $16; No. 2, $13.50 to $14; No. 3, $11 to $12; baled straw, $7 to $8.50. At Montreal the Government is still buying hay, and this has a strength ening effect on the market. Quotations are irregular but about as follows: No 1, $19.50 to $20; No. 2, $17.50 to $19; No. 3 $15 to $16.

POTATOES AND BEANS

Potatoes are in ever supply both here and in Montreal. This market is quoting Ontario's at 60c to 65c in car lots and New Brunswick's, 60c to 65c. On the Montreal market New Brunswick's bring 60c a bag and local potatoes about the same.

Beans here are quoted: Primes, $2.20 to $2; hand picked, $2 to $2.25. Montreal quotations: Hand picked, $2.10; one-pound pickers, $2; three-pound pickers, $2.60.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Eggs have advanced a trifle on reduced receipts. Wholesalers quote to the trade as follows: New laid in cartons 30c to 35c dozen, 30c to 31c; fresh, 25c to 27c; storage, 25c to 26c. The price in the country ranges from 24c to 25c. The Montreal market quotes selects at 32c; straight receipts, 24c; new laids, 33c.

Quotations on poultry now are: Live spring chickens, 11c to 13c; old fowl, 8c to 10c; ducks, 8c to 10c; geese, 8c to 9c; turkeys, 13c to 15c.

HIDES AND WOOL

Quotations: Hides cured, 15½c to 15¾c per cured, 14½c to 15c; green 13½c to 14c; horse hides, $4 to $4.50; horse hair 30c to 35c; calf skins, 12c to 14½c; deakins 80c to $1.20; lamb skins, 35c to 60c; sheep skins, $1.10 to $1.75.

Coarse wool is quoted 18c to 20c unwashed; fine, 20c to 22c; washed wool, rejects, 22c to 24c; coarse, 27c to 28c; fine, 28c to 30c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

The butter market continues decidedly quiet. There is almost an entire absence of outside demand. Local business is of a hand-to-mouth nature. Receipts from Western Canada have not been of the highest quality, but they meet a certain demand and interfere to that extent with the local market for Eastern butter. It is said that New Zealand butter can be laid down at the coast at a lower rate than Eastern Canada can supply it for. On the Toronto market the quotations to the trade are: Creamery prints, fresh made, 28c to 29c; separator prints, 26c to 27c; dairy prints, 24c to 25c; bakers, 20c to 22c.

The feeling in the cheese market on the other hand is stronger. There is quite a lively demand from the other side, and shipments have increased considerably as ocean freight room is more plentiful. Demand from the North-West is expected to be less than last year. Quotations at country boards are given elsewhere.

LIVE STOCK

October is the month when many farmers plan to clean out their herds before stabling. The heavy run of rather poorly finished cattle contained all through last week, and from first to last values were down $1.00. Good cattle a great sub the market. Decreases amounting to fully 50c a cwt. were noted in the case of open choice animals. This condition of the market is common all over America, and only greatly decreased receipts will strengthen quotations, as packers are filled up and distillers have about as many feeders and purchases as they want.

Quotations are about as follows: Choice heavy steers, $8.40 to $9; handy steers, $8 to $8.40; good butcher steers $7.75 to $8.25; com. to med., $6.75 to $7.75; heifers, $7 to $8.25; choice cows, $6.75 to $7.50; com. to good, $5 to $6.75; butcher bulls, $6 to $7.25; stockers, $5.50 to $7.25; canners and cutters, $3.50 to $5.

Milkers are moving readily at $75 to $105 for choice; $60 to $70 for com. to med.; and $50 to $60 for springers. Calves are a strong feature of the market at $5 to $11.

Mutton is dull. Spring lambs, $6 to $7.65; yearling lambs, $7 to $7.90; buck lambs, $5.25 to $6.75; light ewes $6.25 to $6.75; heavy sheep and bucks $4 to $4.25; culls, $1 to $4.

Hogs are a trifle down, packers quoting $8.75 f.o.b. country points.

The Montreal market has suffered a general decline of 50c a cwt. Choice cattle, $7.40 to $7.75; com. to good, $5 to $7.25; choice cows, $6 to $6.50; com. to good, $4.50 to $5.75; butcher bulls, $4 to $7; canners, $3.25 to $4.50; choice milkers run at $75 to $90 and down to $30; small meats are dull; Lambs, $6 to $7; ewes, $4.25 to $4.75; bucks and culls $4 to $4.25.

A Good Impression.

First impressions are tenacious. The customer who gets an unpleasant impression on his first visit to a store, is not likely to be a permanent customer. On the contrary, a favorable first impression will insure a steady patronage.

First impressions are often obtained from a firm's advertising, even before the store is visited. A frank, straightforward statement of values and advantages, will create an impression of fair dealing, and bring the customer to the store in a receptive state of mind.

Our advice to merchants is to give careful thought to their advertising and to advertise regularly.

ANTWERP SUFFERING TERRIBLE BOMBARDMENT

THE NON-COMBATANTS FLEEING FROM THE CITY

THE SITUATION IN FRANCE SATISFACTORY TO ALLIES

TERRIBLE SUFFERING IN ANTWERP AS GERMAN SHELLS DROP ON THE CITY

Forts Are Mere Holes in the Ground, Wiped Out of Existence by Terrific Fire From the Huge German Siege Guns---Garrisons Perish With Their Fortresses--All Villages in the Neighbourhood Are in Flames.

REFUGEES HURRYING FROM CITY

Special to The Examiner.

AMSTERDAM, October 8—With her outer ring of fortifications broken and with every village within miles of the city in flames, Antwerp continued to-day to essay the fiercest resistance to the besieging Germans. The city itself, according to trustworthy advices reaching here, was still intact at noon. The Germans were bombarding both the city and the fortifications. Lierre and Contich were practically destroyed yesterday. The shells from the German batteries set fire to the towns and block after block of houses with no one to attempt to check the progress of the flames. Forts Waelheim and Wavre are now nothing but holes in the earth; they have been simply smothered out of existence by the terrible shell fire of the German big guns. Their garrisons perished at their posts of duty. The German artillery is also reported to have proved terribly destructive near Vesaberg.

The villages Hove, Pere-cell and Vieux Dieux have all suffered heavily. They are deserted and many of their houses, especially the poorly constructed homes of the workers, have been levelled to the dust. The scenes among the refugees of these villages and towns are indescribably pathetic. Families have been separated. Some have fled into Holland for safety; others line the roads leading to the border. Weeping women are frantically seeking their missing children. Babies of tender years are toddling along the streets and country roads weeping hysterically. Families are utterly without information of the whereabouts of fathers, mothers, brothers, or sisters. Thousands are hungry. There has been no attempt as yet to systematize the exodus of the non-combatants. Many are stolidly remaining in their homes, hopeless, despairing, prepared to accept death as inevitable.

THE HAGUE, October 8.—Communication with Antwerp is interrupted to-day. The city is known to be under a terrific bombardment from all sides. Following a refusal to acquiesce in a demand for the surrender of the city by the military authorities, the Germans, who had previously confined their fire to the encircling chain of forts, turned their guns on the city itself. They had given two hours notice to the inhabitants to leave, and thousands flocked out in utter panic. The roads to the Dutch frontier are littered with household goods, clothing and personal belongings of every character abandoned by the terrified Belgians in their mad rush to safety. Reports from the city itself say that great shells are dropping everywhere, and that many houses have been destroyed already. The Germans claim that they have beaten the Belgians from both the outer and inner lines of fortifications. It is stated that King Albert still remains in the city and is directing the defence although all of the archives of the Government have been transferred to Ostend.

It is generally accepted here that the Belgians in Antwerp can hardly hold out more than a couple of days at the most. They had considered their Nethe River positions absolutely impregnable but they were utterly wrecked by the pounding of the heavy German shells. The losses to the garrison are declared to be very heavy.

The crossing of the Nethe by the Germans was one of most spectacular episodes of the present war. The Germans first tried to build pontoon bridges under the protection of their heavy artillery.

AID FOR ANTWERP

Reported That a Strong British Expeditionary Force Has Been Rushed Into Belgian City

GERMANS IN STRENGTH

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Oct. 8.—That a British expeditionary force of unquestioned strength has been rushed into Antwerp from the west of Ghent was reported here to-day. This expedition was declared to consist chiefly of artillery and naval detachment with heavy guns. Whether it will be able to save the situation is not known. In fact the authorities refuse positively to admit that British troops are in action in Belgium at all. The Germans are reported redoubling their efforts to take the city. They are in far stronger force than any one up to the present has imagined, and are on all sides except the north.

The Germans are utilising their aeroplanes to create a reign of terror. These machines, which are far faster than the Belgian aeroplanes, circle over the city at a great height, dropping bombs. It is reported that a score of non-combatants have been killed by the aerial warriors.

Zeppelins are also reported as being [illegible] the outer German battle lines, and it is believed that they also are to be pressed into service.

Why Belgium Was Invaded

Although the general reason that prompted Germany to make its way into France through Belgian territory is generally recognized the necessity of finding suitable roads for the transportation of her immense field guns, which have only recently been disclosed, was a most compelling element in her decision. This feature of the campaign is set forth in an interesting manner in the special war issue of the Scientific American of October 3rd, which also gives a number of illustrations of these novel engines of war. The facts are stated in this story as follows:

It must be admitted, however, that the very qualities of weight and power which make the 11-inch mortar such a formidable piece, nevertheless constitute a most serious problem of transportation. In spite of the skill with which the design has been worked out, with its large diameter pedrail wheels, the weight of one of these mortars is such that it demands the very best of conditions of roadway for its successful, or, at least, for its speedy transportation. To handle these pieces successfully, whether in advance or retreat, calls for the highest class of military roads, roads which as far as possible shall be free from heavy grades. Therein, no doubt, is to be found one predisposing cause which led the Germans to cling so tenaciously to their plan of campaign through Belgian territory. The magnificent highways through Belgium and northern France, stretching, as they do, through comparatively level country, are ideal for the transportation of batteries of these heavy siege guns rapidly to the fortifications of the French capital. At the outset of the war, the world wondered how the Germans could expect, as they evidently did, to be within the city of Paris in a few weeks' time. The answer is to be found in their belief in the invincibility of the huge armies which they were prepared to pour through Belgium, and in the ability of this 11-inch mortar to cut a wide swath through the engirdling fortifications of Paris. The Germans, in our belief, never contemplated for a moment, a complete investment of Paris such as they made in 1870 to 1871. These 11-inch mortars have made such an investment unnecessary. Had the Franco-British resistance to the enveloping tactics of the German right been less successful, it is probable that the German army would have been in Paris at the present time.

TWO BUSHELS EACH

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 8.—Hon. W. T. Crothers, Minister of Labour, has issued an appeal to the women of Ontario asking that each and every one who has an orchard dry two bushels of apples in the old-fashioned way from wealth of fruit which this season loaded the trees. The dried products will be shipped to H. Prud'homme, of Montreal, who will attend to its transportation to Belgium.

REMEMBER SATURDAY IS TAG-DAY

In the midst of the many demands made upon our sympathy and purses, we should keep in thought and keep a coin for the Children's Aid Society. Remember that Saturday next is Tag-Day in the interests of the funds of the Society.

On account of the war, the demands upon its funds is greater than ever this season. There are now eighteen children under the care of the society and making inroads upon its funds. The number varies; a short time ago it was twenty-two and may almost any day again reach or exceed that figure. We are helping wage a war in the interests of humanity, and we can do our part in helping on the humane work of helping the helpless and the dependent. Let us think of our own well-loved, well-fed, well-clothed and well-housed little ones and if possible think of them being in the case of the orphaned, or worse than orphaned, friendless and dependent children, whose condition calls for the good offices of the Children's Aid Society. If the Society is to stand en loco parentis to these children it must have funds to do this effectively, and the only source of funds, dear reader, is you.

FRUSTRATED ATTEMPT TO CUT COMMUNICATION

PARIS, October 8.—Operations by cavalry in force were reported from the north this morning and in every instance it was stated that success continued with the allies. They are moving their lines steadily toward the Belgian frontier and are reported to have frustrated an attempt to cut the main line of communication.

Cavalry Battle is Being Vigorously Fought and the Lines of Both Armies are Constantly Lengthening Out as Each Strive to Envelope the Other----Lost Ground is Picked Up by the Allies.

OFFICIAL FRENCH WAR OFFICE STATEMENT

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, October 8.—That great clashes between the rival cavalry of the warring nations are taking place over a space extending from the neighbourhood of Arras almost to the North Sea, was admitted officially to-day in the 3 o'clock war office statement. At the same time it was again insisted that most of the positions from which the allies were driven by the weight of the superior numbers of Germans in the territory between the Somme and the Oise, has now be reoccupied and the Germans again forced back. The Germans are trying unsuccessfully to resume the offensive in the Woevre district but the French are repulsing every violent attack. This was made clear in the 3 o'clock official communique made public at Bordeaux, and telegraphed to General Gallieni here. The statement declares that the general situation was highly satisfactory to the allies. It was said the Germans were falling back to the north of Arras. Between Rheims and the Meuse the situation is declared to be unchanged, as is the situation along the entire right wing.

LONDON, October 8.—Belgium to-day was the centre of action in the European war. News via Calais and Dunkirk indicated that the so-called battle of the Aisne has extended into Southern Belgium. The Germans are declared to be moving strong forces in an attempt to cut the British lines of communication by way of the Channel. A strong squadron of British dreadnaughts is now massed at Ostend, and also along the coast watching the French harbour cities. This fleet will be used to prevent the Germans taking any of the seacoast cities, and thus establishing a base for a possible Zeppelin attack on England. Ther is much sympathy here for the Belgians, who are again bearing the brunt of the war. Belgium is paying a bitter price for her opposition to the German military plans, and even though the allies win she may never be able to recover from the ravages of this war. Energetic measures are to be taken by the Government to aid the Belgium refugees. As quickly as possible those who have fled to Holland wil be brought here and distributed throughout the Empire to be cared for until the war shall end.

POSITION OF OPPOSING ARMIES TO-DAY

THE GREAT BATTLE-FRONT IN FRANCE.

Both sides officially report that the outflanking movements have carried the battle-line north of Arras to Lens and La Bassee, which is only fifteen miles south-west of Lille. The allied troops that once curved from Arras to Douai, round the end of the German line, have been straightened out by a German force coming from Armen-tieres, which it was necessary they should meet on their front. This force came from Menin, and went through Tournai, Templeuve, and Roubaix, and thence by Menin to Armentieres, to save the German line from a critical situation and outflank the outflankers. Though it succeeded, the allies cann ot be said to have suffered a defeat.

ONLY ONE.

There is only one perfectly beautiful baby in the beauty galaxy of the "Better Babies" contest, and that is owned by two hundred mothers. It is a blessed thing for babies that every mother thinks her baby the best, and worthy of the care she gives it. If this were not so some babies and most babies would have a hard time of it, as some do have through the ignorance of mothers of the art of giving the best forms of care in rearing and training the child. With the most sensible mother realising by the hard facts of her score-card that her perfect baby is not physically and mentally perfect she can never forgive the perverted judgment that failed to award her darling the prize. On the battle front in Europe failure of decision creates intensity of war; at the Public Library to-morrow decision will bring war. When the judges make their decisions in the "Better Babies Contest," war will break out—the maternal Armageddon. It is no use urging disapointed mothers to be sensible. What mother was ever sensible where her child is concerned? She may be unreasoningly devoted and blindly self-sacrificing, but never sensible. Though mothers may be disappointed in the matter of prizes, they have ample compensation in the knowledge they have gained by the lessons of the "Better Baby Contest." When they see their children thrive and grow stronger, through better methods of feeding, better care, and more intelligent mtahods of dealing with the physiological and psychological problems that child bearing and child rearing present they will acknowledge the benefits of the contest, but—will still hold the grudge.

WAR AND NATURE.

A correspondent, in another column, argues, and not without justification, that war is a normal condition of the world of nature; and seems to deduce that wars such as that which now exists, are inevitable. If we take the state of nature as a standard our correspondent wouldn't have much trouble with his tailor's bills. But under the dispensation of Christianity the state of grace supersedes the state of nature. Even before Christianity came to the world mankind evolutionised from a state of nature in a hundred ways, with war as one of the remaining incidents of the most advanced civilization. That is not to say that further evolution upward would not eliminate even that. That elimination is the work of Christianity; and if we doubt its effectiveness to this end, we must doubt the fulfilment of the Isaiahic prophecy:

> And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more.

War is repugnant to Christianity; and the influence of Christianity, its ultimate triumph in the realisation of peace, is not to be doubted. Christianity has not yet been effective in destroying other manifestations of the moral uncouthness of a state of nature. Its triumph is coming, though the way upward to light is arduous. We still have to combat the primitive instincts of power, lust of depraved human ambition, instinct of rapine. The world must have peace if it has to fight for it. In this war for rightsous ends, Great Britain is fighting, striving and even agonising—in the Greek as well as ordinary sense of the word—for it; for the implementation of her ideals, of progress and human betterment, that can only have their perfect fulfilment in the triumph of Christianity and the reign of peace—as contrasted with war. The warring forces of nature will always have their predestined operation; but the time can come, and will come, when the warring impulses of humanity, the diabolism of human strife, will be overcome and there will be won the fulfilment of the conditions that divine grace, through Christianity, provides for and exacts.

THE SECOND CONTINGENT.

The announced decision of the Dominion Government to raise another Canadian Army Division of 22,000 men for service, is in line with the decision expressed in Parliament through the hearty endorsation of the declaration of the leader of the Opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that—"Canada will devote the last man and the last dollar" to the fight, for democracy and Britannic honour. Then Parliament representing the people of Canada unanimously endorsed this expression of duty. When Britain is at war Canada is at war, and as Britain is determined "to see this thing through, Canada must be in the fight to the finish. The outcome is not doubtful, and but for the infinite losses involved we need not be anxious for the result. The British forces in France have done more than could have been expected of them; but this doing has been done at great cost of life. The gaps in the fighting line must be filled; the fighting line must be strengthened; and Canada must do her share.

By sending 35,000 men overseas we have not done anything like our best. The statement of the Minister of Militia in the House of Commons that in August already 100,000 volunteers for the front had come forward, must not be allowed to stand as a mere sorry bit of brag. We must make it good, in part, at least. Sir Robert Borden's offer cabled to the British War Office on Tuesday, shows that the Government realizes our duty. If we are to raise a second contingent of 22,000 we must be about it; and in this connection one cannot understand the absence of the Minister of Militia from his post of duty. Colonel the Hon. Sam. may reach the fighting line and be able to give Sir John French some valuable hints in regard to waging war, but to the ignorant laymen's mind, the place of the Minister of Militia in Canada is at home preparing to organize and equip a second contingent, a matter which, if Canada is to maintain her credit, is not to be delayed.

We can count upon volunteers offering freely. There are many men eligible for service and the spirit of Canadians has not been dampened but inspired by the sternness of the struggle and the necessity of keeping it up to the end. While a second contingent will be adding to the strength on the field, it will be of benefit at home. The problem of unemployment is still unsolved; its solution will be helped by raising another contingent. If men can't get employment in the battles of peace, in industrial and other occupation, they can get employment in fighting for the interest of commerce, industry and the important conditions of living; for the fruits of the highest civilization, and the interests, imperilled by this barbarous war. Canada, by helping to wage war, can help bring on the reign of peace. Peace cannot be got but by successful war. Hon. Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, put the thing in a nut-shell when he said in the course of a recent speech:

> "There is some vague talk of peace; but while the smoke of their abominable cruelty goes up to Heaven there is no time for talk of peace."

Canada, as part of the Empire, must help in the fight for its integrity and what that integrity represents, the championship of human freedom, and the opportunity to advance the highest interests of civilization.

NOTED CRICKETERS CHARMED LIFE.

Lieutenant A. C. Johnston, the Hants county cricketer, who was recently wounded in action, had some marvellous escapes from death. In a letter to a friend he states that the day before he was wounded the nose of a shell hit a wall six inches above his head. Shortly afterwards a bullet struck the ground half a yard in front of him, bounded up, and hit on the body, bruising his ribs. A spent bullet subsequently hit him over the heart. While in the hospital he found the bullet in his left-hand breast pocket, and sent it home to his wife. Finally, while sitting on the steps of a house, half the building was blown up, and he was not even touched.

CANADIAN LADY TELLS HOW LONDON IS IN TIMES OF WAR

LONDON, Sept. 25. — The British War Office is like the inner shrine of a Buddhist temple, so difficult of access is it; and when I called I did not meet with the success that forty-two of my fellow-Canadians did, if one is to believe a story which has been oft repeated in different circles the past few days.

The story runs that these Westerners, who had desired to be attached to the Princess Patricia Light Infantry, and were refused that privilege, being recommended to go to the Valcartier Camp instead, far from going to the camp, had embarked at once for England, where they arrived last Thursday. As soon as they got to London, they marched in a bod to the War Office, demanding to see Lord Kitchener. Here they were told that they could join a training camp in England, but they indignantly declined, averring that they could shoot straight, pick up a shilling while riding at full speed, and had been "Riders of the Plains," and, with true Western pride, they pulled out a wallet of gold, saying that they would buy their own mounts and go to the front whether Lord Kitchener wanted them or not. The last heard of them was in Southampton, whither they had been sent by the authorities, and are probably by this time in the firing line. Whether true or false, this story has caused much amusement here.

So great and clamorous has been the demand to be sent to the front even by raw recruits, that the infection has spread to the American colony as well. The other day an American entered one of the recruiting stations, and, approaching the desk of the recruiting officer said: "Say, boss, they tell me there's something going on over the water, and I want to see it. You might just put me down for the firing line."

Amazed, the officer said: "But you are too old, and you are not a British subject, are you? Where were you born?" "I was born in New York City, forty-eight years ago," replied the would-be recruit, and the officer politely told him that he could only recruit British subjects, and that the age limit was thirty-five.

"I'm most obliged to you, sir," said the American, as he passed out, adding, "but Im going to the front," and about half an hour afterwards he came back with his papers to show the officer, saying: "Well, I've got my papers, and I'm very much indebted to you, sir."

Dumbfounded the ojcer asked how he had got them, and he said: "Well, boss, I just walked up to the next recruiting office and told them that I was born in Montreal thirty-two years ago last June, and that I wanted to serve my country at the front, and they signed me on straight away!"

These stories make us smile in these sad days, but they point a splendid lesson, namely, the truly marvellous manner in which everyone in the Allies' countries are rising to help to break, one and for all time, the military despot of Europe.

London still continues to be flooded with people from the Continent, and has grown even more cosmopolitan than usual.

As train load after train load pours out into the streets, some gayly dressed and some in tatters, one wonders how England is to feed this enormous population, which is daily being added to her own.

I stood for several hours yesterday in the Strand, amid the thousands, who silently waited for the long line of ambulances, which were bringing a train-load of wounded soldiers to Black: dingy, old Charing Horse Hospital, and watched them, as loving hands conveyed them within the building.

I shall never forget that crowd with the strained faces, nor the muffled cheer that went up, like some great groan. It did not seem the time for cheering, yet this waiting multitude wanted the boys to know that they were proud of them, and would do them honour. To-day a great streamer hangs across the street from the hospital bearing the words, "Quiet for the Wounded," and a Metropolitan policeman stands at the Strand corner turning all traffic another way, while from a third story window hangs a new white flag, and as the breese loosens its folds you see on its pure surface a Red Cross.

I spent the afternoon early in the week in the historic St. Jame's Palace, entering through Friday Court to the rooms of Queen's Mary's Needlework Guild, and there beheld the enormous piles ow warm clothing ready to be sent to the soldiers at the front. There were thousands upon thousands of great piles ten feet square and each bearing a ticket such as "shirts," "pyjamas," "mufflers," "socks," "pillow cases," "blankets," or "knitted belts," while in another large room were similar piles of women's dress, petticoats, babies' clothes, children's underclothes, and kitchen aprons.

Two things impressed me about the work, one being the good quality of the flannel and flannelette ad other material the garments were made of, and the second was the neatness of the sewing. I asked if they were made by private individuals, and was told that the committee gave all their sewing to the unemployed, paying them good wages, so this work is like the "equality of mercy," it is twice blessed.

The Queen was there superintending the packing of the immense bales for the front, and was deeply impressed as sh moved about among the great piers of clothing, asking for various articles with a perfect knowledge, not only of the requirements, but the manner of packing and labeling. As the western sun shone through the old leaded windows, lighting up the gold of her beautiful hair, she looked like some beautiful mother packing a Christmas box for a dear son who was far from home in some foreign land. There was no hoping and fussing among the ladies who were assisting Her Majesty—they were all noble women, together engaged in the nation's work for the defenders of our honour and the wounded everywhere.

The secretary, who is a well known lady told me that it was amazing the amount that Work the Queen managed to get through in one day, and that almost every garment for the soldiers passed through her hands.

I was touched by one thing this beautiful woman said to me as we were talking of the horrors of the war, she said: "It is all so big we do not think of it in detail. Every day I hear of two or three of my dearest friends being killed in action, but I do not weep, it must all go on until we triumph, and I feel that each one must go on helping to the end."

She reminded me of Lord Plymouth, who was chairman at the Welsh meeting when Mr. Lloyd George made his famous speech which will go down in history as the greatest recruiting speech England has ever made. Lord Plymouth's son, the honourable Archer Windsor-Clive, had been killed two days before this meeting, at the front, but when he arose to open the meeting, in a dignified stately way, he commenced his speech by referring to sacrifice, he said, "We must all learn to say that Mr. Rudyard Kipling and say it with deep conviction, 'Who dies if England lives!'"

As I visited the different recruiting stations—and all professions, crafts an darts are forming battalions of their own—there are public school corps, sportsmen's corps, artists' corps and many others—I am reminded of our Canadian campaigns for raising funds for charities. The different corps remind one of the teams and each is striving to outdo the other, while the streets are thronged with motor cars bearing the letters "O.H.M.S." These cars have been placed, fully equipped, at the disposal of the Government by their generous owners.

In London, the 'London Scottish" are easily the favourites, and splendid men they look as they swing through the streets in their service kilts of khaki. many of them over six feet in height. They are the only battalion recruiting that marches to music, and they tramp, tramp along to the music of the immortal "bagpipes," which it is indeed bonnie to hear.

The cablegram of the Hon. Rudolph Lemieux, stating that 5,000 French-Canadians were coming with the Canadian expeditionary force which appeared in The Times of the 22nd has given much satisfaction. The London Daily Telegraph had stated that Quebec was apathetic in this war which aroused deep indignation among the Canadians here who know the province well and who appreciate what a big thing Quebec's gift of cheese was, to say nothing of the men who are enlisting. The cheese appealed to the English because many of the poorer classes use it as a staple food, and I have heard many comments about it, such as "It was such an eminently suitable and sensible gift, as cheese is always served in a soldier's rations," and "It is all ready and requires no cooking."

I may say that the Agent-General for Quebec, by his courtesy and kindliness of heart, has endeared himself to all Englishmen with whom he comes in contact. Quebec, too, has such lovely offices in Kingsway, the new thoroughfare of so much importance, and one is always sure of a hearty welcome when one visits them.

Dean Starr of Kingston, who is so well known as "the fighting Parson," is acting as drill instructor in a camp in Essex. The War Office is very short of instructors and continually advertises for them.

Mrs. Moat, a relative of Mrs. Reid, the wife of the Agent-General for Ontario, has offered her palatial country house, "Johnson Hall," in Staffordshire, with servants and upkeep, as well as motor cars, for the use of the Canadian Contingent.

War is a great leveller, not only of wealth, but of position. A few days ago one of the wealthiest manufacturers in London volunteered for service as a private, and one of his own forecen is his superior officer, while it is a very common thing to se a private dash up to the barracks in a huge touring car. Every man one meets thinks he would be disgraced if he did not enlist in some capacity, and so long as that spirit lives the Empire cannot be beaten.

I was asked the other day to tell the people of Montreal, where the tobacco factories are famous, that nothing would be more appreciated by the soldiers at the front than gifts of cigarettes, for the boys at night after standing in the trenches half filled with water. These could be sent to "Queen Mary's Needlework Guild" in old St. James' Palace, to be packed with the shirts and other warm clothes, which almost daily are being sent to the boys at the front.

I have received an invitation to visit the wounded in hospital, and next week hope to tell you something first-hand about the war.—Mrs. D. MacAlister Fitzsimmons in Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE SAW-EDGED BAYONET.

One of them is the most gruesome weapon of war I have ever known to have been issued to a civilized army. It is a German bayonet, half of which is a saw. When in London I was asked by English officers if I had seen in Belgium these bayonets, which because they rip and tear bone and flesh are forbidden by the laws of war. I had not seen them, nor did I believe they existed.

I classed them with the other false charges that are made in every war—of poisoned wells, dum-dum bullets, and firing on ambulances. Yesterday I saw three saw-bayonets found in trenches abandoned by Germans. The saw-edge was not given them by soldiers' hammering one blade against another, but was machine-made, and each bayonet bore a Government stamp, a number, an Imperial crown, and the word "Erfurt." — Richard Harding Davis in London Chronicle.

As It Is In England--Are We Down-hearted? No!

A Powerful, Descriptive and Patriotic Address Delivered Last Evening in St. John's School-house by Mr. H. J. Osborne of the London (Eng) Daily Chronicle.

A GOOD ATTENDANCE HEARD DISCOURSE

Last evening the schoolhouse of St. John's Anglican Church was placed, by the courtesy of the Rector and Church Wardens, at the disposal of Mr. Osborne, who delivered a lecture—or more correctly speaking, an address—on "England to-day. Conditions in war time."

The Mayor's Address.

Mayor Euller, who presided, opened the proceedings and announced by asking those seated near the back of the room to come further forward, an invitation of which but few availed themselves, possibly owing to nervousness. His Worship then went on to introduce Mr. Osborne, a noted London (Eng) journalist now touring Canada, who would explain the manner in which the English were taking the present war situation, and he—the speaker imagined that when the audience left the room, so kindly loaned to them, they would have a great deal better understanding of the general feeling in the dear Old Mother Country. He (the Mayor) was pleased to see such a considerable number gathered together on such short notice. The chairman then called on Mr. Osborne to address the audience on the conditions in England during time of active war.

Eulogy on Peterborough.

Mr. Mayor, ladies and gentlemen, said Mr. Osborne, I have great satisfaction in being able to address so many influential citizens. I have just returned from near the scene of the battle fields and I find myself in one of the prettiest and most charming little cities I have ever been in. As a journalist I spoke to a few of the prominent newspaper men and as a result was advised to speak on my subject. This I agreed to do, and I feel very gratified at the privilege afforded to me to see so many of you this evening. I much appreciate the kindness of Canon Davidson and the Church Wardens of St. John's, and as an old municipal man in the Old Land, I am glad to have the support of your Mayor as chairman and of the Rev. Jas. Price, rector of St George's, who also has a seat on the platform.

Study Large Maps.

Lord Salisbury, many years back advised the members of his party to study large maps. If it was advisable to do so in those days it is equally as important, if not more so in these days to do likewise. I do not intend to go closely into the geography of the war area or into the topics leading up to and connected with the war.

This is the sixty-third day of a most terrible war, and there are indications of its lasting for a prolonged period. It is over one hundred years since we had war brought so near our own shores. The last war was in South Africa, thousands of miles away. In earlier days we had the Indian Mutiny a long way off, and the Crimean War was a considerable distance away.

Very Close Home.

Today we are engaged in warfare close home to London—the biggest war the world has ever known. Only the silvery streak of the English channel separates us from the scene of action.

At the time of the break-out of the war I was in Norway at a congress; we numbered some five to six hundred all told, gathered from all parts but the threatening of war broke up the meetings. The German delegates, for instance, had to go home in double-quick time, having received orders to join their colours. But all we could learn from the Norwegian papers was scare news and grim facts.

What Will England Do?

Was the first cry of Norway and Sweden. These and all the other small countries look to England in a crisis. The Kaiser called on Sweden to raise 100,000 men for his assistance with threats of what they might expect if that country did not comply. But in Sweden and in Norway the inhabitants were always cheering for the British, while the thoughts as to Germany were very bitter. The Scandinavians felt that if England took a hand in the matter, all the small peoples would be well looked after for is known to all.

I was nearly a week getting away. Vessels were afraid to leave Norwegian ports on account of the mining operations conducted by the Germans. Neither were there enough vessels available for all those who desired to leave the country. Eventually I got across to Newcastle-on-Tyne in a small steamer capable of carrying about one hundred, but having some two hundred and fifty aboard. Shortly after we had left some vessels were blown up by mines. We had some excitement on the voyage, for we were stopped by a British gun-boat and had to give a detailed account of ourselves before being allowed to proceed.

A New Situation.

I found created in England. There were at first excitement and fear, more in the classes than in the masses. At first all the gold and large quantities of food were cornered. Long strings of motor cars might be seen at the large stores. People who had money were provisioning for a long period. A selfish feeling for a time prevailed. It was a case of sauve qui peut. Never mind what happens to anyone else. Prices consequently went up; commercial chaos, if not collapse, loomed in the distance, and it must be remembered that England is the Banker of the World.

Commercial chaos would have affected the world. Happily all was cleared away in a few days. Emergency laws were passed. A bank holiday fortunately occurred. This was extended to four days. During that period, owing to the cornering of gold, the Mint was busily engaged in coining silver. Postal notes were made legal tender and one pound and ten shilling bills were issued, all this being carried out during the four days extended bank holiday.

"I Wouldn't Mind a Million."

A Peterborough man seeing one of these small notes remarked he didn't think a great deal of its appearance, but he wouldn't mind having a million of them."

Food.

Really only became dearer to any extent for a few days. A government commission was at once formed to regulate prices. Each day was issued a price list and retailers were not allowed to exceed the prices laid down. This calmed down the scare and the rush for food. Our fleet kept open all our ports, so that food came in to England plentifully. Hence we were in a far better condition than our enemies.

At first there was some diversity of opinion, but that was soon dispelled. There was quickly manifested a spirit of union and determination which still dominates. There is a united front for righteousness and truth. No matter what one's views may have been, all quickly became convinced. In the struggle for right all the British became steadfast to right wrong, and on all hands it is conceded that the downfall of Prussian militarism and dominance, which has existed for forty years, must be effected.

Our people are Confident on Principles.

The British people are all calm in strength. There is no apathy or fear. It goes without saying that we have had to put up with many inconveniences to which we have not been accustomed, but we have all accepted the situation stoically and placidly.

Commandeering.

An entirely new thing to the English was the commandeering of ships, lorries, auto cars, horses, omnibuses, etc., etc. These, however, were all paid for in good prices. I saw a picture in Montreal entitled "An Every-day Scene in London," in which the artist had depicted a waggon left in the street with the horses commandeered. I can assure such is not the case. Things were not done in that way. Nothing was taken by force.

Opened by Censor.

Of course we suffered serious inconveniences in our postal, telephone and telegraph services. No code telegrams could be sent. Letters were opened and censored. Letters from my wife were marked "Passed by Censor," after having been opened. The same applied to letters from soldiers on the battlefield. I saw one in which appeared:

My dear wife.

With my love,

All the rest had been obliterated by the Censor. Probably the soldier had been too forcible with his pen, and given information as to movements not good to fall into other hands.

There are for the soldiers

Military Postoffice.

Each soldier is supplied with postcards on which are printed a number of messages. All the soldier has to do is to cross out those which do not apply to his case, write his number on it, in place of signature, and post it.

Fake Telegrams.

I find that in Canada you have a great deal more war news than in England. There are a lot of "fake" cablegrams "made in Germany." These are not allowed in England. There is an outcry for more news. We wanted to know more of what was going on. But it cannot be given. Moreover, how can news be sent from a battle front extending 200 miles from right to left.

Press Bureau.

Politicians of all sorts and practical journalists are in the ranks of the Censors. It is vastly better that little, yet sound, news, should be given out, than that which is unreliable. This has proved the supreme loyalty of the English press. The Editor's room is a room of strict criticism. Scare cables receive no attention, small items of real official news are all that are given out. The English attitude in this respect is more satisfactory. Exact facts, and not imaginary, are given out.

Kitchener.

England was extremely fortunate that prior to the commencement of the war, owing to a difference with Col. Seeley—who is now serving on General French's staff—Mr. Asquith, the Premier of England, appointed himself as Secretary of War. Of course he could not fill up both positions, but it enabled him to put in the man of all others, the greatest living soldier and organizer in Europe to-day.

Lord Kitchener of Karteum.

This was a decided advantage at once to be seen. There is no conscription in England; all enlistment is voluntary. Kitchener asked at once for 100,000 men. These at once voluntarily enlisted and the ranks of the territorials were all filled up. Ninety per cent. of the territorial forces volunteered for the Zeid inside of a fortnight. From Birmingham alone, my own native locality, there were 3,000 enlisted in four days. There was an outcry for the issue of a badge of some description for those who were rejected, as a proof of their willingness to serve their country. Now, with the aid of the colonies and India one and a half million can be put on the field. It is true Germany has six and a half millions, but it is Not Always Numbers That Count.

France has 4,000,000.
Russia has 6,500,000.

The allied forces depend on courage and pluck, and unanimity which are wanting in the opposing forces and which will count.

A great deal lies in the fact that ours is a voluntary army and differently trained to the German army, which will make up for many deficiencies. The German army is

A great Machine.

Men just obey their officers. If the officers are taken away the men do not know what to do. On the other hand, with the British there is always some one to take charge, even if he be only a private.

Kaiserism.

For forty years Kaiserism has been taught in schools, Church and press. Kaiserism was supposed to be for the salvation of Germany and the control of the world.

In Dusseldorf I met a thirty-year-old lady. In conversation she said she had given up all the gaieties of life. "I rear soldiers for the Kaiser," pointing to her two boys.

No More German Empire.

There will be no more German Empire. It will be divided up again into principalities and states. Bavaria and Wurtemburg were with difficulty got into the Confederation. North and South Germany are by no means united. There were even quarrels in Brussels between German soldiers on account of some treatment meted out to the Queen of the Belgians.

Airship Invasion.

There's talk of a German airship invasion of England. But have the Germans forgotten that although they may have Wilhemshaven and Dusseldorf, we English have Aldershot and Farnham. W know all about it and when the Germans arrive they will get a very "warm" reception. Count Zeppelin will have something whereby to remember England. If the Zeppelin airships should come they are, I grant, big structures, and might do a lot of damage. When we remember what has been done at Louvain, at Rheims, and now Antwerp is threatened, one must realise it is quite possible to do some mischief to our English towns.

The Silver Streak Fleet.

The Silver Streak fleet has to be reckoned on.

Of large vessels, England, Russia and France possess 304, against 126 of the German fleet. If we include all the small craft, such as destroyers, scouts, etc., the relative proportions are 1,007, against 397. At present the German Fleet is Skulking.

The Germans have violated every rule of warfare; they have been guilty of the vandalism of the Huns. The atrocities may have been exaggerated, but appear to be mainly true.

No Party Differences.

In England these are all put on one side; there is a steady united front, each party vieing with the other to see who could best help England in the present circumstances. The British are calmly facing all odds, no matter what may be the cost. There is a united people and a united Empire.

At the conclusion Mayor Baller thanked Mr. Osborne for his splendid address, and "God Save The King" was heartily sung by all present.

Thoughts are Sparks

—flashes of the mind that decide for success or failure.

The question is, what kind of sparks does your brain generate?

The brain, like a battery, must be supplied with certain elements to generate thought properly. These brain elements are water, albumen and phosphate of potash. If any of these are lacking in the daily food, brain and body energy are vitally lessened.

Are any lacking? Listen! Water and albumen are plentifully supplied in ordinary food, but phosphate of potash—together with other mineral elements—is almost wholly lacking in white bread and all white flour products.

Grape-Nuts

—containing all the nutriment of wheat and barley, including the precious phosphates so essential to perfect bodies and active brains, provides a food at once delicious, nourishing and economical.

BE GENEROUS TO CHILDREN'S AID

Saturday is Tag Day and Deserves the Usual Response

The public is reminded that Saturday is Tag Day for the Children's Aid Society. It is not necessary to dwell upon the object of this appeal to the citizens, but a word might be said to urge a generous response. The average citizen is given this opportunity of helping provide for the care of the children to whom the Shelter becomes a comfortable refuge. Practically all the work of organization is given voluntarily. It may be that many are not as prosperous as in other years, but the small sums will be most acceptable. Let those who can be generous, give a little more than usual realizing the fact that they are in a position to do so. But let the other citizens give what they can. Let us all remember that the approaching year ma yentail greater demands than ever upon the Society. Hence the receipts on Saturday should be as large if not larger, than usual.

GERMANY'S STRENGTH IN AUTOMOBILES

Too little credit has undoubtedly been given to the automobile for its part in the effective operation of great armies, as illustrated by the sensational dash into France by the German army; and something of automobile organization that kept supplies moving, and rushed reinforcements to the points where they were needed, is told in an interesting article in the special war number of the Scientific American of October 3rd, which contains the following facts:

In Germany, military motor trucks complete with trailers, to the number of 1,130 were under subsidy on April 1st this year. In addition, the Empire had 14,760 commercial cars, capable of being converted into military vehicles. The order of mobilization placed at the disposal of the German General Staff approximately 15,000 delivery cars, not counting the trailers. In addition, the Germany army contained at the beginning of the year the following "special" vehicles: 90 completely equipped motor kitchens, 100 motor ambulances, 500 motor-driven cannon, and 4 powerful tractors, which have been especially used in drawing the new 42 centi-metre siege guns of the artillery. About 300 armored cars, fitted with Maxim guns; 15 searchlight cars and a number of aeroplane repair waggons make up the remainder.

The government has commandeered the majority of all the pleasure cars in the Empire, amounting to probably 60,000 vehicles, for use by officers at the front, and for rapid communication in the rear of the army. Whole regiments are reported to have been shifted under cover of night by means of big fleets of motor cars to points 60 and 100 miles distant. In addition, there are with the army more than ten thousand cycles and motorcycles.

The shortage of gasoline, which has been the subject of much comment in the American daily press during the past week, is of little importance, as all the military vehicles can be run with equal facility on benzol and denatured alcohol, both of which fuels are available in considerable quantity in Germany.

Siege Guns A Feature of The War

The siege guns that have been brought into prominence recently in the war in Europe are a startling indication of modern progress. Some interesting facts in relation to these big guns, and something of the history of their introduction into modern warfare is told in a special article in the war issue of the Scientific American of October 3rd, by an ordinance expert as follows:

One of the most striking developments brought to light, or at least brought to public attention, by the present war, is the enormous size and power of the mobile artillery with which the contending armies, and particularly those of Germany, are equipped. The most formidable of these weapons, the one which has attracted most attention in the present war, is the enormous 11-inch siege mortar.

The 11-inch mortar was developed and constructed in large numbers at the famous ordnance works of Krupp at Essen. In respect of size, weight and destructive power this piece marks the climax of a rapid development of heavy ordnance capable of being transported with an army and quickly emplaced for the reduction of permanent fortifications, such as those which were reduced at Leige and Namur. Up to the time of the Russo-Japanese War, a distinction was made between heavy and light siege units. The latter were mounted upon wheeled carriages, and they were capable of being moved with an army on the march. The heavier siege units, say of from 9-inch to 11-inch calibre, required special means for their transportation. The massive parts such as the gun and its carriage, had to be conveyed by standard guage railway or by ship to some place adjacent to the field of operations, whence it was customary to lay a light military railroad or devise other special means of transporting the batteries to the locations assigned to them. Before the mortars could be erected and placed in working order, it was necessary to provide heavy masonry foundations, of sufficient area and mass to withstand the heavy shock of recoil. It can readily be understood that this preliminary work entailed the loss of much valuable time.

This was the method employed by the Japanese in the reduction of Port Arthur. This enterprising people was the first to employ 11-inch siege guns for the reduction of permanent fortifications. They dismantled a large number of their coast defence mortars in Japan; transported them by sea to the port of Dalny; laid a light military road from Dalny to the base at the hills encircling Port Arthur; built heavy concrete foundations; and erected upon them the mortars and their gun carriages. It was these siege guns which assisted in the sinking of the Russian ships in Port Arthur, and contributed very largely to the reduction of the forts which crowned the hills around that city.

Saw French Battleships

Mrs. W. J. Moher and daughter, Helen, arrived home this morning from Ireland, per steamer "Ascania". On the voyage over, which lasted about fifteen days, many exciting moments were passed. They were closely followed at night on several occasions by some French cruisers, who turned their searchlights on their boat and each time would steam off after making sure they were none of the enemy. On account of having to sail from London, all her baggage has been lost or delayed.

THE IRRITATION IS RECIPROCAL

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In a recent editorial in the Review in speaking of corruption in politics, the writer states that he has heard the present Member say that when he first went to Ottawa he was much irritated at the chaffing he received for having to represent West Peterborough.

He had not been irritated half as much as the people of Peterborough, who have gone to Ottawa have been through the roasting they got for living in a place represented by Mr. Burnham. When I was last in Ottawa, I was with a party of three Conservative Members, and one of them suggested that I came from West Peterborough. Another remarked: "That is the Riding represented by Mr. Burnham," and then they all laughed.

If Mr. Burnham is so much irritated at the chaffing he received for having to represent West Peterborough he had better quit, because the irritation of those who have to live in West Peterborough under such a representation as gets from Mr. Burnham, is more far reaching and difficult to live under.

Yours truly.

West Peterborough.

Contributions To War Fund

Editor Examiner:

Sir.—It is a privilege as well as a duty for all to contribute to the patriotic fund, but the burden should fall upon the rich. Such has been recognized generally, but not so here. The Germans and those of German descent in Berlin, Ont., who are rich, have responded nobly to our cause, their contributions ranging from $250.00 to $10,000.00, while only one of our rich men subscribed as high as $75.00, but did not reach the century figure. It does not become us to speak disparagingly of the Germans as a whole, when those who share our citizenship surpass our rich men in their contributions.

Yours, etc.,

CITIZEN.

SHOULD GIVE FARMERS A CHANCE TO CONTRIBUTE

I read, with approval, a communication in your paper, a short time ago, calling attention to the fact that the Patriotic Fund Committee had not put themselves in touch with the farmers for the purpose of securing their surplus crops or some part thereof for the dependants of those who have gone to the war, or are destitute in consequence of the war. If the good committee would kindly wake up and do something, or resign, and let some willing persons act instead, it would prove a blessing where it is needed. It was suggested also to interview the farmers on the Market on Saturdays to that end, but that, too, was never done. It is a slur on the farmers to say that they are doing nothing for the cause, or not as much as they should, when they do not know what is required of them. In speaking to one of our most respectable farmers on Saturday last about contributing anything that he could spare, he replied that nothing was too good for the boys at the front, and that the best his farm could produce was theirs, if he only knew where to take it.

Yours, etc.,

Systam.

THE LION AND THE PREACHER

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—The lion is not a very useful animal, but its teeth are very sharp. Now, who created the lion? Was it man? Has humanity anything to do with the lion as a product? Nothing whatever. The lion is the handiwork of the Creator, made with sharp teeth for the purpose of fighting and tearing its prey. It is not intended in any sense, for peace. The totem of the German Empire is a double-headed eagle. Now, the eagle is made by the Creator and in no sense by man. The eagle is the very symbol of ferocity and pitilessness. It is made for tearing and rending, and lives chiefly on the murders it commits. Being double-headed it has been appropriately assumed by Germany. The Russians have the bear, which is not really a flesh-eating animal. The totem of the French is the fly, which—poor, innocent thing—is a great contrast to those other products of the Almighty. But I am not speaking in derision. No man who contemplates the facts of creation would venture to decide them unless he considered himself equal to or better than the Creator. But that doesn't lessen the importance of the facts as they are set for the preachers to cry out that the time will come when there will be peace in the world and that these horrible things are all a nightmare, is to cry out too loudly and in mistaken tones. It is to reproach the Creator who has furnished outside of man every evidence of being desirous that the world should consist of tearing, rending and fighting. The dream that some men have of everything being like a Sunday School tea meeting—quiet, nice, respectable, orderly—with a moderate amount of successful business during the day, a quiet evening, wound up by prayers and peaceful slumber may be all very well and very desirable, but it isn't the order of nature, and nature was created by God. It is not due to malignance that man suffers by disease, nor really of his own neglect. The source of disease, as we call it, is merely the efforts of the germs to make a living on their own account, which is detrimental to the human race. That, however, refers only to the malignant germs. There are benignant germs which fight it out with the others and I am afraid it is just so with the world. There are good people and what we call bad people, that is to say, people who have one way and the people who have another, and these two, like the germs and the lion and the tiger, and the rest of it, are bound to fight it out, and I do not think that the efforts of the preachers will make after all, anything like the difference that they think it will. We are doomed, if you like to call it so, to follow the order of nature set out by God, as in the case of the lion and the tiger, and we needn't grumble about it or reproach God for the cold, hard, relentless facts are there, that the world outside of man altogether is a terrible bit of conflict.

I have read your editorials with interest.

Yours truly.

Reader.

The GRESSMAN Shoe Co. Limited

WILL MAKE STRENUOUS EFFORTS TO RELIEVE THE LOCAL INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION

Industrial Association to Try and Find Employment for Local Men Out of Work.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Aims of Association.

To bring together the men that may possibly give employment and the man who needs it. To exhaust every possible method and expend every possible effort in securing situations for all local people out of work.

How They Will Do It.

By a personal canvass of every farmer in the surrounding country urging upon him the gravity of the situation and the possibility of him assisting in the relieving of it by finding employment for one extra man or more.

By employing a permanent secretary who will receive the names of all seeking work; who will see that all who ask for work are given their share of the work that is to be done; and who will give his whole time to the work of securing situations for the unemployed.

What They Ask.

The financial support of the City Council and the co-operation of every one whose desire it is to see the present situation, due to industrial depression, alleviated.

A meeting of the Industrial Association was held in the City Council Chamber last night. A number of local business men were present and entered enthusiastically into the discussion of ways and means of bringing together the men who could possibly employ one or more labourers, and the men who need employment.

Chairman Hall explained that at a meeting held a few nights ago he was elected chairman and was instructed to go ahead and get a committee organized. He suggested two manufacturers, two of the retail merchants, one banker, two labour men and two city councillors. Those present would be asked to elect a committee.

First Mr. Menzies was elected secretary for the meeting.

It was moved by Mr. R. Fair and seconded by Mr. R. J. Soden that the committee as suggested by Mr. Hall be made the Industrial committee in Peterborough, and that Mr. Hall be the chairman of the committee. In moving this Mr. Fair paid a high tribute to Mr. Hall, who has been in charge of the work of the Industrial Association here. The following were elected to constitute the committee: Messrs. G. C. Gladman, I. Brock, R. W. Travers, R. Fair, R. J. Soden, J. J. Hartley, H. Robertson, W. J. Johnston and G. H. Duncan. Three members of the committee and the chairman will constitute a quorum.

A report from the Central Association in Toronto was read, outlining the value of the organizations of local branches and what each branch would be expected to do.

Mr. Hall reported that already a three-day registration of unemployed had been held in the Council Chamber. Two hundred and twenty-five out-of-work had registered, half of whom were men with wives and families. During and after the registration several people notified Mr. Hall of work which they needed men to do, and as a result several men had been secured work. Mr. Hall did not think that the number who had registered represented the whole number out of work in the city. He calculated there must be between 900 and 1,500 out of work in Peterborough.

The data secured on these cards of registration would have to be copied and the cards sent to Toronto. The Industrial Association should also get in touch with the farmers.

Mr. Soden—I think we should ask the newspapers to give us a donation some space each day that we could use to let the people know what labourers were available. The advertisements could say so many labourers available for farm or lumber or other works.

On the motion of Messrs. Soden and Brock, Messrs. Hall and Fair were appointed a deputation to wait upon the newspapers in connection with this matter.

Mr. Fair moved that Messrs. Hall, Brock and Soden be a deputation to wait upon the Finance committee and ask them to finance the Association.

Ald. Johnston said that in a couple nance committee, was present and at ment in regard to the city's finances. He admitted, however, that if the Association needed financial backing very badly the city would have to take it up.

Mr. Soden—Well we can't finance this thing ourselves. If the city isn't going to finance it we might as well quit right here.

Ald. Johnston said that in a couple of weeks the outfall sewer would be started and that would give employment to a goodly number of men.

Mr. Brock said that two things were certain. There were a lot of men out of work and a possibility of securing employment for a percentage of them. It was the duty of this Association to bring the parties together. He suggested that the members of the Association personally visit all the farmers in the district and find out if they could not employ some men. A personal visit would have an effect that could not be secured in any other way. If the City Council invested a couple of hundred dollars in the Association it would be a good investment. While a couple hundred dollars would be expended several times that amount might be saved the city through the efforts of the Association.

Mr. Fair thought the surrounding country should be divided up into districts and that there were enough automobiles in the city to take members of the Association around and visit the different farmers.

Ald. Johnston suggested that the township councillors be asked to co-operate and find out what work there was in the country.

Mr. Brock voiced his opinion that this method would not be as effective as having members of the committee visit the farmers and urging upon them the graveness of the situation.

It was decided that Messrs. Hall, Brock and Soden wait upon the Finance committee at the earliest possible moment and ask for an appropriation of $000 to carry on the work of the Association.

Wanted To Go To Firing Line

And in Disappointment Gave Way to Liquor—Fined $10

Michael Murphy who was remanded a day or two ago on a charge of being found drunk while on the prohibited list pleaded guilty this morning and was fined $10. The defendant who carries in his skull a silver-plate, a souvenir of the Boer war, said he wanted to go to the firing line but was unable to do so. He could get work and pay the fine if the Magistrate would give him time. His Worship allowed him 20 days.

Splendid Gift By The Ladies Of Preneveau

HAVELOCK, Oct. 7. — Mrs. McGregor and son, of Toronto, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Foley.

Mr. Thompson, M.P.P., spent the week-end in town.

Mrs. H. Roche spent Tuesday last in Peterborough.

Mr. and Mrs. H. McNaboll spent Saturday last in Peterborough.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam McGill were in Toronto on Friday attending the funeral of the latter's brother-in-law, the late Jas. Webb.

The pupils of Miss Lottie Chiles gave a recital in the basement of the Methodist Church on Tuesday night of last week, which was much enjoyed by all those who attended the event.

The Preneveau Ladies' Patriotic League on Saturday, 19th ult., sent to the commandment at Valcartier Camp, two bales containing the following: 70 feather pillows, 70 pillow cases, 82 pair socks, 50 cases of footease, 12 dozen handkerchiefs and 8 pair of wristlets. Another bale, now almost completed, will be sent and will include 80 pairs of wristlets, some pillows and pillow cases, 50 housewives, 80 handkerchiefs and a number of sleeping helmets. (In each housewife a small box of camphor has been enclosed though not asked for.)

The society also donated an outfit, consisting of sweater, shirts, socks, handkerchiefs and a sleeping helmet, to Mr. W. A. Reynolds, of Norwood, brother of Mr. Reynolds, teacher at Preneveau. At the last meeting of the League a card from Mr. Reynolds was read, thanking the ladies for their gift.

Speaking of the helmet, he said, "It is certainly a fine thing for the cold nights down here."

Further encouragement was given the workers, when, a few days later, the employers of the Ontario Rock Co., sent $50.00 to the Society with the following letter:

Preneveau, Sept. 17, 1914.

Mrs. G. A. Sexsmith,
Preneveau, Ont.:

Dear Mrs. Sexsmith,—The employees of the Ontario Rock Co. have much pleasure in handing the enclosed subscription of $53.00 to you and the ladies of Belmont who have handed yourself speaker in the great work of contribution to the comfort of the brave Canadians who are going to the front and the firing line. We all feel that every dollar given in defence of our Empire in this just war is so much given in defence of liberty, of democracy against autocracy and of right against wrong.

Yours truly,
Ontario Rock Co., Ltd.
per W. A. Stewart, Supt.

This highly appreciated donation was forwarded on the 21st ult., to the headquarters of the Red Cross Society at Quebec for the purchase of medical supplies for the field hospitals, which are part of the first Canadian Contingent.

In a recent issue the Mail and Empire said: "For the purchase of medical supplies, money is needed and needed badly. The men in the field, who face the Mausers and the shells, are the ones who demand our first care. They are doing this work and facing wounds, sickness and death for us. Will you help?"

Easiest Way to Remove Ugly Hairy Growths

(Beauty Culture)

Here is a method for removing hair or fuzz that is unfailing and is quite inexpensive: Mix a thick paste with some powdered delatone and water and spread on hairy surface. After 2 or 3 minutes, rub it off, when the skin and every trace of hair has vanished. No harm or inconvenience results from this treatment, but be careful to get genuine delatone.

Is Charged With Insanity

Respected Resident of Smith Remanded on Lamentable Charge

A sad case came before the Police Magistrate this morning when a well known and respected resident of Smith appeared before the Court on a charge of insanity. Some days ago the unfortunate man was held on a charge of being drunk in a local option district and remanded for enquiries. Since that time it has been learnt it is said that the defendant's family lived in fear of him for he slept with a razor under his pillow for no apparent reason and threatened to kill his children. Hence the charge. He was remanded for eight days the police being at present not ready to proceed with the charge.

Music & Drama

With the turning of the leaves comes the return of Guy Bros. to Peterborough. The well known minstrel attraction was back at the Grand last night and entertained a large crowd. Many of the old favourites are still with the Guys, while a number of new artists added variety to the bill. The first part was well up to the average and the olio was bright and clever. The outstanding feature was undoubtedly the wonderful dancing of Berlin Fitzgerald and Urban, whose performance was one of the best ever seen here.

EVANGELIST CROSSLEY'S SERVICES

Shall our views of the Lord be wrong or right? A heathenish or monstrous view of Him, leaves us irreligious or perverted, while proper scriptural teaching, yielding to the Holy Spirit's influence make for a normal Christian experience. These were some of the thoughts brought out by Evangelist Crossley in St. James' church last evening. To-night's theme, "The Highway to Heaven" will be presented in a song sermon. The services are bright, entertaining, sane and spiritual, and good congregations are in attendance. Rev. Mr. Johnston was among those noticed last night. The solos of Mr. Crossley were rendered in his inimitable style, while his Bible reading served as a basis of appeal for men to lead and others to join a definite personal Christian service.

Finance Committee To Meet To-night

A meeting of the Finance Committee of the City Council will be held to-night at eight o'clock. The committee will be waited upon by a deputation from the Industrial Association, who will ask for an appropriation of $000 to carry on the work of the Association.

Countryside At The Keene Fair

Afternoon Was a Natural Delight--Beats and Antes Brought Crowds--Keen Contest in Horse Exhibits--Close But Friendly Rivalry Between Staples and Hanbidge Stables--Not a Hitch to the Big Show.

The annual fall fair held at Keene yesterday under the auspices of the Otonabee Agricultural Society more than delighted the directors and their visitors. The number of exhibits passed the thousand mark, the attendance was easily two thousand and the weather was the kind you sigh for on the fourth of July or January.

The fall fair is about the only distraction remaining to the residents of Keene and the immediate countryside. Time was when the boys used to fight up for the slightest occasion and the display of agricultural products called for a degree of hilarity that should have been confined to the bar where it was produced. Those were the old days, however. While there was always something proper and correct in the Keene atmosphere, the present generation breathes a degree of rarified ozone that eliminates all unseemliness and even effects to visitors. As a result, the fair and its visitors display a sobriety, propriety and the other qualities that abound where Mrs. Grundy is queen and everyone acknowledges her sovereignty.

The whoops have disappeared with their cause from the Keene fair and none of the visitors regret the absence of the combination. The rational neighbourly spirit manifested, the keen and intelligent interest in the displays and the judging, the good order shown, all these are of the new regime and certainly to be preferred to the old.

Many Visitors.

Among the visitors were four hundred farmers from Rice Lake points brought in by the Rainbow and Geneva. There were also quite a number of the Indians from Hiawatha and Alderville, including the brass band. The sprinkling of Peterborough representatives was a generous one.

The automobile has made fifteen miles an insignificant run, and the dust on the road from Peterborough had barely time to settle until the late hours of evening. One local group that had an afternoon's sport to their liking were Fred Jones, Robt. Gibbs, J. M. Brooks and R. J. Munro. They had charge of the races with Mr. Jones as starter and the others judging. Not a kick from the horsemen and the early completion of the cards were an evidence of the satisfactory work in the judges' stand. The Keene directors would be well advised to reserve automobiles within the grounds and not force visitors to the necessity of using the highway or of hunting an unused shed. There is plenty of room on the grounds and a space should be set apart for the cars. Visitors want to be seen in their cars, too, a consideration that should not be overlooked. Where's the distinction of owning a car if you have to foot it through the gates with the rest of the pedestrians.

Enjoyed the "Beauties."

The Peterborough crowd had a "big time" finding amusements, and nearby everyone spoke of the dramatic catchwork on the long hillside across the Indian River. The fair grounds, on the west side, look down upon the blue ribbon of river and out upon the stretch of marsh that extends to the farther shore, where a lofty bank rises, covered with trees as far as the eye can reach. The scenic grandeur of this vista of autumnal tints baffles description and memory. It alone was worth a visit to Keene on an afternoon like yesterday. Here at your feet is an old stone mill. The steady trilling of water lilts to you from a little dam above which tame ducks gabble and feed. Below it you notice a wood duck skim from the weeds down the river and out of sight. The pale green of the marsh shows clumps of purple here and there, and of canary yellow where lofty shrubs contribute to autumn riot of colour. There is a pale greyish purple fringe here and there, but toward the farther shore the scheme dissolves into the more vivid hues of the maples, beeches, oaks, birch and pine. The tints show in patches like the crazywork attempted on quilts. But the comparison is immeasurably weak. There is nothing that nearly approaches this autumnal display. The maples stand out in red of numerous hues, the birches are a greenish yellow, the beeches stand out in russets and browns; the oaks run to dark reds; and shading gently from patch to patch of distinguishable tints are the multi-coloured, indefinable hues in pales, mild effects. And topping the slope are the tips of the tall pines, while far up steam is the dark red of cedars. After enjoying the natural picture, Mr. T. H. Hooper came to the conclusion that the directors overlooked something when they did not advertise this silent specialty easily seen from the fair grounds.

The Races.

The results of the races were as follows:

Green Trot—
Phil Ha-ha, 1st money.
Sir Walter 2nd money.
Cinderella 3rd.

In this race R. Elmhirst and J. Elmhirst fought it out, but Phil Ha-ha showed the way home in three straights.

Free-for-All.—
Jimmy Direct, 1st.
Dr. Johnston, 2nd.
City Queen 3rd.

Murton Storey, behind the Montgomery horse, had a comparatively easy time making it three straights. In the first heat Dr. Johnston had all the best of it until the home stretch, and was beat out at the wire. Dr. Johnston is a Fife horse and City Queen belongs to W. Elmhirst.

The novelty race resulted as follows: H. Weir, first; G. Howson, 2nd; E. Wood, 3rd. It was the usual hitch, one walk around, one pace and unhitch at the wire.

Particular Events.

The lady drivers' contest had four entries, the winners displaying clever work behind the reins. The winners were—1 Mrs. W. H. Kidd, 2 Mrs. Gil-Howson, 3 Miss Wood.

The judge had his hands full in the special single horse in buggy, speed, style and action to be considered.

There wer about fifteen entries, the very cream of horseflesh on the grounds. At first it appeared that the prizes were going to the Staples and Hanbidge horses, but the bunch were sent out on the big ring for speed, and the official returns were—1 Erastus Wood, 2 W. Elmhirst, 3 J. F. Staples.

It might be remarked that this feature seemed decidedly hard to judge, and while the contestants were all satisfied, the fact that a decision was reached was due to willingness of the contestants to assist the judge. Otherwise they would still be at it.

Reversed Millbrook.

The Peterborough people were deeply interested in the judging of the single horses in buggy 15 1-2 hands and over.

There were three entries. J. F. Staples had one and the Hanbidge boys had the other two. In Millbrook, if memory serves us right, the same horses were contesting and the judge gave first to Wasson Hanbidge with his bay; 2nd to the Hanbidge black, and the third to the Staples horse. All the wise ones gathered round the ring yesterday. The judge awarded 1st prize to Staples, thus reversing the decision in Millbrook. The Hanbidge boys drove out of the ring without waiting for the blue and white ribbons of second and third prizes.

The Alderville Band.

The gaiety of the afternoon was heightened by the selections offered by the Alderville Indians' Brass Band. It was composed of the following:

Sam Blaker—Solo cornet,
Wm. Hager—Solo cornet.
Amos Maraden—1st cornet.
Wilfrid Sunday—Solo alto.
Ernest Crowe—Trombone.
Joshua Blaker—Tenor.
Norman Morrison—Baritone.
Ebenezer Blaker—Bass.
Jim Blaker—Big drum.
Art Simpson—Snare drum.

Sam Blaker was conductor yesterday. Chief Comego, who is a clarinette of note, was in the crowd. He did not bring along his instrument and as a result the reed section was not represented. Some of the other boys could not get away, but at that the band played "Silver Threads Among the Old" with a depth of pathos. On one occasion they played a "quick hit," something in six-eighths, keeping time to Jimmy Direct and Dr. Johnston on the up stretch. This was regular circus stuff. Most of the boys dispense with music — the printed sheets—except the solo cornetists, who engage a boy to hold up the page in order that they will miss none of the melody cadenzas that are thrown in here and there. The solo men, Blaker and Hager at times gave a fine exhibition of double tonguing. Mention should be made of the modest bass. He didn't miss a note all afternoon, and now and then threw in a run of bass notes that rolled out across the valley to the silent maples in the distance.

Not Much War Stuff.

That Otonabee crowd presented a suggestion of solidarity, stolidarity and independence that was unmistakable. There were not many men modelled after the street car posters, but somehow or other you knew they had the goods. They are centred upon their own affairs. One group of three were discussing a barn that had been built in record time. Another pair talked threshing. Others went over points in one of the horse classes and so on. You heard not a note of warfare except from reminders from the Red Cross girls who sold flags at 10 cents each.

Patriotic Concert.

In the evening a patriotic concert was held in the Town Hall in aid of the Red Cross hospital work. Some of the numbers on the programme were rendered by local musicians. Mr. George Lightcart of St. Paul's choir, a favourite local tenor, captivated the audience by a splendid rendering of the war number, "The Watch on the Rhine," and was called on for an encore. Mr. C. H. Davey of St. John's acted as accompanist and also rendered a patriotic selection. It is understood that the proceeds were handed over to the Red Cross.

FAIR NOTES.

The first motion-photographic display was uniformly good.

Geo. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., and Mrs. Gillespie were down yesterday. Mr. Gillespie judged the dairy exhibits.

Mick Rennetti missed his calling. After listening to him "barking" grapes at 20 cents a basket, about 5.30 p.m. one was surprised at his volubility and persuasive powers.

The Board seems to have a grouch or two on its list. Some one was yelling more than necessary at one stage of the proceedings.

J. J. Duffus believes there should be more Fords "down Keene way" and spent the day shooting the farmers a fine exhibit.

Geo. Wesley and Elerie White worked overtime for the Oak Hall exhibit. They also rendered the Red Cross girls first aid in groping "come ons" from the city.

Secretary Shearer is just as obliging as ever.

A Peterborough business man declares that the young farmer with the best horse and rig outside of the fairest girl. Bad news.

H. M. Bishop enjoyed the scenery, anyway.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Thompson and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Skuce motored down and enjoyed a large afternoon.

Jeff O'Brien and Tommy Hooper had designs on some of the art exhibits. Money wouldn't buy the prize winning heirlooms and the vigilance committee stayed on the job.

Jas. Thompson, M.P.P., was there with the glad hand. Some of the boys down that way are said to be a trifle peeved with the Toronto resident. Seems he got Doure some road or other money for the first time and any extra efforts from Doure don't tickle some of the stalwarts. The Otonabee farmer who related it said: 'Let's change the subject. How are the poor benighted Russians?

PROMINENT EXHIBITORS.

While there were quite a number of outside exhibits that were worthy of extended reference it was remarked that there were but few practical displays of an agricultural character at the Keene Fair.

S. F. REDMOND'S HERD OF DURHAM CATTLE.

One of the most interesting stock exhibits on the grounds was the fine herd of thorough-bred Durhams, shown by Mr. S. F. Redmond, of "Elm Grove" Farm, Lot 22, in the 13th Concession of Otonabee.

Altogether three were nine excellent specimens of record breading and feeding, all of whom were much admired by the hundreds of visitors at the Fair. Stock men and buyers were present who carefully inspected and admired the herd, and must have appreciated the skill and care which the animals showed.

In this class, Mr. Redmond carried off six first prizes and three seconds, as follows: For aged cow, 1st and 2nd; yearling heifer, 1st and 2nd; two-year-old heifer, 1st; bull calf, 1st; beef grades, 1st and 2nd; three-year-old dairy cow, 1st.

Mr. Redmond devotes special attention to cattle raising, and has a wide reputation for superior breeding of Durham cattle. The animals shown at the Keene Fair were only a partial selection picked from his field at random(and as he remarked, he left at home many fine specimens which he did not care to bring so far to exhibit.

Mr. Redmond also made an exhibit of pure-bred Shropshire sheep, his pen carrying off three first prizes and two seconds, as follows: Aged ewe, 1st and 2nd; ewe lambs, 1st and 2nd; shearling ewe, 1st.

NOVEL DISPLAY OF CLOTHING BY "OAK HALL," PETERBOROUGH.

In their handsome palace marquee, the "Oak Hall" Clothing Store, of Peterborough, made a very creditable display of men's and boys' fall and winter suits, overcoats, caps, sweaters, etc. The excellent patterns were shown in a neatly arranged fashion and ticketed at regular selling prices. The materials in the suits were Canadian and English tweeds in browns and greys, and checked patterns; warm fabrics that appear to have been selected with special care and made up for the "Oak Hall" regular trade. Carefully tailored single breasted men's sack suits, with soft roll lapels, and either two or three buttons, with good mohair linings, were shown at $10, $12.50 and $15.00, and certainly looked like extra good values, when compared with prices hitherto known in such dressers. The father of a family of four boys, who was on the ground, volunteered the remark that he had been well satisfied with his dealings at "Oak Hall." He had dealt elsewhere since coming to Peterborough until last fall, when he was induced by his wife to try "Oak Hall." He said: "I had $15 coupons to buy for my five boys, and after fairly comparing values, I decided to fit them out at "Oak Hall," where I bought five first-class Chinchilla coats that were superior in every way to what I was shown elsewhere."

This exhibit attracted thousands of visitors, as all had to pass by it on entering the grounds. In the vicinity of the Fair and throughout the grounds "Oak Hall" attractive coloured signs loomed up conspicuously, each one bearing some such strong legend as: "Men swear by our men's wear," etc., Mr. Geo. Wesley had charge of the exhibit and was kept busy answering enquiries, while his assistant, Mr. White, was industriously circulating "Oak Hall" advertising.

SINGER SEWING MACHINES.

One of Keene's enterprising merchants, Mr. George T. Gall, made a display of Singer Sewing Machines in the main building. The specimens shown were those made by the well-known Singer Manufacturing Co., known as drop-head machines, and were richly finished in quarter oak. Ladies were frequently to be seen enquiring all about these machines, and doubtless Mr. Gall has new prospects in sight as the result of his exhibit. He also made a display of cattle and poultry foods, and annual medicines manufactured by The International Cattle Food Co., which are well-known among firms and stock-raisers.

CANOE EXHIBIT.

Mr. Robert J. Brown of Keene showed a smart looking model of a double canoe built by himself. It was much admired by good judges, and showed first-class workmanship in every detail. It is a strong, single rib, basswood canoe, 16 feet long, 32 inch beam and has a carrying capacity of between 800 and 1,000 pounds. It should be well adapted for a hunter's canoe, and as the season of the year was well advanced, hunters and sportsmen like himself intends going extensively into the canoe manufacturing this fall, having already received quite a number of good orders, several of which are from Peterborough, Ont. He is deserving of credit for his skill and workmanship.

INSURING GOOD DIGESTION

IMPORTANCE OF PREVENTING FOOD FERMENTATION IN STOMACH

Good digestion usually means good health, for long as the stomach does its work properly disease can find no lodgment in the human system; the liver, kidneys and intestines will perform their work properly and remain in perfect health; but permit anything to interfere with the proper digestion of food, an unending train of troubles is set in motion. About the only thing that will upset the stomach and interfere with digestion is an excess of acid, usually caused by food fermentation. Food fermentation is due to chemical action in the food itself. This fermentation causes the formation of gas, or wind, as well as acid, resulting in the unnatural distention of the stomach and the burning by the acid of the delicate lining of the stomach. Medicine and tonics cannot remove this condition—they usually make it worse. The fermentation and acid are to blame and these must be overcome and prevented by taking after meals a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. Physicians recommend bisurated magnesia especially because it stops and prevents fermentation of food and neutralizes the acid instantly, making it bland and harmless, without irritating the stomach in any way. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist and try it the next time your food ferments and upsets your stomach. Note how quickly the acid is neutralized and how soon you forget that you have such a thing as a stomach.

The boys that make the noise and disburse cash for the series, are mobilising. Skirmishers are already on the scene and the investment of Shibe Park will be completed by noon to-day.

Edward Lynch, aged 10, appeared at the bleacher gate at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He brought a soapbox and a smile with him and will be there when the gates open on Friday. Soon after Edward established himself a second young man arrived, and by midnight there were fifty men and boys on guard. The life was constantly growing to-day.

There was an overwhelming demand for reserved seats to-day despite the fact that the sale closed yesterday, with nearly 10,000 rabid fans still standing in line. The only way the last comer could get a ticket was to hand over $25 or so to some quiet spoken gent in a hotel lobby. Such gents are called speculators and they appear to be well supplied with what they want to sell and the fans want to buy. Weather man Bliss was as non-committal as the war censor to-day in his communique as to the operations in the clouds. It turned warmer and there was a slight leakage from the skies early to-day, but the forecaster was not prepared to say whether this leak would be plugged or would grow in proportions for to-morrow's game.

FORBES IN FINE SHAPE FOR SATURDAY'S BOUT

When Alf. Hardy and Jack Forbes clash in their wrestling bout Saturday night Peterborough fans will see two of the fastest wrestlers in the game, both being as quick as lightning. Forbes says he isn't worrying over the outcome of his mat battle. "I feel better than I ever did before," he says. "I run five miles before breakfast, skip, wrestle and box in the afternoon for about an hour and finish up with a cold bath.

"I am going all out to win, and in Hardy I am meeting one of the best boys in the world at his weight, as he proved last Saturday in his long bout with Edmunds.

Charlie Fraser, who meets Gene Hurtubise on the same night is a rough-house artist, one of those who would rather fight than eat. He has met the best of them in his time, including Dr. Roller, Gus Americus, Pat Conneley, the Irish Giant, and a host of others. So it's up to Hurtubise.

The fact that the points were split up by the different competitors in yesterday's trials means [illegible] will fall [illegible] mains settlefactory.

Interesting details concerning [illegible] being taken in the annual sports this year. There were sixteen entries in the senior high jump and a correspondingly large number in all the other contests.

WHAT KITCHENER HAS DONE WITH ONLY TWO MONTHS WORK

It is only about eight weeks since Lord Kitchener took charge of the War Office and he has accomplished some remarkable work. Canada has had in the dispatch of her Expeditionary Force of rather more than one division some idea of what an undertaking and fitting out of an army is. Some paragraphs from a recent issue of London Truth give some idea of what the Mother Country, under Lord Kitchener's guidance, has been doing.

The Army Council has now completed the framework of the new Army Organization, says Truth, and this is how they have done it. The 6th Division has at last gone abroad, leaving Sir John Jellicoe to take care of invasion. Thus two new divisions, the 7th and 8th, are being formed out of regular troops unallotted to Sir John French's six divisions, together with the units which have been brought home from South Africa and the Mediterranean. When the artillery and transports for these two divisions are ready the Field Marshal will have a fourth army corps under his command, the 5th Corps and a third cavalry division being on their way, if they have not already joined him, from India. Judged by the quantity alone, to say nothing of quality, this force of 200,000 men hardly answers the German Emperor's description of a "contemptible little army."

Now about the new armies. The Army Council have got some half a million or more recruits of the best raw material to play and this is what they have done with them. Six divisions were organized on August 21st, six more on September 11th, and another six on September 13th—18 divisions in all. Here we have the framework of three new Expeditionary Forces amounting in round number to 500,000 officers and men, with another 150,000 more remaining at training centres to replace casualties. As Lord Kitchener pointed out, men are easier to get than arms, ammunition or equipment, but the new War Minister has plenty of driving power in his nature, and he is making the best of it now. The spring will soon come round.

In addition to these three new six-division armies is the prospect of a fourth army, which is to be formed out of reserve battalions created when the Expeditionary Force embarked for foreign service, these battalions being brought up to war strength by new recruits. This will give us another six divisions of what Kaiser William calls "mercenary" troops, or 22 divisions altogether, yielding a total of 640,000 officers and men, who are increased to 710,000 by the Indian Contingent. As this figure does not include Colonials, Territorials or the local corps now to be raised in large numbers throughout the country, it is safe to say that within a year or less we shall have an army in the field amounting to a million of men, with plenty more behind them.

What Central Industrial Association Expects of its Local Branches

Steps Means Possible for Alleviating of Present Conditions Included in Draft of the General Committee's Report.

A draft of the report of the Central Executive Committee of the Industrial Association was to hand at the meeting of the local Association last night. The report was a summary of the situation in Ontario as seen by the committee and suggested remedies.

The report recommends:

(1)—The organization in each municipality of an employment bureau, to obtain unemployment statistics and report to the General Committee so that a comprehensive solution of the problem might be worked out. The organization was of a local branch and a strong executive committee.

(2)—That if possible the work planned as a remedy should be the production of supplies that can be marketed—farm products, pulp wood, live stock, etc.

(3)—Co-operation with the central labour exchange so that tradesmen in need of employment in every part of the province can be given situations should a need for their particular kind of work arise in any other part of the province.

(4)—That as the most effective aid that Canada can offer to the Mother Country during the war is increase in agricultural products that local branches work in accordance with the motto "No Idle Land in 1915." That the attention of local branches should be given to urging agriculturists to increase their production to the limit, and securing statistics in connection with the information received. If the war lasts till spring that the local branches undertake the cultivation of vacant land.

(5)—That municipalities co-operate to have the number of first-class roads in the Province increased.

(6)—That the committee endeavour to arrange with large employers in the north that as far as possible they use Ontario workmen in the cutting of timber and pulp wood.

(7)—That as municipal and other public works can very often be done most cheaply under conditions such as prevail at the present that municipalities not curtail their public work but increase it if possible.

(8)—That to do away as far as feasible with what is known as relief work, that the municipalities be shown the value of organizing the men employed into drill corps, and paying them perhaps enough for board and lodgings. In this way too, by urging all those especially able to enlist they might be the recruiting of a large Canadian contingent there.

(9)—The report also points out the advisability of local bureaus and advises the local committee of funds in Toronto available for loans on chattel mortgage at 6 per cent.

(10)—The Mayor and officers of the local branch should impress on the manufacturers the desirability of reducing the number of working hours instead of cutting down the number of hands.

(11)—Householders and others employing domestic help should be induced not to dismiss servants, chauffeurs, gardeners, etc., but rather to keep them on at reduced wages.

A CADET CORPS AT SOUTH CENTRAL

A Cadet Corps has been organized in connection with South Central School, not King Edward as reported last evening. Between thirty and forty boys have already been enrolled and prospects for a flourishing corps are bright. The boys are most enthusiastic and will undoubtedly make a good showing when they make their first public appearance.

Japanese Women Learning To Copy Western Fashions

Both Newspapers and Magazines Pay Much Attention to Things of Feminine Interest

TOKIO, Oct. 5.—What the Japanese call "western society journalism" is gaining a strong foothold in Japan. Both the newspapers and magazines are paying more attention to the women. Although the practice has not developed to the extent of the women's page as it is known in Canada, the newspapers make it a particular point to tell what women are doing, and, like the magazines, make a specialty of their history, their fads, and their future.

Among the wives of the Cabinet members, all of whom are found especially interesting, the Countess Okuma, consort of the Premier, is generally held up as a model, possessing all the virtues of which Japanese women are famous. She not only presides over the most celebrated kitchen in Japan, which is capable of serving thousands of guests at one time, but she is known and respected for her noble character and fine womanly qualities.

The Count and Countess have been married now for forty-five years. She, before her marriage, was Aranbo, the eldest daughter of a vassal of the Shogun. She was sought out by Count Okuma, who, unlike most of the young men of the turbulent Restoration days, was determined to find a woman of fine character and good home training. She has always devoted herself to her husband. A notable instance was when, 25 years ago, the Count who brought home wounded in the leg by a bomb. The physicians declared that the leg must be amputated. The Countess made a prompt decision when she was told it was the only way to save his life, and after the operation she became more devoted still.

Baroness Kato Holds High Place.

The Baroness Kato, wife of the foreign minister, perhaps has had one of the widest social experiences of any Japanese woman. Daughter of the late Baron Iwasaki, she came from one of the wealthiest families in Japan, and as the wife of Baron Kato she has taken a prominent position, especially in London society, where Baron Kato was formerly Ambassador. She is clever and accomplished, and has complete mastery of English.

A magazine account of how Baron Kato came to marry her is current just now: Young Kato, serving as head of a branch office of a banking concern of which Baron Iwasaki was president, made such an impression that Baron Iwasaki presented him with a gold watch.

"I thank you very much," replied the young man, "but I am not yet in a position to wear such a valuable object. When I am worthy to have it I shall ask for it. Would you keep it for me till that time comes?"

The kind gentleman agreed, and became still further impressed with his young protege when the latter demanded a receipt for the watch.

Some time later he invited young Kato to his house. "I took charge of your watch at Osaka a few years ago," he said. "Let me give it back to you now with its interest." Calling his daughter, Haruko-san, beside him, he continued: "By interest I mean my daughter. Would you marry her?"

Thus Kato entered the Iwasaki family.

Mrs. Yukio Osaki, wife of the Minister of Justice, and the daughter of Baron and Baroness Osaki, who was an English woman, also has a romance. It was the postman who brought Miss Osaki and Yukio Osaki, then mayor of Tokio, together.

As the same was the same the postman frequently delivered the young lady's letters to the mayor and vice versa. They met at a dinner party and laughed over the postman's mistakes and shortly afterwards took the matter much more seriously, for they were married. As the wife of the mayor, Mrs. Okako has been hostess at many brilliant affairs. She has written several volumes and is now completing a collection of love stories and tragedies of old Japan.

Rules for Married Men.

When Dr. Kitoburo Ichiki, Minister of Education, was married, Mr. Akada, the bride's father, gave the couple five rules of matrimonial life, which are reproduced as follows:

1. Love is essential to matrimonial life, but familiarity harms it.
2. Indulgence in love is a cause of losing it. Modesty and respect to each other must not be forgotten even for a day.
3. Husband commands, the wife must obey; but the wife sometimes may command, and the husband must obey. It is a secret of the sweet home.
4. Without fixed property, no one can have a settled mind; affection between husband and wife is kept complete with fixed property.
5. Home is, as it were, a boat; life is like a voyage on the sea. Rough waves will threaten it, if it is not rowed by husband and wife with joint efforts.

Mrs. Yosano, one of the most popular Japanese women poets of the day, has come forth with some radical ideas about her countrywomen's dress. She says:

"The inactivity which the Japanese kimono costume brings about is in itself a kind of unrest, and the Japanese dress must be improved in this respect so as to keep pace with the march of civilization. Japanese women are defective in original ideas and follow blindly the law imposed upon them by others. In matter of dress they do not seem to take any interest and do not attempt to improve their own dress so as to afford them greater comfort. I have previously said the French style is preferable; this is already an idea. As a matter of fact, Japan ought to have a dress appropriate to the new conditions of society. If the foreign dress was followed, dressers could be made out of Japanese materials and could be made much cheaper than foreign dresses.

"It may be argued that foreign dress does not agree with the Japanese way of living, but if we do not make some changes in our method of living no improvement can be effected. It seems best to decide where it can be made with the least trouble. It is my opinion that the improvement of dress will be brought about by female students before others because they enjoy so much freedom and have so many opportunities of going out."

A Wisconsin inventor has patented skis provided with pivoted foot pieces that automatically bend if anyone along over snow or ice on the pivoted foot piece downward past the runners.

GERMANS RIGHT DESPERATELY RESISTING FLANKING MOVEMENT

Battle Has Entered a New Phase of Far-reaching Importance—Germans Are in Dire Need of Antwerp.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT

PARIS, Oct. 9.—It is impossible, in view of the latest official statements, to resist the conclusion that the great battle between the Germans and the allies has entered a new phase of far-reaching importance.

The steady extension of operations on the allies' left is having the effect of transforming into a fresh battle front the long line having its southernmost point in the neighborhood of Roye and its northernmost extremity close to the Belgian frontier, on a line which, prolonged, would reach the sea near Ostend.

The importance of this change is enhanced by the allies' recovery of the German lost ground in the region of Roye. While it would be premature to say that this success has detached the operations on the former front from those wherein the chief interest now lies, the tendency is undoubtedly in that direction.

French military experts regard the presence of such considerable forces of the enemy in the north as a mystery. None of the hypotheses yet advanced regarding them are satisfactory. It is possible that they are supplementary troops that have been drawn from the forces around Antwerp. Such a move would point directly to the Germans' recognition of their precarious position in France.

On the other hand, a further movement of troops from the centre may have taken place; but this, seeing that the centre already has been weakened to strengthen the forces of Gen. Von Kluk, would expose the troops on the new front to fresh risks.

If the German troops in the north are largely new formations, as has been suggested, their resistance to the allies is unlikely to be serious. The general impression is one of continued and increased confidence.

One writer says: "To-morrow the battle will be in Belgium." However, this is not an exaggeration. The view taken by optimists is that the position of the right wing certainly remains satisfactory.

Interesting details concerning the slow but steady advance in Lorraine [illegible] show that this movement has produced valuable results by cleansing the Nancy district of the enemy.

The official communication issued by the French War Office last night says: "On the whole, the situation is stationary, the positions occupied remaining the same, notwithstanding several violent engagements, notably in the region of Roye."

In spite of the gravity attached to the situation at Antwerp, military authorities assert that the vigor of the German attack indicates an inherent weakness of the German position in the west as a whole. With Antwerp in their hands they would be enabled to prepare a new line of defence resting on Antwerp and Brussels and extending east by way of Namur to Metz. This would give them an excellent and not overly extended lines of defence on which to make another stand.

Operations on the German right and the allies' left are becoming more crucial every moment, and, just as Antwerp's fall seems inevitable, the turning operation against Von Kluk is trembling on the point of fruition. Both armies are engaged in a break-neck race in the French departments of the Nord and Pas de Calais, with the cavalry screen thrown almost at the North Sea. Infantry and artillery have been relegated to the rear, while the mounted forces charge each other incessantly, each endeavoring to drive further north. Both forces are now well into Belgian territory, with the allies holding the most favorable ground. French cavalry is reported at Ypres, a bare 25 miles from Ostend, the new temporary capital of Belgium. To understand the manoeuvres now under way, it must be remembered that at the beginning of fighting on the River Aisne the opposing armies stood on almost parallel straight lines. To-day the German right is perpendicular to the centre, and left, with an unceasing operation under way by the allies to get around the tip of Von Kluk's line. If this movement is effected he must double back on the German centre or fight his way through the enveloping columns. Both eventualities are extremely hazardous, and, according to all standards of warfare, he is a loser.

It is whispered in the highest circles that Von Kluk himself realized the gravity of his danger at least two weeks ago. Then he pleaded with the Kaiser to be allowed to fall back on the Valenciennes line, but the German war lord absolutely forbade another retreat. Von Kluk is said to have pointed out the possibility of annihilation if the Aisne line were maintained, but no counsel prevails with the Kaiser except that Von Kluk should advance or stand firm.

All along the main line of operations great conflicts are raging. Lille is suffering under a disastrous fire from German field pieces, and yesterday Roye was again the centre of surging forces.

Austrian Deserters In Italy.

ROME, Oct. 9. — (Via Paris.)—The Italian Government in its endeavor to maintain neutrality is exercising the strictest surveillance over persons coming across the frontier from Austria. Numerous deserters from the Austrian army are taking refuge in Italy and some criminals also are seizing the opportunity to escape punishment in Austria by disguising themselves as deserters and coming into this country.

Many Austrian subjects of Italian birth also have fled to Italy because of their unwillingness to serve in the Austrian army.

ANTWERP HOLDS OUT

HAS KING RETIRED?

LONDON, Oct. 9.—While the immense armies of the belligerent powers of Europe are engaged in death struggles along lines hundreds of miles in extent, in battle which for the numbers engaged, fierceness and stubbornness, have no precedent in history, the intrepid little army of Belgium is making a last stand behind the forts of Antwerp, one of the strongest fortified positions in the world.

The bombardment of Antwerp has been so violent that the houses at Rosendaal, a Netherlands town more than 20 miles distant, have been visibly shaken, according to a telegram from that town to the Central News by way of Amsterdam.

Some wounded civilians have arrived at Rosendaal, and the Dutch Government has ordered all trains to proceed to that place, to be held in readiness to transport the refugees and injured. Thousands of refugees have already arrived.

Throughout the entire night, the message adds, a red glare illuminated the sky.

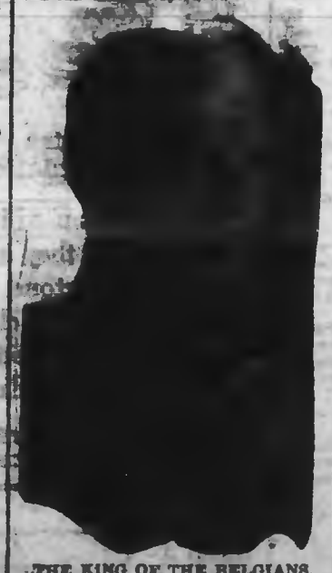
The intensity of the German attack on the city is taken in some quarters to mean that the Germans are preparing a second line of defence stretching from Antwerp to Brussels, Namur and Metz, upon which they can fall back in the event of reverses [illegible] the appearance at 11 o'clock yesterday morning and three yesterday afternoon of German aircraft, which dropped bombs, destroying seven houses and killing a score of people.

An earlier despatch said: On account of the Zeppelins' successful attack of Antwerp the large avenue leading to the railroad station quickly became black with a struggling mass of people eager to escape from the city. Seized with an unreasoning, terrible fear of a bombardment or of a charge of German cavalry, the people are transporting invalids, cripples, and even the occupants of lunatic asylums. It was a pathetic sight to see the poor people, some carrying on their backs their hopelessly maimed or idiotic relatives, who were crowded into railroad vans and transported northward to remain in some cattle shed or railroad platform until rooms can be found for them in Dutch asylums and institutions.

The situation, however, quickly changed again. While at 2 o'clock even grown-up men were weeping with terror and were fighting for places around the railway station, at six o'clock everybody was again certain that the —— forces would be able to hold out against the Germans and even throw them back across the River Nethe, while everybody was telling his neighbor how far superior the —— guns were to the German heavy artillery. The people who are remaining in the city are taking to the cellars, prepared to hear the first German shell in the morning.

The Belgian Ministers are trying to reach Ostend through Flanders and via Holland. The Belgian army is marching into the city, tired out, leaving the guarding of the forts for the night to fresh —— troops.

The blanks are given to denote words cut out by the censor. Evidently they relate to forces and guns brought to Antwerp by the British.



THE KING OF THE BELGIANS.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Hon. W. J. Roche, Minister of the Interior, arrived in Winnipeg yesterday morning after a lengthy sojourn at the Mayo Hospital in Minnesota.

The barn and contents of Ross McLennan, of Bruce Township, were entirely destroyed by fire, caused by lightning. The building was filled with the season's crop.

Rev. E. E. Sayles resigned the pastorate of the Oshawa Baptist Church. He went to Oshawa two and a half years ago, after graduating from McMaster University.

The electrification of the London and Port Stanley Railway, London's road to Lake Erie, will not be delayed on account of the war, and rehabilitation work is being rushed ahead.

Wilfrid Lavendure, a long-term prisoner at the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, was instantly killed yesterday morning by falling from a pile of lumber to the ground, a distance of 20 feet.

P. Corkey's barn, near Harwood, with the season's crop, implements, calves, chickens and hogs, was burned, entailing a severe loss, for he had only a small insurance. It is supposed that children playing around a straw stack started the fire.

Aliens Mustn't Change Names.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—By a special order-in-council, issued last night, any Germans or Austrians engaged in business here who since the outbreak of the war have adopted English names will be required after Oct. 12 to assume the use of their own names. Until further notice, says the order, no "alien enemy" will be allowed to change his name without a special permit from the Secretary of State.

Must Trench Charity.

ROME, Oct. 9. — In an editorial The Observatore Romano reiterates that absolute neutrality of the Holy See and warns Roman Catholics, especially priests, to advocate peace and to preach charity instead of contempt and hatred of enemies, thus interpreting the wishes of the Pope.

THORN IS THE NEXT

Russian Advance Guard is Near the German Fortress—The Advance on Cracow

THE RUSSIAN PROGRESS

LONDON, Oct. 9. — The big battle line between the combined Austro-German armies and the legions of Russian extends from the Galician frontier, near Tarnow, right north to the east Prussian border. Another Russian force is besieging Przemysl, in Galicia, and still another is invading Hungary. On the East Prussian frontier the fighting appears to have come to a standstill for the present. The Russians having driven the Germans back, after their advance to the Niemen river, found on getting to the German border that reinforcements had been brought from Koenigsberg and their further progress was arrested.

Fighting on a larger scale will soon be resumed, and it will then be decided whether the Germans are to retrade Russia in this region or the Russians are again to overrun Prussia.

The Tribuna of Rome publishes a Petrograd despatch to the effect that the Russians have driven the Germans from Vloclavsck (Russian Poland), and that the Russians have arrived within a few miles of the fortress at Thorn, in East Prussia.

A Petrograd despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. says the Russians have completed the administrative organization of the conquered regions around Lemberg, and that they have divided the province into thirteen districts.

The Russian troops, adds the despatch, are advancing slowly but irresistibly upon Cracow, the population of which has already been reduced by one-half.

An official statement issued yesterday by the War Office says that the main Russian army in Poland has taken the offensive against the Austro-German forces along the River Vistula.

Russians Occupy Big Area.

ROME, Oct. 9 (Via London).—In making answer to the statement from Vienna that the Russians have been completely driven out of Hungary, the Russian ambassador to Italy declared yesterday that Russian forces now occupy the entire province of Bukowina, seven-eighths of Galicia and one-fifth of Hungary, all the passes in the Carpathian Mountains, and the Hungarian towns of Ungvar, Munkecs and Saigot.

These towns are in the eastern part of Hungary, between 30 and 40 miles from the Galician border. They are roughly 200 miles east of Budapest. Their populations run from 15,000 to 20,000 each.

SUBMARINE RECOVERED.

Italian Officer's Escapade Results In Ignoble Return.

LEGHORN, Italy, Oct. 9. — The cruise of the Italian-built submarine which disappeared from the Gulf of Spezia some days ago and later turned up at Ajaccio, Corsica, has come to an end. The French authorities of Ajaccio, who took possession of the vessel, asked Paris what disposition they should make of her. Paris communicated with Rome, Italy sent a destroyer to get the submarine, and there is reason to believe that she is now on her way home under this convoy.

The submarine was under the command of a retired naval lieutenant, Angelo Bellone, who, leaving a letter in which he said Italian neutrality was a mistake and that it was the duty of every Italian to work individually to bring about Italian intervention in the present war, headed for the open sea. Here Bellone said to his crew that he had been entrusted with a secret mission and that he was on his way to the island of Corsica. Then the crew grew suspicious and informed the authorities.

Would Dive For Mines.

TOKIO, Oct. 9.—Hundreds of women shell divers of Shima Province offered their service to the navy to clear the mines from Kiaochow Bay. The offer was declined, as the law prohibits the employment of women in warlike operations. These divers are accustomed to remain in the water for a long period. Their idea was that unseen by the enemy, they could dive for the mines near Kiaochow and remove them to the Japanese warships.

TELLS STORY OF BATTLE

British Naval Officer Describes Sinking of Austrian Ships.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—An officer of the British Mediterranean squadron writes to The Times as follows, describing recent fighting in the Adriatic Sea: We got wind of the Austrians bombarding Antivari, so we planned an attack at 5.30 next morning. A cruiser squadron consisting of Frenchmen and British patrolled the side of the Adriatic during the night. We turned so that we might be off Antivari at 5.30 next morning, and the French squadron turned so as to be to the westward of us. We intended to look in at Durazzo on the way up, but we were late. We increased to full speed, but the Austrians sighted us coming from the southward, and at once steamed north. The French fleet were in such a position that as the enemy went northward they ran right into the arms of a huge fleet.

The Austrians were very inferior, having only two small cruisers, two destroyers and certain heavy ships. We opened fire, and the destroyers sank immediately. The enemy cruisers returned the fire, but after about three minutes both ships caught fire, and were a burned mass. Suddenly there was a huge mass of dense, black smoke, followed by an explosion. The ships could be seen with their bows at right angles to the water. In less than a second both ships sank with all hands. Cheers went up from the fleet. We did not open fire, but followed closely in the rear, and then turned southward steaming out at full speed."

TROOPS AT SOUTHAMPTON

Three Battleloads of Canadians Arrived and Others Are Near.

SOUTHAMPTON, Oct. 9. — The ships belonging to the Cunard Line are anchored in port here with the first contingent of Canadian troops. Other vessels with Canadians are reported.

The city is full of staff officers and steamship officials, who will supervise the transportation of the troops on the next stage of their journey.

The people here are enthusiastic over the arrival of the Canadians, and are preparing to give them a hearty welcome.

Borden Going To England?

OTTAWA, Oct. 9.—It is stated on good authority that Sir Robert Borden will go to England shortly to discuss matters of Dominion-wide concern with Hon. Geo. H. Perley and Premier Asquith. No confirmation of this could be obtained last night, but leading Conservative members of Parliament who are in the city declared that the Prime Minister finds it necessary to go to England at the present time.

Loss of Destroyer Admitted.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 9.—A telegram from Berlin says that the evening papers of the German capital announce that on the afternoon of Oct. 6 the German torpedo boat destroyer S126 was sunk by a British submarine and that nearly all the crew was saved.

The sinking of the German destroyer was announced by the British Admiralty Wednesday, but the destruction of the craft was not given. The S126 was built in 1904-5 and was 210 feet in length. She carried three 4-pounders and three torpedo tubes. Her crew was fifty men.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

"Stars? You see them—really see them?" faltered he. "Oh, for my sight again! Oh, that I might see them once, only once, those wonderful things of ancient story! Then, verily, I should be glad to die!"

Midnight.

Hard-driven now for many hours, heated, yet still running true, the Pauillac had at length made a safe landing on the western verge of the Abyss. Again the voyagers felt solid earth beneath their feet. By the clear starlight Stern had brought the machine to earth on a little plateau, wooded in part, partly bare sand. Numb and stiff, he had alighted from the driver's seat, and had helped both passengers alight.

The girl, radiant with joy, had kissed him full upon the lips; the patriarch had fallen on his knees, and, gathering a handful of the sand—the precious surface of the earth, long fabled among his Folk, long worshipped in his deepest reveries—had clasped it to his thin and heaving breast.

If he had known how to pray he would have worshipped there. But even though his lips were silent, his attitude, his soul were at one vast and heartfelt prayer—prayer to the mother-earth, the unseen stars, the night, the wind upon his brow, the sweet and subtle airs of heaven that enfolded him like like a caress.

Stern wrapped the old man in a spare mantle, for the night was chill, then made a crackling fire on the sands. Worn out, they rested, all. Little they said. The beauty and majesty of night now—seen again after long absence—a hundred times more solemn than they had ever known it, kept the two Americans from speech. And the old man, buried in his own thoughts, sat by the fire, burning with a fever of impatient longings for the dawn.

Now all across the eastern sky, shrouded as it was with the slow, silent mist-wreaths rising ghostly from the Abyss, delicate pink and pearl-grey tints were spreading, shading above to light blues and to purples of exquisite depth and clarity.

No clud flecked the sky, the wondrous sky of early spring. Dawn, pure as on the primal day, was climbing from the eastern depths. And, thrilled by that eternal miracle, the man and woman, hand in hand, awaited the full coming of the light.

The patriarch spoke.

"Is the sun nigh arisen now?" he queried in a strange, awed voice, trembling with eagerness and deep emotion. "Is it coming, at last—the sun?"

"From which direction does it come? Am I facing it?" he asked, with pitiful anxiety.

"You're facing it. The first rays will fall on you. Only be patient. I promise you it shall not fail!"

A pause. Then the aged man spoke again.

"Remember, oh, my children," said he, with terrible earnestness, "all that I have told you, all that you must know. Remember how to deal with my people. They are as children in your hands. Be very patient, very firm and wise; all will be well.

"Remember my warnings of the Great Vortex, so very far below our sea, the Lanskaarn, and all those other perils of the Abyss whereof I have spoken. Remember, too, all the traditions of the Cave of Records. Some day, when all else is accomplished, you may find that cave. I have told you everything I know of its location. Seek it some day, and find the history of the dead, buried past, from the time of the great catastrophe to the final migration when my ancestors sought the lower sea."

Another silence. All three were too deeply moved for any speech. And ever mounting higher, brighter and more clear, dawn flung its glories wide across the sky.

"Help me that I may stand, to greet the day!" at last the patriarch said. "I cannot rise, alone."

Stern and the girl, each taking an arm, got him to his feet. He stood there facing the east, priestlike in venerable and solemn worship of the coming sun.

"Give me each a hand, my children," he commanded. In Stern's hand strong, corded, toil-worn, he laid the girl's.

"Thus do I give you each to each," said he. "Thus do I make you one!"

Stern drew Beatrice into his arms. Blind though the old man was, he sensed the act, and smiled. A great and holy peace had shrouded him.

"Only that I may feel the sun upon my face!" breathed he.

Beatrice looked at Stern. He shook his head.

"Not yet," he answered.

Swiftly uprose the sun. The morning wind dispelled the shrouding vapors.

"Oh, what is this warmth?" exclaimed the patriarch, trembling violently. "What is this warmth, this glow upon my face This life, this—"

Out toward the east he stretched both hands. Instinctively the priestlike worship of the sun, old when the world was still in infancy, surged back to him again after the long, lost centuries of darkness and oblivion.

"The sun! The sun!" he cried, his voice triumphant as a trumpet-call. Tears coursed from his blind eyes; but on his lips a smile of joy unutterable was set.

"The sun! At last! The—"

Stern caught his feeble body as he fell.

Down on the sands they laid him. To the thrilled heart Stern laid his ear.

Tears were in his eyes, too, and in the girl's as Stern shook his head, silently.

Up over the time-worn, the venerable, the kindly face they drew the mantle, but not before each had reverently kissed the wrinkled forehead.

"Better thus," whispered the engineer. "Far better, every way. He had his wish: he felt the sunshine on his face; his outgoing spirit must be mingled with that worshipped light and air and sky—with dawn — with spring-time—"

"With life itself!" said Beatrice.

And through her tears she smiled, while higher rose the warm life-giving sun of spring.

BOOK III.

The After Glow.

CHAPTER I.

Death, Life, and Love.

Life! Life again, and light, the sun and the fresh winds of heaven, the perfect azure of a June sky, the perfume of the passionate red blooms along the lips of the chasm, the full-throated song of hidden birds within the wood to eastward—life, beauty, love—such, the sunrise hour when Allan and the girl once more stood side by side in the outer world, delivered from the perils of the black Abyss.

Hardly more real than a disordered nightmare now, the terrible fall into those depths, the captivity among the white barbarians, the battles and the ghastly scenes of war, the labours the perilous escape.

All seemed to fall and fade away from these two lovers, all save their joy in life and in each other, their longing for the inevitable greater passion, pain and joy, their clear-eyed outlook into the vast and liimtless possibilities of the future, their future and the world's.

And as they stood there, hand in hand beside the body of the fallen patriarch—he whose soul had passed in peace, even at the moment of his life's fulfilment, his knowledge of the sun—awe overcame them both. With a new tenderness, mingled with reverent adoration, Stern drew the girl once more to him.

Her face turned up to his and her arms tightened about his neck. He kissed her brow beneath the parted masses of her wondrous hair. His lips rested a moment on her eyes; and then his mouth sought hers and burned its passion into her very soul.

Suddenly she pushed him back, panting. She had gone white; she trembled in his clasp.

"Oh, your kiss—oh, Allan, what is this I feel?—it sems to choke me!" she gasped, clutching her full bosom where her heart leaped like a prisoned creature. "Your kiss—it is so different now! No, no—not again—not yet!"

He released her, for he, too was shaking in the grip of new, fierce passions.

"Forgive me!" he whispered. "I—I forgot myself, a moment. Not yet—no, not yet. You're right, Beatrice. A thousand things are pressing to be done. And love—must wait!"

He clenched his fists and strode to the edge of the chasm, where for a while, he stood alone and silent, gazing far down and away, mustering himself, striving to get himself in leash once more.

Then suddenly he turned and smiled.

"Come, Beta," said he. "All this must be forgotten. Let's get to work. The whole world's waiting for us, for our labour. It's eager for our toil!"

She nodded. In her eyes the fire had died, and now only the light of comradeship and trust and hope glowed once again.

"Allan?"

"Yes?"

"Our first duty—" She gestured toward the body of the patriarch, nobly still beneath the rough folds of the mantle they had drawn over it.

He understood.

"Yes," murmured he. "And his grave shall be for all the future ages a place of pilgrimage and solmen thought. Where first, one of lost Folk issued again into the world and where he died, this shall be a monument of the new time now coming to its birth

"His grave shall lie here on this height, where the first sun shall each day for ages fall upon it, supreme in its deep symbolism. Forever it shall be a memorial, not of death, but life, of liberty, of hope!"

They kept a moment's silence, then Stern added:

"So now, to work!" From the biplane he fetched the axe. With this he cut and trimmed a branch from a near-by fir. He sharpened it to a flat blade three or four inches across. In the deep red sand along the edge of th Abyss he set to work, scooping the patriarch's grave.

In silence Beatrice took the axe and also laboured, throwing the sand away. Together, in an hour, they had dug a trench sufficiently deep and wide.

"This must do, for now," said Stern, looking up at last. "Some time he shall have fitting burial, but for the present we can do no more. Let us now commit his body to the earth, the Great Mother which created and which waits always to give everlasting sleep, peace, rest."

TOMMIES LIKE MUSIC

Deprived of Bands, British Soldiers Whistle the Marseillaise

"Tommy Atkins" has never taken kindly to the abolition of the regimental band on active service. He likes to go into battle to music, and, in fact, it has been found necessary to retain a few pipers with the Scottish regiments, and a limited number of fifers with the Irish, but the British "Tommies" have been deprived of their music, and have supplied it themselves. The soldiers now go into battle whistling, and whistling has become a voluntary part of their drill. No one who has not heard a regiment marching, every man whistling in time, can imagine how inspiring it is. One of the most interesting features of this improvised music is the rehabilitation of the Marseillaise. Of course everyone knows that it is the national air of France, but in England it has been appropriated by the Socialists. Now, however, it is the favorite marching tune of the British soldiers who are fighting alongside the French and every British regiment is whistling it on the march.

PASSING THE DOCTOR

How Volunteers Are Tested For Physical Fitness in Britain

When a man goes up to be examined by the doctor with a view of joining the forces and being sent to the front he has to go through a tremendous lot of tests. Heart, lungs, teeth, etc., but particular attention is paid to eyesight in respect to clearness of vision, and also the possibility of color blindness.

A piece of colored silk is thrust into the man's hand, and he is asked to name the color.

"Red," he says.

"Right," says the doctor, and, taking the silk from him, lays it back on the table amongst a heap of assorted colors, and then tells the would-be recruit to cross the room to another table heaped in a similar manner, and to match it from memory.

Frequently the man succeeds in finding the right shade, or one sufficiently near it, but at a recent test the candidate asserted that a brilliant green was red, and upon being asked to match it did so by finding a purple.

TIGHT CENSORSHIP

Even the Court Newsman Had to Modify Language

One of the most remarkable features of the war in England has been the completeness of the censorship and the unanimity with which the censors have been assisted by the newspapers themselves in keeping out anything that might be of value to the enemy. Even the king has been censored. The Court Circular, the official document issued every night by the court newsman, giving an account of the King's movements for the day, contained the information that the King and Queen had visited Aldershot to review the troops there "on their departure for the front." The newspapers had been warned that nothing must be printed about the movements of troops and this indiscreet phrase was spotted at once in several offices and the censor was warned. What he did has not been disclosed, but half an hour later the court newsman was ringing up every newspaper office in London and imploring them to delete the dangerous words from The Court Circular.

EDITORIAL OPINIONS FROM OLD WORLD AND NEW

Echo de Paris: "Rarely has Great Britain been seen to interfere with all her forces in a war between the peoples of the Continent. That only happens about once in a century, and when she has intervened the conflict has never terminated until the power which she was fighting for supremacy has been beaten and the equilibrium of Europe restored.

London Telegraph: "When nations are stirred to their depths they may be moved to frenzy by the song or the hymn which suddenly is found to be what, for fault of a better word, we call inspired. Happy is the army which goes on singing longest, for where there is song there is victory."

New York World: "It is to be a contest not so much between peoples and empires as between systems. It is British self-government, British sea power, British commerce and British wealth, world-wide in their extent, in a life-and-death struggle with consolidated German autocracy and militarism, which for forty years have hardened mankind with armaments and menaced it with war."

Manitoba Free Press: "It has been left to modern Germany, ruled over by an Emperor who claims a close alliance with the Almighty, to plunge the world back into barbarism and savagery. What the fury of the Huns did not seek to accomplish has been wrought for us by the withering, paralysing hand of German militarism."

New York Times: "No voice or pen, however eloquent or gifted, can convince an impartial world of the justice of Germany's cause or change the rooted belief of right-thinking men that she is battling for ends, that, attained, would retard the advance of civilization and make the peace, the prosperity, and the happiness of the nations less secure."

Ottawa Free Press: "What is to be the end for Germany? Distress, whether she win or lose. If she loses, the crushing of her empire and her armies; if she wins, the maintenance of her overlordship by the despoiling, crushing militarism, the perpetual rule of the sword and the Krupp shell."

London Daily Telegraph: "On and by the sea we live; loss of its command means death to every British aspiration and interest. In the farflung Crown Colonies and Dependencies of the King eager, troubled hearts are chilled by the thought of what might happen to them if—banish the thought—disaster fell."

HOW WAR TIME ALTERS ROUTINE IN ENGLAND

The proud boast "an Englishman's home is his castle" does not operate during the present war. Here are some of the things the [illegible] military authorities may do under the Defense of the Realm Act, passed by Parliament:

Take possession of any land, building, gas, electricity, water works, or sources of supply, horses, automobiles, or any other means of transport.

Cause any buildings, statues, or any property to be moved or destroyed, and order the inhabitants to leave any given area if necessary for naval and military purposes.

Close saloons entirely, or during specified hours.

Enter by force, if need be, any house or ship which is suspected of being used to the prejudice of the state.

Arrest, or order the arrest, without warrant, of any suspected person.

Despite his singing of "Britons Never Shall be Slaves," here is some of the things a free-born Briton may not do:

Give or sell liquor to a soldier or sailor on duty.

Spread reports by word of mouth or writing, near a defended area, likely to create alarm among the troops or civilian population.

Light fires or display lights of any description on hill tops or other high ground or buildings without permission.

Tamper with or loiter near telegraph or telephone lines.

WEARING THE PUTTEE

How to Tell a Cavalryman From an Infantryman

When you see a man in khaki walking down the street with his legs from ankle to the knee wound round in puttees it may be interesting to be able to recognize at a glance whether he is in the infantry or in a mounted regiment, and the way to do it is to observe the manner in which the puttee has been put on.

If he has started just above the boot and wound the puttee upwards, tucking in the surplus at the knee, he is an infantry man; but if, on the contrary, the puttee has been wound downwards from the knee and the surplus tucked in round the ankle, then he is a cavalryman. The reason is this: That if the mounted man were to wind his puttee in the same way as the unmounted man, there would be a superabundance of cloth round about the knees, which would chafe against the sides of the horse, to the discomfort both of the animal and himself, while, by winding the puttee downwards, the extra cloth above the boots goes into the stirrups.

Of course, the puttee has other advantages than the freedom of action it gives the man, in being applicable for use as slings or bandages in an emergency.

LOOKING TO AFRICA

Richest Prizes of the War Lie in the Dark Continent

Every power involved in the war, with the exception of Servia and Austria, the two original principals, have oversea possessions, and, whichever combination should win, there can be no doubt that it would seize some of the extra-European possessions of the other.

If we leave out of account Canada, Australasia and India the great oversea prizes for which the armies are contending are in Africa. It is in Africa that the colonies of France, Germany and Britain are closest together. Belgium, too, has a veritable empire in the heart of the Dark Continent, and in the event of the allies being defeated the Belgian Congo would certainly be called upon to salute a new overlord. Looking at the map of Africa, it is to be observed that there are only two black portions upon the whole continent. These represent pure African ownership. All the rest has been divided among European countries. Abyssinia and Liberia alone recognise their original owners. Probably ninety-five per cent. of the whole continent is one of the stakes for which the rival combinations are now contending.

Prefer Suicide to Capture

An Austrian count, sailing for home from New York to take part in the war against Servia as lieutenant in a cavalry regiment, said that the officers of the Austrian army "are supplied with small vials of poison, which, if they are captured, will be used to destroy themselves rather than undergo indignities at the hands of their enemies."

The danger of firing upwards at aircraft is that, if the bullet misses its mark, it will descend and endanger those below.

"Keep the Shop Busy —Telephone."

The manager called several customers by long distance telephone, referred to the last order, inquired if it had been satisfactory, and with this as an opening asked for more business. The plan was so successful that he called in his best salesmen, carefully drilled them, and put them to work at the telephone. By means of this systematic telephone canvass he not only got enough business to keep all his men busy, but had to work overtime.

If your business is not as brisk as you would like, why not turn to your telephone and "keep the shop busy?"

NO NEED TO WORRY OVER INVASION OF CANADA

"Suppose," said a writer, "that a foreign country were to send troops into Canada, would not the United States, acting under the Monroe Doctrine, have to fight on behalf of Canada?" Don't worry yourself, Mr. Trouble Finder. Foreign troops are not going to invade Canada, and would not attempt it even if they wished to do so. Canada is too far away, and the difficulties are too many for any nation to try to invade the Dominion. One of the things in the way of an invasion is the British navy. Another obstacle in the way of invaders would be about a million fighting men in Canada. The Monroe Doctrine, however, only is intended to prevent foreign countries from forming new colonies in this section of the world, but we would not interfere to prevent a war. As to any foreign country annexing Canada by conquest, it is quite safe to say the Canadians can take care of themselves."—New York Telegraph.

WHEN SOCIALISM FAILED

Followers of Marx Rushed to Join the Colors

The London "Daily Herald," a syndicalist organ is very much concerned at the failure of the French and German Socialists to revolt against military service. It says:

"Perhaps the most terrible side of the struggle is the part played by the workers at the supreme moment of crisis. There are four and a half million Social Democrats in Germany—they have been as nothing. They have in no wise affected the issue.

"In France, the Prime Minister is a former leader of the Socialist party. Is he then dead to the inspiration of his ideals? Does he come to bring not peace but a sword?

"Is there something essentially wrong in this Continental Socialism? Is it too materialistic in nature to understand the real significance of the ideals it has thus cast aside as catchwords? Does the German worker think that there is something ordained by Nature which makes his interest antagonistic to that of his French brother? Have they seen no soul, no compelling sense of brotherhood, in the principles they have preached?

"To let this war go on involves the certainty that for our brothers abroad at any rate, 50 years of Socialist propaganda has been in vain. Louis Blanc, Marx, Lassalle erected a superb superstructure; but its foundations [illegible]."

FATHER RHINE

Germans Devoted to the Famous River of Legend and Song

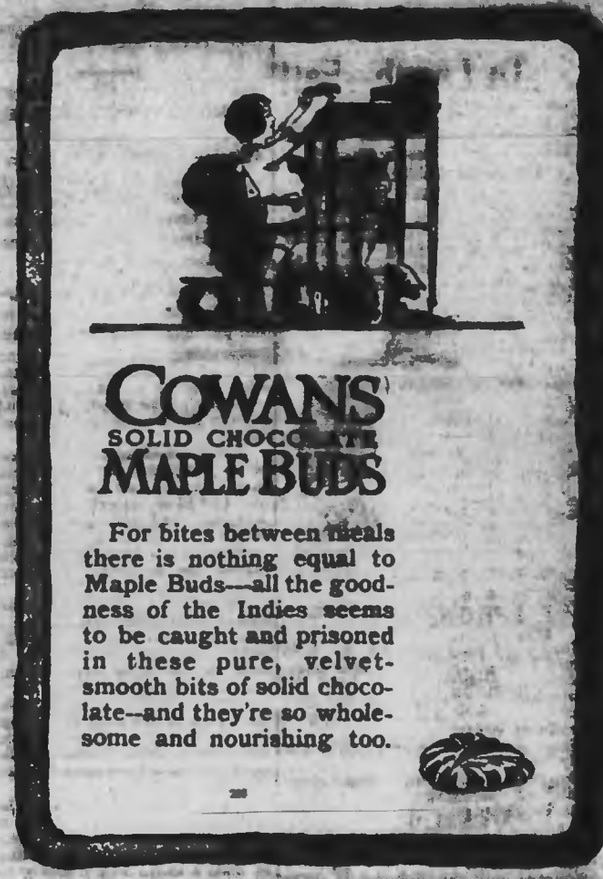
For generations past the Rhine has served to inspire the spirit of patriotism among the German children, who love to call him "Father Rhine." "Wacht am Rhein" was the great national song which was sung with an extraordinary fervor by the German soldiers alike in the hour of defeat and victory in the Franco-German War, and truly the Rhine is a fit subject for a national song. Its banks were the scene of many of the fierce battles for supremacy which took place between the Teutonic hosts and the Romans, whose strongest bulwark it was; it was there that Gaul and Teuton struggled for supremacy in the generations that followed.

Flowing through a land clothed with vineyards, that yield a wine which is famed the world over for its exquisite bouquet and dry, piquant spirit of song and legend and romance. Ruined castles crown the rugged and fantastic crags that hem in its channel. The Rhine is to the German race what the Thames is to the English people. It is a means of livelihood, too, for it carries more than 2,000,000 tons of freightage each year.

Military Service

What is "actual military service?" This question was raised several times in the English courts after the Boer War. It had previously been decided, on the analogy of the Roman law, that a soldier was not on actual service unless he was on an expedition, and that he was not on an expedition because he was under orders to leave the barracks where he had been quartered to take part in a war.

Sir Francis Jeune took a less narrow view. In one case he decided that a volunteer, having been accepted for service in South Africa and sent into barracks at Colchester under orders to embark, was already on an expedition; in another he held that a soldier in India whose will was contained in a letter written to a friend after his regiment had been ordered to mobilise for active service in South Africa, but before it had moved from the place where it was stationed, was already "in expedition."



SHRAPNEL VS. MAXIM

What is the most deadly form of fire in modern war?

The "rafale," or shrapnel shower!

The "rafale," given a fair chance, would kill more men in less time than any other known device for mass-murder, not excluding even the maxim.

A single brigade of the British artillery, containing 16 guns, is able to spray a given area up to 6,000 yards with 4,284 bullets in two seconds. The same number of maxim guns would deliver only 360 bullets in the same time, and their greatest range is some 2,900 yards.

The shrapnel shell is a hollow steel case containing a nest of bullets and a bursting charge of an ounce and a quarter of fine powder.

The Field Gun

The field gun now adopted for use in all of the principal armies of the world is the product of the past fifteen years only. It is radically different in design from all of its predecessors. It has been tried out in only one war, the Balkan War, but reliable accounts of its performance there are limited and incomplete. Much has been written concerning the probable manner of its use in combat, such articles appearing in the various military publications, but so far no connected account of its proved powers or of its theoretical possibilities which is readily intelligible to other than professional artillerymen has made its appearance in military literature. The result is that there is considerable lack of information regarding the field artillery arm on the part of the officers or other arms of the service.

Georges Carpentier, the well known boxer, is serving with the French forces as a volunteer, and has been enrolled in one of the aviation sections.

THE BLACK HAND AGAIN.

Mrs. Collins found the following Black Hand letter pinned to her door one morning:

Dear Miss Collins—unless you put a jar of jam, a hunk of chocolit cake, a apple pie an' a bag of candy down by the old well, we will steal your little boy and keep him, unless you pay us a million dollars. The Black Hand."

The letter has been handed to the police and the criminals will soon be brought to justice. To date, Mrs. Collins' little boy has been the only one seen in the vicinity of the old well.

Renewed Vigor in Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes: — "At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their health and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. When You Want To Laugh—Eat!

And If You Want to Eat Without Food Fears Take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After Each Meal.

Laughter, smiles and mirth never go with a "caved-in" stomach. Fancy a-man-afraid-of-his-food laughing! There is always that haunting feeling that a sick stomach is nothing to be mirthful about.

"My old grouchy days are funny to me now."

Just make up your mind to help nature help herself. Give your body a chance to make good. Heal the raw edges of your stomach and give your blood the tools to make digestive fluids with.

There is only one way to make the body well—give it the chance to make itself well. Harmful and strong medicines handicap the system. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go into the stomach just like food. They are dissolved and there they strengthen the weakened juices of the digestive apparatus until the digestion is made normal.

There is nothing mysterious or magical about them. Science has proved that certain ingredients make up the digestive juices. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are these concentrated ingredients—that is all there is to it. One grain of a certain ingredient contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of food. This illustrates how you aid nature to restore her worn-out materials. When a stomach which is filled with food receives a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet, it is more able to digest the food than it would be without it. The work is not so hard nor the task so long.

When the meal is finally assimilated the entire system absorbs more nourishment and harmful food effects are eliminated easily, quickly and with the maximum of benefit.

Every drug store carries Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. To anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 180 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

DRAKE'S DRUM

There is a legend that when danger threatens Great Britain it is only necessary to sound Drake's drum and he will come back to beat her enemies, as he did in times gone by.

"Take my drum to England, hang et by the shore,
Strike et when your powder's runnin' low;
If the dons sight Devon I'll quit the port o' Heaven
An' drum them up the Channel, as we drummed them long ago,"

The drum is still to be seen in Devonshire at Buckland Abbey, in the possession of a descendant of Drake's brother. Those who believe in the old fairy tales laughed at by the cynic say the drum has already been sounded twice, and not in vain.

While Drake's memory was still green the Dutch tried to wrest the command of the sea from England, and at the tap of the drum his spirit was incarcerated in Blake. Yet again clouds gathered round Britain when Napoleon dominated Europe, and the drum that had sounded round the world was heard once more.

This brought to life the finest admiral the world has seen, and Nelson saved the country.

Linked up With War

Until peace is declared, we must accept warfare as a part of the daily inevitable. Business cannot afford to skulk. It must go upon its way, even though it has to take circuitous paths. The knowledge that war is the companion of business will have its effect upon trade, commerce, the common round and the daily task throughout Canada. That effect need not be intensified by idle hands and brains. The sooner the country gets back to routine work, the better will it be for the country. Great Britain has set an excellent example, having settled down to business to the extent war will allow. War news is now part of the morning's mail, and should be treated accordingly.—Monetary Times.

Bayonet's Glint Enough

"Bayonet charges are shams," says W. G. Clifford, author of a recent pamphlet on the British army. "It is the simple sight of the bayonet that really decides the combat."

Regularity

of the bowels is an absolute necessity for good health. Unless the waste matter from the food which collects there is got rid of at least once a day, it decays and poisons the whole body, causing biliousness, indigestion and sick headaches. Salts and other harsh mineral purgatives irritate the delicate lining of the bowels. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills—entirely vegetable—regulate the bowels effectively without weakening, sickening or griping. Use

HE INSPIRES TERROR

MALATESTA IS THE MOST FEARED OF ALL ANARCHISTS.

Agitator Who Has a Finger in Nearly Every Pie In Europe Is the Scion of a Noble Italian House and Lives in an Obscure Street in London — Doesn't Believe In Assassination Methods.

Almost obscure in the hurly-burly of life are five and a half feet of gentle, polite, reticent man, smiling but unspeaking, thoughtful but approachable, at whose name the enthroned ones shudder and at whose appearance the police forces of the nations gather themselves for supreme efforts.

The doors of the countries are closed to him; the law hunts or shuns him; kings listen to his utterances and feel their structures tremble and stagger. And the quiet little man slinks here and there, planning, plotting, exhorting. Wherever he goes he leaves his footprint of blood and violence and ruin.

He has done no specific crime, this gentle little man, yet he has spent years in prison and in exile. He has been accused countless times. Wherever he has been assassination and rebellions have sprouted, but never has he personally been incriminated. He works in the dark and escapes in the dark back to his little mechanical shop in Soho, London, while one Government after another reels from his unseen blows.

His name is Malatesta, and he has just again eluded the Italian police after stirring up the bloody Ancona strikes which forced the calling out of Italy's naval and military forces. The monarchs on their thrones are doomed to more quaking.

When the Italian navy arrived in too great strength for the Ancona strikers, it is said that Malatesta, disguised as a workman, left his rooms in great haste and escaped into Switzerland. In searching his house the police say they found letters and money orders from American anarchists, and notes advising Malatesta to assassinate the Italian King. More than likely the last is a bit of police information given out for the effect. The quiet little Soho mechanician does not kill.

"Kill kings?" he said on one occasion. "Too foolish. I should rather kill chickens. They are good to eat, but what could one do with a king?"

The Malatestas were counts of the Holy Roman Empire. Their line dates from the thirteenth century, when Malatesta da Verruchio set himself as Lord of Rimini and handed down a fief which his descendants held for more than three centuries. The Malatestas are of the first families of Italy, and the old castle of Rimini, in whose shade the lovely Francesca listened to the tender pleadings of her Paolo, may still be seen, though time has stripped it of its gardens and glories and converted it into a macaroni factory.

This is the line of the little man who makes kings tremble. Count Enrico Malatesta he has the right to call himself, but that he has never done. His father and uncles were high commanders in the forces of Crown Prince Humbert when Victor Emmanuel drove the Austrians out of Italy. He himself has been openly accused of having instigated the assassination of that same Humbert.

Malatesta is now 61 years old. About forty years ago, when he was a medical student in Naples, he threw off the rank and station to which he was born, and assisted in the fomenting of a Roumanian uprising against Turkey. The Porte hunted him out and he returned to Italy.

In 1899, having been successively expelled from Italy, Turkey, Spain, France, Russia, Germany, Switzerland, and Belgium, and proscribed in every European country save England, he went to the United States at the call of Paterson and Reading radicals to become editor of La Question Sociale in Paterson. First, however, he had to be rescued from a small island off the Tunisian coast, whither Italy had exiled him.

Malatesta lectured for a time in America, was shot in the thigh at one of the Anarchist meetings and saved from death by Gaetano Bresci, who ingratiated himself with the Red leader by the rescue and soon became an intimate.

In 1900 Malatesta went to London and established himself in Soho and Islington. A little later Bresci sailed for Italy with two companions. And then came the news of the assassination of King Humbert. The police have not yet been convinced that the plot to kill the King was not hatched in Paterson by Malatesta.

But a little later Malatesta appeared in Paris. Almost immediately there were two attempts on the life of the Persian Shah, then visiting the French capital. A shot at the French President followed. In Switzerland and Belgium riots attended the visits of Malatesta. In Germany, it was said, his influence brought about an attempt on the Kaiser.

That is the record of this quiet, urbane little Italian. Yet Malatesta is neither a bomb-thrower nor a maker of bombs, though his appearance would suggest that character to the popular mind. He is rather heavily built, swarthy, bearded and intense, with glittering black eyes and nervous, peaceless fingers.

Value of Honey.

Honey is a medicine as well as a food. Give it to the children in place of candy. Be sure, however, that you get pure honey. There are important differences even in pure honey, according to the conditions under which it is made, just as there is a great difference in fruit, according to the soil on which it is grown. Dark red honey is much the best, although the people demand light yellow honey, just as they insist on light-colored dried fruit, because they eat with their eyes and do not think.

The Boss Got Ahead.

"I came mighty near resigning my job this morning," said Ardup, ordering coffee and sinkers. "I'd made up my mind that the boss and I couldn't get along any more."

"Well, why didn't you resign" asked the man sitting on the next stool.

"He beat me to it by just one second."

The Bishop's Place.

The bishop of London, speaking at the annual meeting of the bishop of London's fund at Grosvenor House, said that churches did not drop down from heaven any more than bishops, though a little girl in his congregation, evidently under that delusion, had recently said to her mother during a tiring sermon: "I am tired now, mother. Can't the bishop go back to heaven?"—London Standard.

Parasites of Malaria.

Dr. Mary R. Lawson of New London has made a profound study of the parasites of malaria, those protozoa which are injected by mosquitoes into people's blood. In the Journal of Experimental Medicine she publishes the results of her observation, the most generally interesting of which are as follows:

The malarial parasite migrates from red corpuscle to red corpuscle, destroying each before it abandons it. In the brief intervals between the parasite is free in the blood serum. If does not remain long free, but almost immediately attaches itself to another red corpuscle.

The destruction of more than one red corpuscle by each parasite would readily account for the severe and early anaemia occurring in malarial infections.

GREEKS LOATHE THE TURKS.

The extent to which the Greeks' hatred of the Turks goes is illustrated in "A Child of the Orient," by Demetra Vaka. The author's Aunt Kalliroe was an old Greek woman, whose feelings were the most anti-Turk. She had bought a large Greek homestead, for which she had no use and which she could not at all afford, solely to keep it from falling into the possession of a Turk. The author writes:

"The next time we visited Aunt Kalliroe she was installed in the Spathary homestead. Just within the front door stood a small table, covered with a white linen tablecloth, such as an orthodox Greek woman spun herself for the purpose of putting on the table where the ikons were laid—a tablecloth always washed by the mistress herself in a basin kept apart from the other dishes. On the table lay a Greek ikon, a brass candlestick holding three candles, all burning, and a brass incense burner, from which a column of blue smoke was rising, filling the house with the odor of incense.

"'Why, it isn't Easter, and it isn't Christmas!' I cried. 'It isn't even a great saint's day. Why are you burning the candles and the incense, great-aunt?'

"'They have been burning since I moved into this house, and they shall burn for thrice forty days, to cleanse it from Turkish pollution.'

"'But since Baky Pasha never bought it and never lived in it—'

"'No, but a Turk coveted it, and that is enough to pollute a Christian home.'"

Altruism.

"Jim," said an honest coal dealer to one of his drivers, "Jim, make that ton of coal 200 pounds short. It is for a poor, delicate widow, and she will have to carry all of it up two flights of stairs. I don't want her to overtax her strength."—Philadelphia Kronikle Herald.

TO CHECK A COLD

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

Henner Had a Way of Making the Louvre Officials See the Light.

It is a pity that Henner is dead. He had found an excellent means to force the conservators at the Louvre to bring down the pictures that he judged had been placed too high. He made use of this method in the case of "Susanne au Bain" ("Susanna at the Bath") at Montauban.

Twenty years ago this magnificent work was hung in the gallery four meters from the floor.

Henner was furious at this injustice. But he did not permit his anger to appear. He contented himself with coming from time to time in the morning before the visitors were numerous in the halls and in the most courteous tone requesting the keepers to furnish him a large double ladder.

The keepers referred the matter to the conservators, saying that this ladder was asked by M. Henner, and they were impressed with the necessity of responding to the wish of the old master.

Then he placed the ladder before Susanna, mounted the steps slowly and, when at the top, remained a quarter of an hour absorbed in the contemplation of the marvelous painting.

He then descended so phlegmatically and, with a fine smile, said in his Alsatian jargon: "Merci pour l'ejelle. Je vais dress goutent!" ("Thanks for the ladder. I am much pleased!")

He went through this manoeuver half a dozen times at intervals.

At last the conservators understood. They had "Susanne au Bain" unhooked and gave it a place of honor in the square salon, where it is now.—Uri de Paris.

MEXICO'S ROYAL GHOST.

The hot springs of Las Sierves, near Valle de Canitas, in a remote part of the state of Guerrero, Mexico, have been visited by few people from the outside world, but they are famous in the legends and history of the Indian tribes of that part of the republic.

According to the natives, the waters of the springs possess great medicinal properties. In ancient times the springs were the favorite bathing resort of the noble families of the Tepanecs, Alcolhua and other tribes that lived in that region.

On both sides of the chief spring there are huge rocks with hieroglyphics and the figures of women beautifully carved. Judging from the robes worn by the women, their stately appearance and the jewels around their necks, the figures must represent princesses or ladies of very high rank.

The spring is at the entrance to a grotto that has never been explored. From the grotto a rumbling sound resembling distant thunder is to be heard all the time. According to natives, the rumble is caused by the ghost of King Eycamina, who ruled over that part of the country three or four centuries before the Spaniards discovered America.

King Eycamina, the tradition says, was as bad as man could be. He murdered people merely for the pleasure of seeing them die and committed every crime. He had his palace constructed in another cave, which communicated with that of the spring by a tunnel. There Eycamina, in company with some of his favorites, had orgies that lasted weeks and months.

When he died an earthquake destroyed his palace. Since that day his ghost has been haunting the cave near the spring, and none of the natives has ever dared go into the cave.—New York Sun.

TRICK OF THE FUNNEL.

Blowing Out a Light Through It Is Easy if You Know How.

To blow out a candle, using a funnel to blow through, seems a ridiculously easy thing to do. But ask any friend of yours to try it and see what happens. Ten to one he will try to blow through the cup so as to force his breath through the narrow neck of the funnel. As this is not an easy thing to do he will flatten mouth and nose in his endeavors, while trying to force his face into the small cup. Then he will reverse the funnel and blow into the neck, and when he does not succeed in extinguishing the light he will blow harder and harder and finally he will admit that he is beaten.

In blowing through the neck of the funnel he has directed the funnel directly at the light, so that the flame is exactly opposite to the place where the neck of funnel joins the cup. You, on taking the funnel from him, incline the funnel so that its upper edge is on a level with the light. You blow gently. The light is extinguished at the first puff without any of the desperate effort which your friend put forth.

If you ponder a moment you will realize why you succeeded and why your friend failed. His breath on entering the cup or funnel spread in all directions, and the tiny current of air was dispersed upward and downward, so that, as he neatly leveled the center of the funnel at the flame, no current of air ever reached it.

You, on the contrary, hold the upper wall of the funnel on a level with the flame. The current of air started by your breath, on reaching the edge of the wall, streamed onward in the direction given it by the restraining wall and on reaching the flame snuffed it out.—Boston American.

THIN PEOPLE CAN INCREASE WEIGHT

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and mark any thin man or woman can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all, the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it turns the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepares it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. All this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol stops the waste and does it quickly and makes the fat-producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA'S PARTIES

Marlborough House is an exceedingly busy place now. From it are being turned out weekly a large quantity of garments of all sorts for the soldiers at the front, for their wives and children and for the wounded.

These working parties have been very systematically planned and arranged by Queen Alexandra, assisted by the Princess Victoria. A number of Queen Alexandra's intimate friends are co-operating in the work, either by sending in presents of flannel, wool, or some equally useful material, by assisting in the making of the garments, or sometimes by doing both.

The working parties take place on three days a week at Marlborough House. They are held in the large State dining-rom. There are two long tables in the room, at which the cutters, sewers and other workers of the party sit.

Queen Alexandra, the Princess Victoria, and other ladies all help in the cutting out of the different garments. They include shirts of all sizes pyjamas, dressing jackets, and other necessary garments.

There is quite an absence of all formality or etiquette at these gatherings. Queen Alexandra may not be in the room when the workers arrive, but at Her Majesty's request no one rises when she enters it. Her Majesty greets the workers with a pleasant bow and smile, and then takes her place at the cutting-out table.

At five o'clock the work ends, the garments are put away, and tea is served. Often Queen Alexandra and the whole work party take tea together in the dining-room.

One way and another some twenty or thirty garments a week are completed.

Gebhard von Blucher, the famous Prussian general field marshal, had as surgeon major of his army a man who was very homely, but extremely proud and vain.

"Doctor," said Blucher, laughing, "I suppose that you are the luckiest man in the world."

"How's that, sir, may I ask?"

"Why, here you are quite in love with yourself, and you haven't a sinble rival!"

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Last Straw

The 15th of December, 1899, is a date to which many look back with a dull pain at the recollection of old chums and good comrades lost—a day on which homes were broken up and women's lives were spoilt—the first battle of Colenso.

The men suffered tortures from thirst, lying all day in the full glare of the sun. The ambulance carts never ceased coming in, and each poor wounded beggar was calling out for water.

Then there was Charles Elliston. He was one of the first to come out; he had enlisted with several more fellows of good birth. There was some tale that Elliston was a bit of a drunkard at home, but he was as steady as could be out there, and popular.

It appears that he made the most of his opportunities that day. He was lying near Jackson, taking cover behind the boulders. They had some sport between them, Jackson has said since. Charles was in the best of spirits, enjoying every minute of it. This was what he had come out for, and they were in the thick of it. Rifles roared and rattled round them, Vickers-Maxims rapped like rain on a tin, lyddite shells burst, tearing up the ground, and dealing death to numbers at a time, and above it all roared the nexer-ending thunder of the cannons.

The wnoder is, not that the men got out of that hell alive, but that they tescaped wih their hearing. The noise was terrific.

Jackson said that after a time Elliston got tired of his invisible foe.

"Look here, Jackson!" he shouted, "what the deuce is the good of shooting like this, and not knowing whether you've hit a soul? I am sick of lying down, I am going to get up and have a look."

"You'll be a fool if you do," said Charles, and before Jackson could stop him he was standing up, a clear mark for the enemy.

Jackson saw him standing for a moment, then he swayed suddenly, and reeled backwards, with an ugly thud. The khaki was stained with blood.

"I am bleding, Jackson," he said.

Jackson called for two civilians, engaged in the merciful work of stretcher-bearing.

"Just wait half a minute," said Elliston, not overpolitely. "Jackson, will you come here."

"I must have a last pot at them," said Elliston. "I shall never have another. Just prop me up against the boulder, will you? It won't matter if they shoot me again."

"Got him!" he cried triumphantly, and fell back, senseless.

The bearers carired him away.

They tok him into one of the operating tents. There were three of these tents—two tables in each. There he was ticketed with his name, regiment and nature of his wound. He had been shot in the chest and the bullet had exploded there. It was little short of a miracle that he was alive.

"I suppose there is not much of a chance, is there?" he asked.

"None." No one minced matters out there. Strickland, the chaplain, was coming near.

'Would you like to speak to Strickland?" he was asked.

"No, thanks," answered Elliston.

I was glad that none of the women were there then. I have known many nurses and one notices the same thing about them all. They can bear the long, tiring discomforts of war with smiles and cheerful hearts; they can see bodies disfigured and mutilated, faces so mangled that the features are well-nigh unrecognizable, horrible operations, and appalling agonies which once seen can never be forgotten—they can see all these without a word, and without one sign of feeling. But at grim little pests made by men in the midst of their sufferings, the firm lips tremble and the quiet eyes fill.

Some time later Elliston was suffering, in terrible agony. A glass of brandy and water was brought. He looked at it eagerly, then pushed it away, with an oath.

"Take it away, man!" he cried.

The heat was intense. The pain I saw was almost unbearable.

"It's only brandy and water, Elliston; it will ease you a little."

"You fool, I came out here to get away from that—promised a girl I wouldn't touch drink for a year. Take it away. Get me some water, quick."

I fetched a glass of cold water; he drank with difficulty.

These last moments were heartrending to watch. Suddenly, he opened his eyes.

"Hope I shot that poor devil clean," he said.

He did not speak again.—London News.

Skin Trouble On The Scalp

Skin Dried and Cracked and Hair Fell Out—Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Eczema is annoying and distressing at any time, but doubly so when it gets into the scalp and causes the hair to fall out. Here is a grateful letter from a lady who was cured by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mrs. Hector Currie, Tobermory, Ont., writes:—"I was cured of a disagreeable skin disease of the scalp by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. The trouble started with itching and pain in the scalp; the skin would get dry and crack, and at times would bleed, and the hair would fall out. I tried three doctors without benefit, and suffered for three years. Reading in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I began its use, and am now completely cured. The hair has grown again, and I am as well as I ever was. You are at liberty to use this letter, for I am glad to recommend so excellent a treatment.

Dr. Chase's Ointment has no rival as a cure for itching skin disease.

KITCHENER STORY.

Lord Kitchener has only retreated once in his life, according to a lady of his acquaintance. He had been feted at a dozen affairs, and finally wound up at an "At Home" where there were many ladies. They practically besieged him, and when he saw his old friend—the lady in question—he rushed to her and said, "Talk to me! Please talk to me! Never mind what you say, but say something just as though it were important." She did so, and finally asked him what had disturbed him. "It's those two women over there," he replied, pointing to a couple of grande dames. "They have been following me all afternoon, and I didn't think I ever would escape."

THE HUMAN FACTOR IN ACCIDENTS.

Out of a list of fourteen street accidents casually compiled from police reports in this city in a singe day not one was attributed to mechanical inefficiency. In other words, the human factor was to blame wherever there was a definite culpability.

Control of the individuality to the problem. The automobiles, motorcycles, street cars and other vehicles which were concerned in this series of 'accidents' did not break down or fall in their part at the critical moment. The fallible human who fails to match them in efficiency—to use the word in its actual sense—is responsible in ninety per cent. of all traffic casualities occurring in the highways of the big cities. Most of them are preventable. So it is the personal side of the campaign that should be made to count most.

PARIS, Oct. 6.—Jean Bouin, champion cross-country runner of the world, has been killed at the front. He had been promoted to the highest rank of non-commissioned officer for gallantry in the battle of the Marne.

Jean Bouin, with Hans Holehmainen, of Finland, was the greatest middle distance runner in the world of the present day. Bouin ran second to the Finn at Olympic games in Sweden in the five thousand metre event, which proved to be one of the greatest struggles of all time. Both men were under world's record time and ran as a team from gun to tape. Bouin led by inches up to the last five yards, where he suddenly weakened and the Finn beat him by inches.

Later Bouin in a run against time broke Alf. Shrubb's world's record for the hour, a mark which Kolehmainen has failed to equal by over a hundred yards on several attempts. Bouin was considering a trip to America previous to the war and would have been seen in action in Canada.

ALOST--ITS MEANING

Persons whose mental processes run along conservative lines will hesitate to believe all the reports of barbarities committed by Germans in Belgium. But where there is so much smoke there must be a good deal of fire, and it must be admitted that evidence to substantiate the charges made against German soldiers is lacking neither in quantity or quality.

To that presented by the Belgian government though its commission sent to this country and that which has come through other channels is now added the silent testimony of Alost. When a detachment of the German army reached this once happy and peaceful little city the invaders found it a "city deserted." All of the thirty-two thousand inhabitants—men, women and children—had left their homes to make their way as best they could to Antwerp or other places of refuge.

Under strict interpretation of the rules of evidence the action of the inhabitants of Alost in fleeing from their beautiful little city upon the approach of German soldiers would probably not be expected as proving anything with regard to the reports of the German brutalities and barbarities. But is it not rather striking evidence of what the Belgian people themselves believe of these reports?

Russia Has Many Cossacks

Ahead of the huge mass of men the Tsar has sent surging over the German frontier, and at the crest of the wave, will ride thousands of the best irregular horsemen in the world, the Cossacks. In round numbers, according to the best available information, Russia has gathered 145,000 Cossack troops to her standards, the great majority of whom are mounted men.

Fifty-five regiments of Cossacks are included in the roster of the regular forces of the Tsar's cavalry, with sixteen batteries of horse artillery. Of infantry the Cossacks furnish one brigade. On a war footing the Cossacks can keep under arms 155 regiments of cavalry, twenty battalions of infantry and thirty-eight batteries of horse artillery, ten divisions in all.

The pick of the Cossack forces are the four sotinas or squadrons of the Imperial body guard. Twelve more sotinas make up part of the guard cavalry. Besides this there is a regiment with every cavalry division. The other Cossack regiments are made into divisions of their own. The Cossacks are armed with sabres and carbines, and in many regiments the men carry lances as well.

"Pointer Dogs of the Army."

The Cossack has been termed by the Russians the "pointer dog of the army." He seems to smell the enemy out. He and his little horse are seemingly tireless. As guerilla fighters the Cossacks are unequalled and no lines of communication are safe from their sudden dashes. An enemy's train, no matter how close behind the fighting forces it may be, can never be sure of safety from marauding Cossacks. They appear with lightning unexpectedness, and attack with startling rapidity and dash.

Cossacks, however, cannot stand up against regular cavalry, and will break before the shock of charging horse. Knowing this, if they find themselves face to face with opposing cavalry, they will break when the cavalry charges, and scatter like a cloud before a squall of wind, only to gather as rapidly again on the heavy column's flanks and rear, cutting off stragglers and endangering its safety unless protected by a heavy reserve. In this swift dash, sudden swerve from direct engagement and disappearance, only to reappear again in a few moments from another point, the Cossack attack is similar to that of the one-time American Indian system of attack.

On foot the Cossacks fight well, and are skilful shots. But they do not like infantry work unless it is absolutely necessary. If surrounded, a sotnia of Cossacks will dismount, make their well trained horses lie down, and from behind this living breastwork of horseflesh fight until not one man is left alive.

Wild Fighters Move Swiftly.

Accompanied as the sotnias are now by machine guns, and with horse batteries atached to every division, the Cossack forces of the Tsar makes a most formidable force of light horse, of the utmost mobility, who will make "ducks and drakes" of convoy troops and put to route anything except a heavy force of cavalry and infantry well equipped with artillery. The main bodies of their opponents they will wear, to a "frazzle" by night attacks and sudden dashes, keeping their opponents on the alert night and day.

The Cossack wears no spurs, and his equipment is sheathed in cloth that prevents it from clattering. He wears no glittering ornaments that might betray him to a watching enemy. Nolan says that a hundred Cossacks make less noise than a single regular cavalry soldier.

The Caucasian steppes furnish other wild fighters the irregular cavalry of Daghestan and Kutais, the Georgian foot soldiers, and other varieties of Teherkessian warriors. The Tcherkessians are fighters born and bred. Now that they are in the Russian service they will fight as fiercely for the Tsar as they did years ago against him.

IF CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH AND SICK

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is, they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets slugish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Pte. Hartley Accused of Deliberate Slaying of Burgoyne.

ST. CATHARINES, Oct. 9.—That Pte. Frank Hartley, after the tragedy on the Welland Canal Wednesday night, admitted killing Pte. Burgoyne, and stated afterwards that he "got the wrong one," was evidence given by Chief of Police Greene at the inquest last night. The "other one" apparently was Sergt. Burgoyne, brother of the victim, who a few moments previous to the shooting had sent Hartley to his tent because he answered the roll call late and was improperly dressed.

According to the evidence of several eye-witnesses last night, Hartley later left the tent, complaining of Sergt. Burgoyne's treatment of him, and saying that the non-com. was not treating him right. The deceased, "Teddy" Burgoyne, overhearing the remarks of Hartley, denied that his brother had a pick on him. Next came a boast from the prisoner that he was an Englishman and he could lick anybody on the canal. "Teddy" replied that he was a Canadian and that he was proud of it. "I'll shoot you," remarked Hartley to the deceased, to which Burgoyne, drawing himself up to "attention," with his hands in the pockets of the sweater coat which he wore, said: "Shoot."

This dialogue was corroborated by five members of the guard who were standing near, and at least three could have knocked the rifle aside had they known it was loaded. There proved to be cartridges in the magazine contrary to order.

After forty-five minutes' consideration of the evidence the jury returned a direct verdict against Hartley of wilfully murdering Burgoyne.

RELIEF SHIP PREPARED.

Eastern Canada's Supplies For Belgians Leave About Oct. 20.

TORONTO, Oct. 9.—Within a few weeks a ship will sail from Canada bearing supplies contributed by citizens of the Dominion for the relief of the Belgians who have suffered in the war. The bulk of the material thus forwarded will be contributed by the provinces east of Ontario, and attention is now called to the necessity of collecting all intended supplies and putting them in the hands of the shippers. Word to this effect came from Nova Scotia to the Parliament Buildings last evening.

The message was written by Premier Murray, who stated that Nova Scotia had taken advanced steps in the way of relief for Belgium, and that the Admiralty had placed a ship at their disposal to leave on or about Oct. 23 for Antwerp.

Mr. Murray states that he will be glad to arrange space in the ship for the Ontario contribution. The railways have announced that they will carry supplies to Nova Scotia free of charge, and the shipping to Antwerp will also be provided gratis.

STORY WAS FRAMED UP.

Michigan Minister Admits That Hold-Up Was a Fraud.

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 9. — Rev. Isaac Wilson, pastor of Marble Memorial Methodist Church of Milan, Mich., who told a sensational story Wednesday night alleging to have been held up and robbed, now admits that he invented the story. Wilson was found in an alleyway near the Grigg House on York street with knife gashes in his neck, and was taken to a police station and a doctor was called in.

His claim was a reflection on London's good name, but last night there was no longer any mystery about the alleged real estate deal by which he claimed he received $1,200 and later had it stolen, for Detective Ralston has succeeded in tracing the Michigan clergyman's signed confession that he invented the yarn on account of financial embarrassment. One of the clues was found in his pocket, being several bogus checks he had torn up.

Contributions Is Acknowledged.

TORONTO, Oct. 9.—Mrs. Gooderham, the president of the Canadian Women's Hospital Ship Fund, has received the following telegram from Ottawa:

"Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught has received cable from the Army Council, who gratefully accept $100,000 from the women of Canada, and will spend the whole sum in purchase of 40 motor ambulance cars, 20 to be used in France and 20 in England. Each car will be inscribed, 'Canadian Women's Motor Ambulance.'"

Assassination Trial Begins.

BORDEAUX, Oct. 9.—(Via London.)—The News Weimers Tagblatt, a copy of which has arrived here from Vienna, says that the indictment, alleging high treason and covering 7 pages, has been read to 25 prisoners, who are charged with having been concerned in the murder of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, the heir-apparent of the Austrian throne, at Sarayevo. It is expected that their trial will last three weeks, according to the newspaper.

Horse Shipment Plans.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Oct. 9.—The first definite announcement of the plans of the remount department of the Imperial army was made here yesterday by General Sir Frederick Benson, head of the department in Canada. He said both St. John and Halifax will be used for horse depots and shipping. He expects to see 3,000 horses a week handled.

Released on Bail.

MONTREAL, Oct. 9.—After a private sitting before Judge Lanctot yesterday morning it was decided to release Robert H. Reid, New York financier, on bail. Mr. Reid appeared before Judge St. Cyr Wednesday on a charge of obtaining $750,000 worth of stock from John McMartin by false pretences, and was arrested later on a second charge, that of presenting a forged note for $100 at Halifax.

Soldier's Body Found.

QUEBEC, Oct. 9.—The body of a soldier belonging to the Princess Patricia Regiment was found floating yesterday near the wharf of the Canada Lines, Limited. It was identified as that of Corporal N. Lindblad, who were No. 750 and belonged to the second company of the Princess Patricia Regiment.

It is not known where Lindblad comes from.

BASEBALL CONFIDENCE.

Connie Mack Aims to Make All His Players Self Reliant.

Writing in the American Magazine of the experiences in baseball, Eddie Collins, second baseman for the Philadelphia Athletics, says that Connie Mack is a past master at arousing confidence in his players. Following is one of the stories he tells to make this point:

"There came a situation during the last world series against the Giants that gave Schang, our young catcher, confidence. Barry was on first base, and nobody was out. It was Schang's turn to go to bat, and, turning to Mack, he said:

"'What shall I do—put Barry over (baseball slang for 'sacrifice') or hit?'

"'Use your own judgment,' replied Mack.

"Clearly Mack had confidence in him. An important moment in the world series, Schang doubtless thought, and Mack leaves it all with me. Now, when a young ball player thinks that way he gains self confidence—that is, if he has the right stuff in him. Well, Schang went up there, and instead of doing the easy thing, sacrificing, he chose to hit and drove out a ball that let Barry race to third base.

"The moral of this incident is that it is Mack's policy to create confidence in your own ability. Any man who can do that for other men. I don't care whether it's in baseball or finance, is a master of his profession."

Sir Alfred Thompson Dead.

LONDON, Oct. 9. — Sir Alfred Thompson, formerly of the Dominion Line, is dead at his Belfast home. Sir Alfred had latterly been in private practice at Cape Town and he returned to Britain three months ago to seek medical advice. An operation became necessary and it had a fatal issue.

Ostend Ready For Siege.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—The "communal council of Ostend has passed unanimously a declaration that the town is ready for every sacrifice in order to resist the German advance to the last moment," say The Daily Telegraph's Ostend correspondent.

Decorations.

"Why do you think so much of being decorated? It doesn't give you ability."

"No, but it makes people think I have some."—Pele Mele.

ANTWERP CONTINUES TO HOLD OUT

Advances Are Made By The Allies in France

600 WOUNDED MEN ARE DROWNED

"WE WILL FIGHT TO THE LAST" IS THE ANNOUNCEMENT FROM THE BELGIANS

Although City Has Been Badly Wrecked the Heroic Garrison is Fighting Bravely---Little Change is Reported From the Battle Line in France--British Success Along the Aisne.

CAVALRY FIGHT IN NORTH CONTINUES

Special Cable to The Examiner:

GHENT, via Ostend, October 9.—With great scars growing in her rows of beautiful buildings, and a constant cannonade both from the German siege guns and bombs dropped from the air craft, Antwerp still holds out. A Belgian officer arriving here to-day said that yesterday at 10 o'clock the first of the German shells began striking the great cathedral, one of the most beautiful Gothic structures extant. Already Antwerp is scarred and blackened, this officer asserts. Yesterday forenoon a Zeppelin dropped a bomb on the law courts. The airship was subjected to a terrific fire of projectiles, and is believed to have been hit although it returned apparently safely to the German lines. The Burgomaster of Antwerp sent word here to-day, "We will fight to the last."

ANTWERP, October 9.—German aircraft are constantly hovering over Antwerp to-day, and the bombardment of the city from the air is continuous. Scores of fires have been started by these aerial bombs, many of which are filled with petrol which ignites when the fulminate is set off by contact. The Antwerp fire department, now manned by volunteers, has been in continuous service for two days. Some part of the city is burning always.

PARIS, October 9.—No change in the general situation was officially announced in the three o'clock communique issued at Bordeaux, and telegraphed here this afternoon. It was stated that the disposition of the troops remains almost without change. Cavalry fighting continues on the left, and in the Woevre district an artillery duel is in progress.

LONDON, October 9.—According to a Central News despatch from Amsterdam another aerial raid has been made by the British on Cologne and Dusseldorf, both important German Zeppelin airship bases. The telegram follows,—"A despatch from Cologne states that hostile aeroplanes threw bombs on the Zeppelin hangars at Cologne and Dusseldorf on Thursday afternoon. The former was uninjured, but damage was inflicted at Dusseldorf.".

PARIS, October 9.—The belief that the pendulum of success in the battle of the Aisne is now swinging forward favorably to the allies, was universal here to-day. The war office communique was most laconic. It showed the positions in the long drawn battle line as practically unchanged but it carried the confirmation of reports that the allies are now able to hold this line in the centre and at the same time have sufficient forces vigorously to assault both the German wings.

A retrograde movement, a crumpling in of lines at either end would mean retreat to the centre. Military experts here are confident that this is impending. The pressing back of the German forces in the neighbourhood of Verdun is regarded as particularly significant. The French artillery is proving itself more than a match for the German guns in this section. Cavalry reconnaisance in force on the far western end of this line has resulted in severe losses inflicted on the German cavalry lines north of Lille.

ASPHALT WORK TO BE STARTED ON WEDNESDAY

Paving of Charlotte Street Has Been Definitely Postponed Until Next Year, Owing to Lack of Material

PLANT HERE SOON

The work of putting the asphaltic concrete surface on the concrete base that has been prepared by Messrs. Foley and Gleason on Charlotte, Simcoe, Brock and Water streets, will begin next Wednesday. Before that date is it expected that the plant of the paving contractors will have been moved in from St. Catharines for the paving of Peterborough's streets. Aylmer street is now in the hands of the contractors and is being torn up preparatory to the putting in of the concrete base from Charlotte to McDonnel streets. The paving of Charlotte street has been abandoned for this year owing to the impossibility of securing vitrified brick for spaces between the street car rails.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

Train Carrying Wounded Plunges Into Marne River and 600 Men Were Drowned

A WRONG SIGNAL

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, (Special Cable).—When a train carrying wounded and German prisoners from Meaux to Paris plunged through a weakened bride across the Marne on Sept. 29, there is every reason to believe that nearly six hundred wounded men were drowned.

The utmost secrecy has surrounded the affair. Nothing more awful has happened in the European war than this accident. The train consisted of eighteen cars, each carrying fifty wounded, British, French and Germans. Many of these men had lain on the battlefields without attention of any sort from one to two days and were congratulating themselves that they had been rescued and were on their way to the comfortable big hospitals in Paris. On the rear of the train, as it departed for Meaux in the early evening, was attached a car full of German prisoners. A switchman, who misunderstood his instructions, sent the train on the wrong track, and the light, which was the stopping signal, was not seen by the engineer. To his horror, the bridge beams began to break under the engine. The engine reached the solid part of the bridge, but the other cars piled into the river with their wounded men. Only 100 were taken from the wreckage alive. Reports indicate that about 600 wounded men, many of them too weak to struggle for their lives, were drowned like rats in their trap-like compartments. The dead were buried on the river banks.

Help The Little Ones on Tag Day

Annual Collection for Children's Aid Society To-morrow

The citizens are once again reminded of the annual Tag Day for the Children's Aid Society to be held to-morrow. The "taggers" will be out early, and everyone is asked to be ready for them. The hearty co-operation of all, renders the burden, one not to be born only by a few, but gives each an opportunity to share in this very praiseworthy work. It is to be hoped that a generous response will greet the ladies to-morrow.

Have Supplied Milk Gratis

At a recent meeting of the Milk Venders' Association, Sanitary Inspector Spence addressed the members on conditions that cows should be stabled during the winter, making many suggestions and recommendations.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie and Relief Officer Miller were also present. Mr. Gillespie spoke on the matter of distributing free milk. Seven hundred quarts had been donated by patrons of the factory and this he was distributing free to the needy on the recommendation of Relief Officer Miller. If milkmen were anxious to donate milk he would distribute it.

Relief Officer Miller supported this suggestion and said that no doubt there would be great distress, and milk would be appreciated.

From the discuss on that followed it transpired that many milkmen are in the habit of supplying two or three poor customers with milk, gratis.

It was finally decided to leave the matter over for a further meeting.

BOSTON BRAVES HAMMER BENDER OUT OF BOX IN THE SIXTH INNINGS

Stalling's Miracle Workers Show Scant Respect for the Great Indian Who is Driven Out by a Fusilade of Hits.

RUDOLPH'S GREAT WORK

SHIBE PARK, Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 9.—Under ideal weather conditions, with a warm sun beating down from a sky dotted by clouds, the Boston Braves and Philadelphia Athletics took the field this afternoon for their struggle for the baseball championship of the world. Both Managers Mack and Stallings were extremely careful not to tip off too soon who might be their pitching selections, and at 1.40 neither had made a move that would tip off who might be on the firing line. Bender and Rudolph were the selections expected, but it was evident that Mack was prepared to switch to Plank if he thought it advisable. It was expected the crowd in the Park would certainly exceed 20,000 and there were hundreds in the bleachers erected on tops of the apartment houses nearby. When it came to a final show down, ten minutes before the game time, Chief Bender was the only pitcher warming up for the Athletics. Plank had retired. Stallings kept both Tyler and Rudolph working out. A couple of minutes later Tyler retired to the Braves' bench and Rudolph was left working out alone. At that time the Chalmers automobile voted to Eddie Collins for being the most valuable player in the American League, was driven on the field.

The Boston infield, during their practice, brought the crowd to their feet, cheering repeatedly by fast, snappy work. The Athletics showed the same old machine-like snap and go in their work. While the Athletics were at work on the field, Stallings had Rudolph and Tyler warming up before the Braves bench.

At 1.50 Chief Bender had not appeared on the firing line, but just at that time the Indian climbed from the dugout amidst a roar of cheers and began pitching to Lapp.

First Innings.

Boston—Moran fouled to McInnis. It was an easy pop, which McInnis got without trouble. Evers popped to Collins, who backed into right field for the ball. He hit the first ball pitched. Connolly fanned, swinging hard at the third ball. No runs, hits or errors.

Philadelphia—Rudolph's first was a strike, then Murphy singled to right centre. The ball shot past Evers like a bullet. Oldring sacrificed, Gowdy to Schmidt. He dumped the ball a few feet in front of the plate and came within an ace of beating it out. Collins walked. Rudolph's control was poor and he was able to get only one strike across the pan to Collins. Baker fouled to Schmidt on the first ball pitched, and Murphy was doubled at third on Schmidt's throw to Deal. Schmidt made the throw from a difficult angle. It was a startling play. Rudolph was a bit wild in this inning but Baker's failure to walk him out after Collins had drawn him out, resulted in a double play which saved the Braves extra trouble. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Second Innings.

Boston—Whitted walked. Bender giving him three balls high inside, then putting two strikes across the pan. His next offering was wide of the plate. Schmidt flied to Oldring. It was a high fly that headed for the left field bleachers, but did not have the power to carry. Gowdy doubled to centre, scoring Whitted. The big catcher landed on the ball with all his might and it shot on a line over Murry's head, rebounding to strike near the left field wall. Maranville singled to centre, scoring Gowdy. Deal hit into a double play, Barry to

BRITISH VICTORY ON THE AISNE NOW SAID TO BE COMPLETE ONE

Germans Have Evacuated Their Trenches, Leaving Many Dead Behind Them---Allies Have Captured Fort Conde After a Siege of Sixteen Days.

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—The Times correspondent south of the Aisne says: "At one centre—and that the most important—the British victory on the River Aisne is now complete. The Germans have evacuated their trenches, leaving in some of them many soldiers who died from a severe visitation of typhoid. They left some of their heaviest guns in the quarries, heavily cemented in place.." Two salient events marked the part of the fighting, of which Soissons was the centre: First, the capture by the allies of Forte Conde after a siege of sixteen days, and second, the remarkable slaughter by the British in the last of the series of the German attacks.. It is agreed that wherever the Germans have dealt severe havoc to the allies around this position, their success was due wholly to a spy system. The allies soon found out that the Germans were able to diagnose their movements readily, and instituted a systematic search for offenders. They captured seven spies, one of them a woman, who used an electric flashlight signal from a window. It is not altogether true to say that the battle of the Aisne is over now, but in the past few days considerable areas have been deserted by the Germans, and great wedges of the allies' forces have been thrown forward."

RULES OF COMPETITION FOR PLOUGHING MATCH

The directors of the County of Peterborough Ploughmen's Association have drafted the following rules which will govern the ploughing match for the championship of the county to be held on October 28. The entry fee in the men's classes will be $2.00 for non-members of the Association and $1.00 for members, and in the boys' classes $1.00 for non-members and 50c for members. Competitors will have to be on the grounds by 8 p.m. Ploughing will commence at 9:30 sharp, and must be completed by 4 o'clock. Competitors will be expected to plough one-third of an acre. Fifteen minutes will be allowed for lunch.

The average depth of the furrow must be 6 inches. No assistance will be given to any ploughman except in setting and removing stakes. No person will be allowed to walk on the ground ploughed or to be ploughed. Any competitor on whose behalf this rule is violated will lose his prize. No person will be allowed to interfere with the judges in the discharge of their duties. The decision of the judges will be final. Entries must be made to the Secretary, Mr. Fred Campbell, R. R. No. 8, Peterborough, or to Mr. H. B. Cowan, Farm and Dairy, by Saturday, October 24. All starts will be made on the level in sod. After the first scratch up and down the field no handling of the land will be allowed.

THE RUSSIANS ADVANCE

PETROGRAD, October 9.—The Russian centre, mobilised at Warsaw, has started forward on the first lap of its march to Berlin. War office advices to-day say that this army, including the pick of the Czar's forces, is now entering action in the territory around Wloclawek, around the Vistula, and thirty miles from Thorn. The Russian forces in Poland have now advanced to within 95 miles of Posen, and 200 miles from Berlin. Fighting continues but the Russian advance is steady and overwhelming.

LONDON, Eng., October 9. — Since the beginning of the war the British airmen have flown 57,000 miles, a distance greater than four times the circuit of the globe, according to a picturesque story of the campaign made public by the official press bureau to-day.

"On September 30th," the report says, "one of our airmen succeeded in dropping nine bombs on the German positions opposite the French left centre. Some of these bombs dropped on the rolling stock held by the enemy near Laon.

"One of our battalion commanders criticises the enemy's infantry as follows,—The German officers are skilled in leading their troops forward under cover and in closed bodies, but once the troops are deployed in open order, destroying the direct personal leadership of officers, the men in the ranks won't face the heavy fire. Their supports either waver when the front line is checked or crowd forward, huddling together, losing their open formation, and forming magnificent targets for our fire. As an illustration, in one attack which we

WIDE SWEEP OF WAR.

Mr. Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, a distinguished political French economist, has been talking about the widespread area affected by the present war. He estimates that the war affects directly—within the area of hostilities—one-quarter of the population of the globe. The allied powers contribute to this total, 321 millions of people and the enemy 116 millions. If the peoples of the colonies and dominions, to which the British Empire alone contributes 430 millions, be included, the total would be increased to 820 millions, about half of the total population of the world, 1,720 millions. While Mr. Leroy-Beaulieu is at it he might as well include the whole world, for the whole world is more or less indirectly affected by this almost universal war. He considers the possibility of the duration of the war that will bring all the adult population of the countries concerned into the field. In that event the war may be greatly prolonged. We are preparing defensive and aggressive forces in view of this possibility. The duration of the war will depend upon the power of resistance of Germany and Austria, for no peace is possible without the destruction of the forces represented by the system of mad militarism that has provoked are warfare now being waged.

CANADA AT WAR.

When Britain is at war Canada is at war, this is practically and not only theoretically true. With 33,000 Canadian troops virtually in the field, with 22,000 more to be added, and with 10,000 on military duty in Canada, we have a total Canadian army of 65,000, more than twice the number of British soldiers — 24,000 — Wellington had with him at Waterloo. It won't be long before the daily expenditure of Canada on the war will amount to $100,000. This can easily be so when every man receives pay at the rate of $1.10 per day, and the wives of soldiers are allowed $20 per month. To this is to be added the expense of the complete equipment Canada provides, and the cost of ammunition. At this rate the fifty millions voted by Parliament won't last long and will have to be supplemented. This war is a costly thing for us in men and means; but the expenditure is warranted. We are helping wage a war, to maintain the conditions, political, commercial and ethical, which guarantee us national prosperity and national well being. If Germany and the Germanic spirit of tyranny and oppressive militarism is allowed to prevail; if Germany reaches the world power she avowedly aims at, all we have and use will be imperilled. In helping in the defeat of these things we are fighting our own battles as well as the battles of the Empire, and of humanity and human progress, the world over. We can send more men, we can spend more money, and we shall do it.

HAVE COURAGE.

When we note the apparently slow progress of the war, the growing difficulties that crop up daily, we are often inclined to lose hope. We have, however, reason to have courage. The slaughter has been appalling, and human sensibilities have been shocked to the bone; but when one comes to reflect, it will be seen that, apart from the destruction of British cruisers by submarines, we have had no really bad news from the front since the war began two months ago. The apparent reverses suffered at the beginning of the war were the outcome of strategic movements and in effect victorious movements, anticipating the final triumph. Kitchener, knew what he was saying when he declared that the farther the Germans got into France the worse it would be for them. Their defeat began when they were virtually in sight of Paris, and though the price paid is awful, the fighting in France represents distinct progress on the way to victory. The battle of the Aisne, now about over, has resulted in the defeat of the Germans; not perhaps a presently decisive defeat, but a presage of victorious progress towards the goal of triumph. We have no reason to be down-hearted or discouraged. The Allies since the early days of the fighting have taken no retrograde step; the progress has been slow but sure. The German forces have not only been driven back, but have lost, in men and morale, proportionally much more than the Allies. Their obstinate resistance has weakened the power for further effective resistance. Though every foot of the way to Berlin may be marked with a corpse, the road will be inexorably followed. We have no need to despair of ultimate triumph though we may shudder at the stupendous cost. The fall of Antwerp if it falls, is only an incident of the war. It will have little strategic importance. Its distruction is only an act of spite, a gratuitous outrage—an insult added to the injury of the outrage of Belgium's neutrality, and the devastation of the country. The treatment meted out to Belgium is not a discouragement to the Allies; it only inspires them to more grim endeavour. We must have courage; keep an even frame of mind as possible. Canada has too much to do in helping on the war, and looking after the home consequences to brood and be blue.

CHILDREN'S AID TAG-DAY.

It is hoped that the weather-man will give us good weather to-morrow for Children's Aid Tag-Day, and that the citizens will take a liberal attitude towards the work of supplementing the funds of this beneficent society. It may be felt by some that we have many demands made upon our generosity; that we are called upon to sacrifice a great deal. But are we not "in the same boat" with the rest of Canada and the rest of the Empire? We are in a state of war and we must be prepared to make sacrifices for the liberties we enjoy. But tag-day need mean no sacrifice; if everybody joins in the contributions amounts need not be individually large; and the greatest sacrifices we can make will be incomparably smaller than those in the war zone are making. What we are giving in money is as nothing compared with what our fellow subjects across the water are suffering in other forms of loss.

The support of the Children's Aid Society is a patriotic matter. We are not only helping promote the welfare of our general citizenship, but we are providing for the conditions induced by the war. Many children of families whose breadwinners are at the war are thrown upon the care of the society. It is not unreasonable to ask that the public give liberally through the medium of tag-day, a medium that permits of the contributions being more general than would be possible by any other means. It is hoped that the public of Peterborough will do Peterborough credit to-morrow. We can be encouraged and inspired by what other places are doing in patriotic work. Berlin and Waterloo, Ontario—two places whose loyalty owing to their German origin has been impugned—are setting a splendid example to the rest of Canada, to some sections which profess more loyalty. The contribution of Berlin to the patriotic fund amounts to $5.70 per head of population, while that of Waterloo, a small place, represent a contribution per head of $10. This liberality should be an inspiration to Peterborough, whose patriotic fund is not so large in proportion to the population as that of these two places. If to-morrow's contribution to the Children's Aid Society's funds averages only one cent per head of our 20,000 population, it will obviously amount to $2,000; more than we have raised any other year. It is hoped that every citizen in a position to do so would prepare himself for giving liberally to-morrow.

PLAYING WITH THE KAISER.

There really is grim humour in the reports from Petrograd of the way in which the Russians are toying with the Kaiser's army. They know the Kaiser's overweening vanity in his own powers as a great military strategist. They know, from following the Germany army manoeuvres, that he has a weakness for the Napoleonic dictum that success rewards the general who finds the weak spot in his enemy's forces and concentrates overwhelming force upon it. The Russians have been providing the Kaiser's army with "weak spots." The terrible blows which the great war lord has delivered at these selected places have allowed his hosts to plunge far through the Russian lines. Unlike Napoleon however, the Kaiser has not been considering whether the positions thus taken are worth taking. Thus the Russian lines have merely opened to allow the German armies to get into unfavourable positions, and then have closed again—with the German armies between!—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

LET US HAVE PEACE.

The experience gained in raising the first Canadian expeditionary force should prove useful in mobilizing the second. That there has been friction among military men during the past two months is undeniable. Though an editor was put in jail for criticism there has been little printed concerning military difficulties. The press generally has abstained from embarrassing the government with comments on troubles. However, the news has travelled from man to man throughout the country, and with considerable picturesque exaggeration. There should be no occasion for more of it.

Everywhere there is only eagerness to help those to whom has fallen the grave responsibility and great honour of gathering Canadian forces.

Lessons learned at Valcartier should be taken to heart in the business of enlisting, of gathering, and of despatching men which is now before our military leaders. They should be carefully applied.

The lateness of the season will render it impossible for another force to be assembled at Valcartier or at any other single point in Canada. Smaller bodies of men must be assembled at more numerous points throughout the country. They will have to be collected and equipped at such centres at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver, and Victoria, where they can be housed in large structures that can be heated. This will entail methods somewhat differing from those which have been used to the present. But it should be the aim of the authorities to see the work is done with expedition and without giving rise to bitterness and recrimination.

There is no need for aught but the best of good feeling among all Canadians engaged in this strenuous business. Hatred we can save for our enemies.—Ottawa Free Press.

LIQUOR AND WAR.

The London Times in its issue of September 28th, says:

"The trail of the German troops is marked, as innumerable witnesses testify, by myriads of empty bottles. Their once proud soldiery is now typified by the colonel found in a stupor amid his unconscious men beside a cask in an Epernay cellar. We may contrast with this picture the spectacle presented by the Allies—Russia absolutely prohibiting the sale of vodki and beer throughout her Immense dominions, France forbidding the sale of absinthe, the British soldier marching through the best vineyards in existence, and temperately demanding, as many letters tell us, his cup of tea. The great victory over drunkenness in Russia has received far too little attention in this country. Since China proscribed opium the world has seen nothing like it. We have been well reminded that in sternly prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquor Russia has already vanquished a greater foe than the Germans. Is it fully realized yet that for the Allies, and for the first time in history, this is to all intents and purposes a "teetotal" war? We hope that the indiscreet people who insist on "treating" our soldiers and sailors on their return from the front will realize it very quickly. The fight sternly waged by the Allies alike against intemperance symbolizes the other victory which must eventually be theirs. Troops who march obeying the Tsar's ukase against drink, who carry in their knapsacks Lord Kitchener's admonition to abjure wine, already have an immense moral advantage over armies whose officers set their men the example of looting every cellar they find. In the vinous excesses of the German forces we see a hint of their coming overthrow."

It is interesting to note that since the publication of this article it has been announced in Petrograd that the prohibition of the sale of vodki (whisky) is to be continued indefinitely even after the end of the war. This order is based principally on the tremendously improved condition of the country since the Emperor issued the edict prohibiting traffic in this liquor. The Russian authorities are so impressed with this startling regeneration of the peasantry that they believe it is likely to have an important effect on the social and economic conditions of all Russia, a conclusion that needs no elaborate argument to justify.

HOW TO RESTORE CANADIAN PROSPERITY AND WIDER MARKETS

From the Port Arthur Chronicle we learn that the Board of Trade of Port Arthur intends placing before the other Canadian Boards of Trade a plan it is asking the Dominion Government to enter upon to increase the agricultural production of Canada. This plan is to empower the loan of at least $50,000,000 to the township municipalities in Canada on their municipal debentures for five years with interest at five per cent., repayable annually, on condition that such municipalities lend such money to ratepayers to be expended in clearing and bringing additional land under cultivation; the loan to be a first lien against such land by being a tax against it similar to the drainage tax; the advance to any one farmer not to exceed $1,000 and to be made to the respective municipalities as the improvements are made.

This scheme is a truly statesmanlike one, and we have no hesitation whatever in joining our Port Arthur contemporary in earnestly recommending it to the consideration alike of those practical business men who constitute our Boards of Trade and of the politicians who represent us in Parliament. Everybody is wondering how the war will eventually affect Canada. In regard to many schemes of development it is difficult to foresee the outcome. But the future in regard to the industry of agriculture is plain for all to see. The war will cause an enormous shortage in the wheat crops of Europe and of the great Russian Empire. That shortage will cause a real increase in the demand for foodstuffs and an increase also in the price of them.

Canada has the land to produce a bigger crop of wheat than she does now. She has also the men. What is lacking is the capital to finance the ploughing and cropping of large added areas. Given assistance in this direction, the wheat crop of Canada could easily be increased 50 or even 100 per cent. If we prepare now for such a big crop, next year by far the largest amount of gold that has ever come to Canada will flow here not in the form of loans, but as payment for products. Nobody need be told what a stimulating effect this would have on every form of business activity.

The scheme of asistance proposed by the Port Arthur Board of Trade would not be in the nature of an experiment. The Argentine Republic has loaned $50,000,000 in this way; Australia has loaned over $80,000,000, and New Zealand, beginning with $10,000,000 found the results so good that it has steadily extended the plan until it has now loaned $65,000,000. Both Australia and the Argentine, the latter country especially, give credit to these loans for a great increase in the number of industrious farmers settling upon the land with consequent prosperity to the country as a whole. Upon a very much larger scale the same general scheme has been worked out by the British government in Ireland where $350,000,000 has been loaned to the tenant farmers with which to buy and improve their holdings. Canada has a plain duty to herself and to the Empire in this matter. Now is the time to act.

In surveying the new fields of business opportunities opened up by the war, Russia has been left out of account by the people on this continent. As a matter of fact, Russia is issuing a pressing invitation to the people of the British Empire and the United States to come and sell their goods to her 170,000,000 customers. The Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Sergius Sazonoff, in an interview with the Petrograd correspondent of the London Times, says:

It is the country which forces the situation commercially in Russia that will reap the enormous benefits that the Russian markets now offer. It is not enough that merchants and manufacturers should offer their gods here. Experts should be sent here now, even while the war is still in progress, to study and examine the wants of our country. Our duties, our manner of doing business, and our present and future wants and growing demands should be studied scientifically, so that when peace comes those channels, which have for decades flowed deeply with German products, may continue to flow with products from America and England.

For America especially does Russia open opportunities for an industrial outlet such as can hardly be over-estimated. We have an empire of 170,000,000 souls, and the $300,000,000 we have been paying Germany yearly is but the beginning of a demand that will soon make Russia among the most desirable and valuable markets in the world. Railroad-building and new developments everywhere are the prelude to an era of prosperity in this country such as has never been here before.

As to how far Canada can participate directly in the trade that is offered is a problem. But even if she has no direct participation in it, it is certain that she will participate indirectly, since the diversion of Russian trade from Germany to Great Britain would be bound to react upon Canada by increasing the British demand for Canadian commodities. — Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

A NEW MOUNTAIN IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mount Bruce—Altitude 11,500

Mrs. E. T. Parsons, of Berkeley, and Miss Lulie Nettleton of Seattle, have returned from a mountain-climbing expedition in the Southern Selkirks. The trip was notable in that unmapped country was traversed and the ascent of one of the highest peaks of that region was made.

Leaving Invermere, B.C., the party, consisting of E. W. Harnden, of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Gleason of Boston; Mrs. E. T. Parsons, of Berkeley, Cal.; and Miss Lulie Nettleton, of Seattle, went to the head of Horse Thief Creek, forty miles in. The first ascent of the unmapped peak was made September 2nd, taking nine hours from the base camp. The route lay over the magnificent Starbird glacier and embraced steep, icy slopes and interesting rockwork. The party was roped in Alpine fashion, as the snow slope below the summit required the greatest care.

On the summit ice axes were planted and the mountain was christened Mount Bruce, in honour of Robert Randolph Bruce, of Wilmer, B. C.

The view from the summit is described as wonderful. Glaciers of stupendous sizes, and hundreds of peaks, varying from 9,000 feet altitude to 11,000 or 12,000 feet. Most of them are unnamed and unclimbed. Allowing for corrections, the aneroid readings gave the altitude of Mount Bruce as 11,500 feet.

On September 6th, an attempt was made upon Mount Jumbo from a base camp below the terminal moraine, of the Jumbo glacier. The party come within 500 feet of the summit, the final section of the route lying plainly before them when a storm broke loose and they were obliged to retreat to camp.

Mr. Howard Palmer, the well-known mountaineer, has estimated that there are no fewer than 40 peaks in the Selkirk Mountains, whose altitude exceeds 10,000 feet. The rock from which these mountains have been carried, shows 4,500 feet or about nine miles in depth. No volcanoes have been found, so that geologists are still undecided as to how this gigantic group of mountains came into existence. The Range is crossed at Roger's Pass, by the C. P. R., which is, at this moment, driving a tunnel nearly five miles long in order to reduce its grade, and eliminate a large number of snow-sheds required to protect the track.

On the theory that mountain climbing develops the nerves as well as the muscles a Philadelphia college physical director has his pupils climb the sides of quarries.

GEN VON KLUK, GREAT HOPE OF THE GERMAN ARMY

THE HAGUE, Sept. 25. — A well known Dutch military expert, who has served his country gallantly both at home and in the colonies and knows what he is talking about when he discusses military matters, expounded to me to-day some striking views with regard to the German army.

"There is something curious about the German army," he said. "They have fine infantrymen and a lot of them; their artillery is up to date, in spite of some recognized shortcomings; their cavalry has already in the present war done some efficient work.

"But the trouble, in my estimation, begins with their officers, and especially with their supreme commanders.

"The present military generation has been extraordinary poor in military talent. There is not one great commander in Germany at the present time.

"In 1870 Germany had Moltke and Roon to help Bismarck. Whom have they now to help Dr. von Bethmann Hollweg?

"Of course, the present chief of the General Staff, General Kuno von Moltke, is a skilful and resourceful organizer, and so is his colleague, General von Falkenhayn, the Prussian Minister of War. But neither has any responsible office in the field. They both rest with the headquarters, the former attending the tactical part of the campaign, the latter concerning himself with material problems, such as military transport and the dissemination of ammunition and food supplies. Neither actually commands, and a real soldier can only show what he can do under fire of the enemy.

"Who, then, is in charge of the Kaiser's legions? To tell you the truth, too many princes are in command. During the first weeks of the campaign we have heard of the army of the Crown Prince of Germany, of that of the Crown Prince of Bavaria, of that of a Duke of Wurtemberg.

"This is perhaps necessary from a purely dynastical standpoint and is meant to enhance the popularity of the coming sovereign and the reigning house—in case of victory, of course! But from a military point of view this practice is full of danger.

"The princes now in the field are young and inexperienced; they have an utter disregard for human life, and they know nothing of the army they are fighting with. Further, they have never seen any war except in manoeuvres, and then, so to speak, only from the 'royal box,' and they have enjoyed, as far as military training goes, only such as princes usually receive—that says everything.

"It is not one of the least causes of the discontent existing among the German officer corps that whenever a great emergency wears a prince, imperial or royal, is suddenly intrusted with the supreme command of troops he does not know and who cannot trust him very much, for even a simple orderly knows that a prince, even if he personally is a reckless fighter, is not necessarily an efficient commander.

"In fact, you will have noticed that little has been heard lately about the Crown Prince Rupert of Bavaria or of the Duke Albert of Wurtemberg; and as for the German Crown Prince, he probably himself wishes now that still less were heard from him. There are too many highnesses, and highnesses are often in the way when real fights are on.

"As to the German generals now in command, it is remarkable, and in some respects illuminating, that several of them—precisely those entrusted with the most important posts—have been for years on the retired list, and have had to be recalled to active service to meet the Fatherland's peril.

"General von Hindenburg, who is in command of the eastern armies and whom the Wolff Bureau credits with a signal victory every morning—and sometimes one in the afternoon, too!—had left the army for many years after a most honourable career.

"Field Marshal von der Goltz Pasha, of Constantinople fame, who is now—for how many more hours?—Governor General of Belgium, is also on the retired list.

"Had Germany had a few younger and more brilliant officers to send to the front, these veterans would probably have been allowed to rest by their fireside, but, having none, the Kaiser had to recall old officers whose 'war' experience has, in fact, mostly been 'tested' in peace and whose strategy has so far only been exhibited in books and newspaper articles.

"There is also General von Hausen, who is in charge of an army which was recently operating near St. Quentin, and is now—nobody knows where. The military record of that general was somewhat tarnished by no less a personage than the 'War Lord' himself, who censured him publicly and bitterly in 1912 at the close of the imperial manoeuvres, which ended by the crushing defeat of the 'German' party commanded by General von Hausen.

"Who then, is left? As far as I know, only General von Kluck. He is the great hope of the German army, and, had the plans of the General Staff not been modified, one could have expected great things from him.

"His plan was to take Paris, and such was his resolve also. 'Take Paris or die,' the Kaiser had said, and General von Kluck was ready for both emergencies. He has so far failed in the first, and he is alive yet.

"He is a fine officer, tall, thin and truly Latin in aspect, except for his spike helmet and his toothbrush moustache. He owes his rank neither to noble birth nor to intrigue. In fact, he had reached the rank of colonel before the Emperor bestowed nobility on him, and he apparently did not care very much about being 'von Kluck' after having been for so many years simply 'Kluck.'

"The general is thoroughly popular with his soldiers, partly because he treats them well, partly because they recognize him as a real chief, a true leader. He is a man of few words. His writings on strategy make him an authority—academically, of course—on military science."

Daring Plunger Once Worth $250,000 Steals To Escape Starving—Jailed

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—The famous Frank England, a man who has made as much as $30,000 in one day, who a few years ago was owner of a beautiful mansion and a number of fine race horses, has been brought to court here, down and out, and starving, with $1,000 worth of loot on his person which he confesses he obtained by smashing in the door of Mrs. William Howard, of Flatbush, an American woman swimming champion, and robbing the house.

Frank England started his career as a street car conductor, in Brooklyn. One day in 1905 he was given an afternoon off, and he decided to go to the races. He had 75 cents in his pocket, and he decided to do something he had never done before—he bet the money! He won. He placed all his winnings on the next race, and won. He continued to win, and when he went home, he had a huge bank roll in his pocket! No more conductor job for him.

He became the most phenomenal plunger in racing history, and his invariable luck simply dumbfounded the most hardened followers of the horses. In 1906 at Saratoga he made three bets on "Carey," owned by a St. Louis sportsman. On the first bet alone he won $10,000. England's biggest "killing" soon followed, when he won $30,000 on Schoolmaster, at Syracuse. Soon the former conductor had piled up a fortune of $250,000, had moved his family into a beautiful mansion, and had wealth friends all around him.

But a few years later he played "Tools Monks" for a winner—and found that his luck had changed! On that race he droped $60,000; and he never picked a winner since.

To-day England's fortune is gone back into the betting maelstrom whence he drew it; his friends, too, are gone. Starving, homeless, and in desperation, he broke into the home of Mrs. Howard, was arrested while sinking off with his loot, and now is enjoying for the first time in weeks, a warm bed and a square meal—in jail!

SAW TWO EXECUTIONS

LONDON, Oct. 8.—An Englishman returning from France tells of seeing two military executions there.

"I had just entered the village," he said, "when I saw a party of soldiers leading two prisoners away. A crowd was following and I joined in. Reaching the edge of the city the the two prisoners were blindfolded and placed against a wall. I realized that I was witnessing a military execution.

"One of those men leaned against the wall in a careless attitude and seemed to take no interest in the proceedings. Six soldiers fired upon him and he dropped dead. The other went the same way. I learned later that they had been captured trying to blow up a bridge. One had been disguised as a priest and the other as a woman."

The Ketchecum Lake Fishing Club leave to-morrow for their annual outing with hook, line and cook back in the wooded stretches of the northern section of the county. Among those goin gare E. A. Peck, Will Comstock, W. F. Mason, Henderson Nesbitt, W. H. Dunsford, Wm. Boyd of Bobcaygeon, Webber Turner, Robt. Gibbons, Edwards of Lindsay, R. J. Munro, Joshua Collins and H. C. Winch. Archie Jackson has charge of the commissariat, which includes a portable kitchen of the war type, and a few other wrinkles including 57 ways of cooking fish. The party is looking forward to two enjoyable weeks and as many fish as the law allows. Bill Comstock is the neophyte of the outfit. He takes with him an expensive set of tackle and a cheerful disposition for any initiation that may be on the list. Harry Winch is the veteran. This trip marks his fiftieth outing to the fishing grounds around waters nearby. It was in 1864 that he first went back with a group of comrades almost all of whom have joined the great majority. Those were the days when the lumbermen were first beginning to touch Peterborough's forests. Mr. Winch and his party put their canoe in the water at Chemong Lake and paddled to Buckhorn and portaged where necessary until the chosen location was reached. It was primeval country with the fishing grounds in their natural state and the depth of water unchanged by the use of stop logs. It is needless to say that Mr. Winch knows the country around Ketchecum, and he goes back to haunts hallowed my many warm associations. Many of the party may be younger in years than he, but few in enthusiasm.

An Eventful Night

How Punctured Auto Tires Barricaded the Road Home From the Keene Fair

Wednesday night was an eventful one on the road between Keene and Peterborough. There had been a great marshalling of autos at the Keene Fair, and Peterborough chauffeurs didn't get read to start for home until the shades of the evening were fast drawing over the land, and just at the close of a glorious October day, when the sun had set behind the distant hills, to the music of the Rice Lake brass band. A mile or two out from Keene, not far from Mather's Corners an auto was travelling at a brisk clip over the beautiful piece of newly gravelled road in that vicinity, when a loud exposion was heard, and the car came to a sudden stop. Five occupants emerged hurriedly from the car, and a lady walked away and curled up in a fence corner out of hearing of the four men's sanguinary voices. With rapid hurrying movements, the repair kit was slammed out on the seat, the lever applied with dexterity, and the car was raised up. Just then up came a couple of sympathizing fellows in a comfortable buggy singing:

"I like the cows and chickens,
But this is the life for me."

"Broke anything?" came a voice from the buggy in the dark.

(Voice under the auto)— "Broke nothing! We're opening out a camp meeting. Bring along your hymn books and join us."

But the buggy rolled by, and the glare of the searchlight from the auto revealed a pair of laughing sports from the city.

It was learned that one of the more versatile of the occupants of the car was a former veteran salesman from one of the large American harvester companies, who had been relating some of his experiences and telling such weird tales of the road and his exploits among the farmers, that not even a Studebaker could stand the strain any longer.

A little further down the road the searchlight of the auto disclosed another stalled machine. A wild-looking, able-bodied man, with everything off but his shirt, and trousers, was pumping wind into a tire for all he was worth. Every chuck he gave the pump could be heard away along the road down to the next concession. On closer observation, the features of a well known Peterborough real estate man was discerned. Just then a farmer came along from the Fair with three cows tied to the back of his waggon.

"Hello! got any good farms to sell, just now?"

"Huh! I'd farm you, if I had you here for five minutes."

The farmer moved off cautiously without a word, and a tragedy was averted.

All along the road, here and there, the prize cattle returning home were stampeded by the mad rush of the autos and the glare of their lights. The fireworks at the Peterborough Industrial was nothing to the spectacle of the flying heels and tails of the thoroughbreds as they sprinted along the concession, a la Tam O'Shanter's mare.

"O, believe me," remarked Mr. B.—, our informant, "it was an eventful night."

The germ theory of the transmission of contagious diseases was entertained as far back as 1657, when the plague ravaged Rome.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

SCIENTIST TELLS GERMANY SHE MUST DESTROY LONDON

"No Respect for Tombstone of Shakespeare, Newton and Faraday," Says Professor Lenard, Denouncing "The Central Nest of Hypocrisy on the Thames."

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Dr. Lenard, professor of physics at Heidelberg, has issued a violent pamphlet against England, entitled "England and Germany at the Time of the Great War." The concluding passages, taken from the Hamburger Fremdenblatt, are sufficient to quote:

"As regards the battlefields, which surround us on every side, they must not—now that the sword has been pressed into our hans with so much criminality and arrogance — become until England, the chief originator of all this, has been so humiliated as is only possible for us to achieve. It is part of the art of war to inflict upon the enemy all those evils which he has set out to inflict upon us, including complete destruction.

"Down, then, with all consideration for England's so-called culture! The central nest and supreme academy for all hypocrisy in the world, which is on the Thames, must be destroyed if the work is to be done throughly. No respect for the tombstones of Shakespeare, Newton and Faraday! The spirit of these great men has long ago passed into the souls of the living — and more so in those countries which England is trying to put down than in England itself. Down with all this. We must realize that there can be no real peace with a highwayman until he has collapsed or has been destroyed.

"Only an England thoroughly altered, improved, bettered and then matured and ripened for pacific co-operation in every domain—only such an England or else one destroyed, will permit the nations of the world to proceed in peace in their advancement. Indeed, the idea of honesty, that supreme principle of men, is running the risk of going down. It is being violated by modern England systematically. The struggle upon which we have entered is therefore something more than even a struggle for the existence and honour of the Fatherland; it is a crusade for the assertion of honesty on earth!"

Grant of $50 To Industrial Association

Finance Committee Recommend to the City Council That the New Organization Be Supported For the First Month

The Finance Committee of the City Council agreed to back up the Industrial Association of Peterborough to a certain extent last night. There were present at the meeting Ald. Johnston (Chairman), Mayor Fuller, Ald. Green and Ald. Langford.

The Committee was waited upon by Mr. B. D. Hall, Chairman of the local Industrial Executive Committee, and Mr. R. J. Soden. They pointed out the objects and possibilities of the Association, and said that it was their intention, in order to carry on the work in the most effective manner, to employ a secretary to look after their employment bureau, and do other work in connection with the Committee. They asked for a grant of $50 a month until spring, or a lump sum of $500 to carry on the work.

Will Advance $50.

Owing to the fact that the City has good use for all the funds available the Committee was inclined to take a sceptical view of the new association. They agreed, however, that if the Association was successful in their work, it would be of the utmost value to the City, and on the motion of Alds. Green and Langford the committee decided to recommend to the City Council that the Asociation be paid $50 for the first month to allow them to try their plan. If their work is effective it is probable that the grant of $50 a month will be made.

Can't Pay Interpreter.

A letter was read from Acting Crown Attorney J. Wearing, asking the City to pay $12.95 for the services of an interpreter that had been used in a recent Police Court case. It was moved by Mayor Buller, seconded by Ald. Green that Mr. Wearing be advised that the law did not authorize the City to pay the fees of the interpreter.

Disputed Bill Paid.

The bill of M. J. McCannon, for securing options on land on which it was intended at one time to put the C. G. E. test line, was ordered to be paid, on the motion of Mayor Buller and Ald. Green. The bill, amounting to $216 did not pass the last session of the Finance Committee, but the members viewed it more favourably last night.

"PIPE" THIS

Review Reporter in Accident at Riverside Park Wednesday

A Review reporter suffered the indignity of being suddenly and unexpectedly dis-piped at the Annual P.C.I. athletic events held at Riverside Park Wednesday afternoon. The sleuth was manifesting considerable desire to verify the work of those whose duty it was to measure the length of the standing jumps made by the different competitors, and in doing so unconsciously assumed a Sherlock Holmes pose with his nose somewhat nearer the ground that most of his body. Consequently his pipe projected into the jumping arena, and one of the rival athletes in making the jump spread his arms to an extent not anticipated by the journalist. The result was that with a terrific side-sweep the pipe was swept from between the teeth of the astonished reporter, and before he could realize just what had happened was reposing half-buried with clay in the pit at his feet. The pipe, however, was not put out of commission.

First Tea of L. O. L. No. 2440 Was a Success

The first annual tea and concert of L.O.L. No. 2440, Byerasville, North Monaghan, was held in their hall on Oct. 1st, and proved a grand success, the hall being packed to the doors. After a splendid supper had been served Bro. Geo. McCartney, Grand Organizer, acted as chairman and did his duty in a very able manner. The Band of L.O.L. No. 80 gave several selections which were greatly appreciated. After a choice programme had been rendered the entertainment was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthems, Rule Britannia and God Save the King.

$5 a Week Pension For Disabled Urged By British Labour Leader

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Every man permanently disabled in the war and unable to follow his erstwhile occupation ought to be paid $5 a week during his life, in the opinion of George Barnes, the labour leader and Member of Parliament for the Blackfriars Division of Glasgow.

Heretofore, he said, the disabled had been allowed to beg in the streets. Now, however, the government was giving serious consideration to the subject of these unfortunate ones and a like situation would not again exist. He estimated that the sum which the government would be called upon to pay the dependents of breadwinners in the field would not reach $25,000,000. Accordingly, he added, the government had not erred on the side of generosity.

Secured Eighteen Maskinonge

The most successful fishing excursion of the season was pulled off yesterday, when a party of six anglers motored out to Pigeon Creek and succeeded in annexing eighteen maskinonge, running in weight from seven to fifteen pounds. The party was composed of Messrs. Arthur Johnston, Percy Johnston of Toronto, R. Gollop, A. Fuller, P. Parsons and M. Kenneally. They landed eleven in the morning and added seven to their string after the mid-day meal. Sceptics will be convinced when they see the photographs made of the catch by Mr. Fred Roy.

DISAGREES WITH "READER"

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir, — Your correspondent who signs himself "Reader" in last night's Examiner is a true disciple of the military propogandist in his claim that war is according to nature and therefore "a biological necessity." But if "Reader" will study nature at first hand he will find that war as conducted by men is not according to nature and therefore not a necessity. In the realm of nature there is war, but it is war between animals and organisms of different species and not between animals of the same species. It is only when food becomes scarce that, in the struggle for existence, the stronger prey on the weaker of their own kind.

The natural war of man is between man and the forces of nature, not between man and man. If there is a scarcity that drives men at each others throats—and it is only on this ground that "Reader" can justify his claim that the present war is a natural war—it must be a scarcity artificially created. The last century has seen a wonderful development of machinery and hence of man's ability to supply his physical wants. The resources of nature from which men must feed and clothe himself have not run dry in any country; in fact, their vastness is hardly yet comprehended. Surely there is no natural scarcity that makes this European struggle a natural one.

That there is a scarcity so far as the average working man is concerned we cannot deny. The slums of all cities of older countries and even of our new country bear testimony to a scarcity that drives men to despair and makes them the easy tools of despots. For the majority of people living conditions are no means easy. But is such a scarcity natural?

The answer, as I see it, is in another question: is the monopolization of the resources of nature natural? Nowhere in a state of nature do we find one species of animals shutting others of their own kind away from a participation in the bounties of nature—except man. Men, however, has disregarded the laws of nature and the land and its resources, without access to which no man can live, have been monopolized by the few to the detriment of the many. Here we create an apparent scarcity and the natural result is war. The result, (war) is natural. The cause, (monopolization) is artificial. When the people of the earth are given access to its richer artificial scarcities and unnatural wars will be no more. The old prophet who predicted the beating of swords into ploughshares was a truer student of nature than your contributer who, because of the lack of a better signature, we know only as "Reader."

There may be other causes of war than the one I have mentioned, artificial scarcity, but as "Reader" discussed war in its natural aspect only, I have done the same.

HELPING THE WAR FUND

Mr. H. Webb Chamberlain, who appears at the Grand Opera House all next week at the head of the Chamberlain Stock Co., under the management of Mr. Ivan Wickens, will donate ten per cent. of his profits of Monday night to the war fund. Since his the fund towards the wives and children has been surprisingly large and his percentage to the war fund has been correspondingly so.

Mr. Chamberlain is of American birth, but has made Canada his home for the past ten years and feels that if Canada is good enough to live in it is good enough for him to assist in the fund towards the wifes and children of our brave volunteers who have gone to the front. Mr. Chamberlain is an active member of the American-Canadian Society, and at a recent meeting at the King Edward in Toronto was appointed a member of the executive committee and travelling representative of the Society. The company opens at "The Grand" Thanksgiving afternoon, presenting "The Match-Maker," and the prices, 10c, 20c and 30c, are within the reach of all.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many good watches are allowed to go without cleaning and oiling, and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become rusted and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to put it in proper condition again. The old saying "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

HYACINTHS, NARCISSI AND DAFFODILS PLANTED NOW WILL BLOOM AT THE NEW YEAR

These Bulbs Are Cheap and the Plants Require Little Attention —Every Family Should Secure a Few Pots for Winter Cheer.

SHOULD BE WIDELY KNOWN

It is comparatively easy to secure beautiful house blooms for the Christmas season and for the winter months continuing practically until Easter. At small cost, a supply of bulbs sufficient for the average home can be obtained now and with very little care they will be in flower just before the turn of the year. Nearly every person loves flowers, but too few take advantage of the sale of bulbs which should be planted now for winter blooming. For example, it might be said that any family can afford and can easily grow hyacinths, Narcissi, Daffodils, Froesias, Jonquils, and similar other flowers whose bloom will be a delight during the grey months of winter. But they must be planted now. You can purchase as many or as few bulbs as you desire. It depends upon your house-room and your purse. But the main point is that every family can afford some of these bulbs. Plant them now and in winter they will bring brightness and joy to those who give them the little care required to grow them. Roman Hyacinths and paper white Narcissus, planted now, will be in bloom for Christmas and would prove a delightful holiday token, something out of the ordinary, and reared by the hands of the donor. Freesias, too, might be in flower for Christmas, and Daffodils and other Hyacinths will be ready in winter. The latter are one of the most satisfactory plants of this kind. Their bloom is beautiful, is showy and lasts longer than the others. They are usually planted three bulbs to a pot and cost about ten or twelve cents a bulb. The Narcissi, white paper Hyacinths and other bulbs are sold at from 25c a dozen up to 45c a dozen, for some varieties the price is higher. The Peterborough Floral Co. successors to Frank Mason received a large supply of Holland and Belgium bulbs and will be pleased to expain the simple methods of their culture to those who are interested. Their other store is at 338 George Street.

Jordan Bros., also received to-day a supply of bulbs from Europe. The object of this article, however, is to impress upon those who love flowers that a splendid assortment of winter blooms can be obtained at little financial outlay and reared with but little attention.

It might also be stated that tulips should be planted now for next Spring's bloom.

VISITING EXPERT HAS HIGH PRAISE FOR GRAND TRUNK

Mr. A. E. Goff, of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, has just concluded a tour of the Dominion. He declares that he has been greatly impressed with the progress made by Canadian railroads, and by the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific, in particular.

The immensity of the Grand Trunk System's mileage and the unlimited possibility of further extension first impressed him, he says:

Next, the remarkable engineering obstacles of bridging and tunnelling that have been overcome in linking up so hugh a system, apart from the venture of the undertaking at a time when the present rapid development could hardly have been foreseen.

I was particularly struck with the good understanding which exists between the executive and the staff. The result of this mutual confidence was manifest in the local enthusiasm and efficiency of the various departments of work at headquarters in Montreal, as well as elsewhere, and made for a general esprit de corps which is not often met with. Outside the office atmosphere the same spirit was evinced between the travelling public and the staff. The hotels of the Grand Trunk are wonderfully homelike and surprisingly cheap. The "Chateau Laurier," one of the finest hotels in the world, is suitably located and a truly magnificent building. The method of dealing with passengers' luggage strikes one as remarkably simple and effective, and is a real time and worry saver. On the commercial side, the grain elevator added to the many things that interested a stranger, and so did the large freight terminal I had the privilege of going over. Another noticeable feature that impressed me not a little was the unsolicited efforts made by one and all to see that traffic, not merely in a concrete sense, but in individual merchandise, was expeditiously transported. This regard for commerce has evolved itself into a system known as the "Manifest freight service," whereby it is within the region of possibility to keep an eye not only on each whole train-load of important merchandise, but on each car load as well, from the moment of despatch from shipping point, as they term it in Canada, to destination."

Roads In France Strewn With Household Goods the Germans Tried to Carry Off

PARIS, Oct. 8.—It is possible now to inspect most of the interesting spots of the battle of the Marne by trains from Paris, which meander along at about ten miles an hour, mostly filled with refugees going back to what is left of their homes, and perpetually crossing other convoys of wounded and prisoners being sent around Paris by the Ceinture railway. Bourget station is crowded with French and English troops trying to make friends, and in high spirits.

The convoys of the Allied wounded are like excursion "specials" and ring with jokes and laughter, in vivid contrast with the broken, discouraged attitude of their German fellow sufferers. Between Plessy, Belleville and Nanteuil the country looks so smiling that it is hard to believe that a very inferno was there such a very short time ago. It is only when walking in the vilaiges and small towns that one sees razed or burned houses and streets strewn with smashed furniture and glass. At Dammartin scarcely a shop was left, and the Germans stopped at most of the inhabited houses, but many empty villas were passed by the invaders.

The system of the Germans was generally the same everywhere. They brought huge empty vans, often hoisting the Red Cross flag, and stuffed them pell mell with whatever they could steal. Outside the town a distribution took place, the officers taking whatever pleased them and leaving the rest to the men. It is for this reason that one often sees pianos, glass fronted wardrobes, sideboards, etc., lying in ditches by the side of the high roads. What they expected to do with such articles is a mystery.

At Coulombiers the Mayor and his secretary, with the Proscureur, were seized and kept as hostages. The whole night they were guarded by sentinels, who talked in French about their approaching death, and in the morning, when they really believed they were to be shot, a lieutenant sat down to the piano and brilliantly played Chopin's "Funeral March." This seems to be a favourite exercise of German humour. Coulombiers was fined $2,000, but the arrival of the British troops cleared out the town in double quick time, and as soon as the cannon was heard in the night a general panic ensued, and by three o'clock in the morning all Germans who were not hopelessly intoxicated had gone. Hundreds of Germans recovering from a night's debauch were picked up next day by the British in a pitiable plight.

FALL IN

What will you lack, sonny, what will you lack
When the girls line up the street,
Shouting their love to the lads come back
From the foe they rushed to beat?
Will you send a strangled cheer to the sky
And grin till your cheeks are red?
But what will you lack when your mate goes by
With a girl who cuts you dead?

Where will you look, sonny, where will you look
When your children yet to be Clamour to learn of the part you took
In the War that kept men free?
Will you say it was naught to you if France
Stood up to her foe or bunked?
But where will you look when they give the glance
That tells you they know you funked?

How will you fare, how will you fare
In the far-off winter night,
When you sit by the fire in an old man's chair
And your neighbours talk of the fight?
Will you slink away, as it were from a blow,
Your old head shamed and bent?
Or say—I was not with the first to go,
But I went, thank God, I went?

Why do they call, sonny, why do they call
For men who are brave and strong?
Is it naught to you if your country fall,
And Right is smashed by Wrong?
Is it football still and the picture-show,
The pub and the betting odds,
When your brothers stand to the tyrant's blow
And England's call is God's?

—By Harold Begbie, in London Daily Chronicle.

FOUND UNDER A WOOD PILE

A south end resident who was fined $10 in the police court this morning for being found drunk while on the prohibited list, said he found his flask under a wood pile in his yard. He did not know who put it there, but thought he might have done so himself. On the same day, however, a man named Price, who lived nearby, purchased for him a flask. He did not know whether Price knew he was on the list or not.

A process has been invented in Germany for tinning small articles by placing them in a centrifugal machine which is revolved in molten metal.

This Man Was Indeed Small

Secretary of Cheese Factory Threatened to Sue Directors for Using Factory for Making Patriotic Cheese

"It is not a crisis or unusual event that makes a man, it only reveals the man as he is." The war has brought many of these to light in every place across Canada, and in most instances arouse admiration.

A local instance of the other kind was so marked as to deserve mention. When the recent gift of cheese was proposed many farmers offered, and later gave, two days' milk instead of the one suggested. A few declined to make a gift at all, but we think the limit was reached when the secretary of a factory—not a hundred miles distant—not only declined contributing, but threatened to sue the directors for using the factory on the stated day.

This is difficult to believe. When it is considered that every dollar contributed to the Red Cross Fund will relieve the suffering of a defender of the Empire, the action above reported can be described by only one word—inhuman.—Campbellford News.

"The Way to Heaven" Was the Subject

Interest in Crossley Meetings Increasing—Encouraging Results

The interest in the Crossley meetings at St. James' church is increasing, and last night's definite, clear preaching produced results. As Mr. Crossley spoke of the way to heaven, he used a striking phrase: He who constructed the way made Heaven bankrupt in order that the earth might be restored to the favour of God. Excuses for not being in the "way," such as inconsistencies and hypocrisy in others, were ironically dealt with and ridiculed. Only one is worse than the hypocrite and that is the man who hides behind the hypocrite.

The way is a way of holiness, as Scripture reveals the terms; not a part of it, but the whole of it, set apart for God and accepted of Him. It includes the weakest babe in the faith as well as the greatest saint. Our privilege is to get into the centre of the way. "Here Lord I give myself away." This is the oath of allegiance to God, trust and peace. To attempt to vary the order is to fail; to try to feel and believe before we surrender is a mistake. By coming to Him and saying, "I give myself to Thee," as Mr. Crossley did on June 25, 1868, is to enter the way. The way is a way of [illegible] difficulty might [illegible] way but they are not the way. It is also a happy way. To say this world is a howling wilderness is to misrepresent it. Rather let us talk of our victories than our trials. Jesus can keep us in the way.

The closing of the meeting was most unique. It was what he termed, "Family Prayer." All those who were officials on any church, teachers in S. S. or leaders of Young People's Society, together with those who had never openly identified themselves with any church who resolved they would surrender, trust and accept the peace of God, came and surrounded the altar, singing, "Yes we will gather at the river," after which three briefly led in prayer. The meeting concluded with the Lord's Prayer repeated in unison.

The service to-night will be in the form of a rally for all the young people. The service to-night will be in the form of a rally for all the young people, scholars and students and those of youthful spirit. All these meetings are open to the public, and they are most cordially invited and will be made welcome.

OVER MILLION SOLDIERS LOST IN WORLD'S WAR

BERLIN, (via Amsterdam), Oct. 8.—Attaches of the war offices today estimate that the losses of all the armies engaged in the European war have reached the enormous total of 1,160,000 killed, wounded and missing. The German losses up to September first numbered 117,000. Since then 23,000 more have been listed, and it is estimated that further losses up to the present time have increased the German total to 225,000.

The British, French and Belgian losses are estimated at 325,000. Russia, the war officials declare, has suffered more heavily than any other nation. They fix that country's losses at 400,000 men.

Austria's losses are estimated at 125,000, while the German officials believe that Servia and Montenegro have lost 80,000 men. In making these estimates, it was pointed out, there is no reliable information at hand concerning the situation in any country but Germany.

Is Chairman of Two Committees

Ald. W. J. Johnston sat as the chairman of two committees of the Council last night. First he presided at the session of the Finance committee and afterwards at the meeting of the Power committee.

The Power Committee's duties, since the taking over of the Peterborough Light and Power Company have diminished to such an extent as to be almost negligible. Last night they discussed the employing of experts for the arbitration in connection with the taking over of the power system, but no action was taken.

THE LION AND THE PREACHER

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Thank you for your attention to this subject. Nature outside of man, that is God's nature, is not a nature of peace. Why? That answer will also answer the question as to why man's kind is so like nature. The Christian theory of Heaven is a theory of effort not rest as peace as some preach. Presumably if we do not behave ourselves we shall be thrown out as Satan was. That was not peace but conflict. God has not ordained peace. If He had we should have it. If He has not ordained it even in Heaven, why want it? But man is a part of nature. That explains it.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BOSTON BRAVES ARE SUPREMELY CONFIDENT

National Leaguers Are Full of the Fighting Spirit and Stallings Starts the Scrap With a Fierce Telephone Assault on Connie Mack---Bender and Rudolph Likely Pitching Choices.

(BY HUGH S. FULLERTON)

Special to The Examiner:

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 9.—Boston's Braves started their forlorn hope assault upon the stronghold of the world's champion Athletics today. Admitting themselves weaker, they still were filled with confidence and expected at least to give an excellent account of themselves in the series. I spent five hours yesterday with the Braves and every man in the team expects to win this series and is filled with confidence. They will admit that the Athletics are the better team in every department, yet they believe they will win and are willing to back themselves to the limit. The important problem of the day was pitchers, and it was evident that Stallings had decided on Rudolph to inaugurate the series, and Mack, as usual, had picked Bender as a starter. The news that Bender was to start was gladsome tidings to the Braves who, for some reason, known only to themselves, believe they can hit Bender as fast as he comes. The decision to start Rudolph was not unanimously cheered by the Braves. Some of them wanted James to start, believing that if he started and got away with his first game, they would win the series. Stallings evidently was in doubt when I talked with him. He did not know whether to start James or Rudolph, but inclined in favour of Rudolph. He also was hesitating about third base, but finally admitted he intended to start Deal and send Whitted in to bat and play third at the first opportunity. The Braves are planning an "Attack brusque," and hope to sweep the Athletics off their feet by their rushing aggressive methods. They believe that world's champions can be beaten by aggressive attacks and will go at them from the start. Stallings started it by a fierce verbal attack upon Mack. Mack had refused to permit the Braves to use the Athletics' field for practice and had dodged Stallings' request for permission to have his men look over the battle ground. Stallings got Mack on the phone, and proceeded to call him a liar, a jesuitical creek and a few other things, and to dare him to say to his face what he said over the 'phone. The first assault of the Boston manager upon the suave, serene leader of the Athletics was a shocker. Stallings believes in fighting it out to a finish, and his attack upon Mack was just part of the programme of "goat getting." The Braves intend to attack viciously, and any player who shakes hands with one of the Athletics will be in bad.

There is more real ill feeling between the two teams than has been evidenced in a series in years. The surprising thing is that the Braves are chock full of confidence in themselves. Every one of them thinks they are bound to win, and any argument to the contrary is ridiculed. They believe their pitching strength will carry them through. The Braves' signalling system is devised with the idea of permitting the Athletics to think they have it, and to cross them on every turn. Sentiment is largely in favour of the Braves, even here. The betting, however, has been extremely light and little Boston money is in evidence, even with 2 to 1 freely offered.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 8.—Weather conditions for the first game of the world's series, while not favourable early to-day, appeared better than the offerings of the weatherman yesterday indicated. It was warm, damp and mucky, and the skies were heavy with clouds. There was no mist or rain such as fell yesterday, however, and there appeared to be a chance of clearing skies before game time.

ON BRITAIN'S HONOUR ROLL: THE RETURN FROM THE CHARGE.
—From London Illustrated News.

FOUR GOOD WRESTLERS ON ONE CARD FOR SATURDAY'S BOUTS

Sporting editors must be careful of their reputations as well as other citizens. Of course it is impossible to hold the good opinion of all readers, but every reader appreciates being dealt with honestly.

For this reason sporting editors are often loth to support with their published approval, contests which they know will be inferior.

With this in mind the sporting editor of the Examiner has no qualms in stating that there will be two good wrestling bouts in Peterborough Saturday night, barring accident or unforseen events.

Everyone who knows Gene Hurtubise, Charlie Frazer, Alf. Stardy and Jack Forbes, the four wrestlers who will participate in the bouts on that night, is convinced that they are all good men at the profession. They have all four met the best in the world at their weights.

For some time there has been a little ill-feeling between Hardy and Forbes owing to keen rivalry and for this reason the bout will be bitterly contested. Gene Hurtubise is up against a fire eater who will make him go all the way.

PROGRAMME FOR THE BIG HOLIDAY MEET

Thanksgiving will be a great day for the boys and young men of Peterborough, as they will be given an opportunity to enjoy in full a set of athletic games which will be the best exhibition given in Peterborough in some time. Every athlete should enter and make this meet a big success and encourage the Commmittee in charge to further promote this much-needed line of sport.

Indications point to a good entry in the big road race, which is over a splendid course and the best men in Peterborough and vicinity have entered. Smoke, who won the Examiner Cup, will be seen again this year Some critics say that he is the best natural runner ever seen in these parts. However he should be pushed to his limit if he wins this year as Charlie Thorpe, who has come second to Smoke twice, will enter again this year, and should make a fine showing. There are other men entering, but their ability in this deriction is not known at present. Among them will be Taylor, who comes from the Chemong tribe. The race will start at Riverside and end there, so that every one will need go to the Park in order to see the finish, as one mile will be run on the track.

The international tug-of-war promises to be one of the big events and should cause lots of excitement among the different nationalities. Those expected to take part are teams representing English, Irish, Scotch French, Indian and Italian.

The Public School relay race will be a feature well worth seeing. Keen rivalry is being worked up among the teams representing the different schools. Every boy and girl in Peterborough should come out and cheer for their team.

Following are the events and the time they will take place.

2.15—Peck 100 yard dash.
2.25—Huycke 100-yard dash; Peck high jump.
2.35—Eastwood 100 yard dash.

WAR FUND COMMITTEE.

The members of the Women's War Fund Committee are reminded that at the last meeting of the Committee it was decided to have a regular monthly meeting for the transaction of business, the second Wednesday of every month, in the Recreation Room of the Armouries, at 3.30 p.m. All members of this Committee are earnestly urged to be present next Wednesday, Oct. 14th.

Boston Braves Hammer Bender

Collins to McInnis. Two runs, two hits, no errors.

The fans cheered wildly when the Braves put their two runs across, the royal rooters of Boston leading. Bender had poor control of his fast ball, and in the pinches was putting it across with little effect.

Philadelphia—McInnis walked on four straight balls. Strunk singled to right, scoring McInnis. The ball got through Moran and rolled to the fence. Strunk reaching third. Barry fanned, swinging for the third strike at a high curve outside. Strunk was out at the plate on Schang's grounder to Evers. Bender forced Schang. Maranville to Evers. One run, one hit, one error.

Rudolph got out of a tight place in this inning. Strunk threw away a chance to score when Schang grounded to Evers. Strunk got a poor start and was out at the plate, although Evers' throw was high.

Third Innings.

Boston—Rudolph was out. Bender tossing his high bounder to McGinnis. Moran fanned. Bender gave him three straight balls for a starter, then put four squarely across the plate. Moran fouled off the second strike and then swung his head off at the next offering. Evers flied to Oldring who made a lazy catch of an easy pop. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Bender again had difficulty controlling his fast one and it sailed away from the batter'se shoulder high. He pulled himself together in the pinches and retired the Braves with ease desite his wildness.

Philadelphia—Murphy fanned, taking a look at the third strike. Oldring fanned. Rudolph was using his slow ball with good effect and had the rube swinging at balls which he should never have offered at. Collins was retired on a smashing bounder which Rudolph plucked from the turf and tossed to Schmidt. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Rudolph showed better pitching form in this inning. His curve and slow ball had the Athletics baffled and they failed to get the ball out of the infield.

Fourth Innings.

Boston—Connolly singled to right centre, a prety line drive over Collins' head. Whitted hit into a double play, Bender to Barry to McInnis. It was a chain lightning play. Bender shot the ball to Barry like a streak, and Barry buzzed it to McInnis. Schmidt grounded out, Collins to McInnis. No runs, one hit, no erross.

The Braves resorted to the hit and run in this inning instead of trying to sacrifice one run across. Whitted's smash went squarely to Bender and what looked like a promising start ended right there.

Philadelphia—Baker fanned. Rudolph slipped across the fadeway for the third strike. Baker swung hard and missed it by a foot. McInnis also fanned. McInnis took his third swing at a slow high one which sailed across almost even with the top of his head. Strunk singled to left centre off the first ball pitched, but was out stretching it. Connolly to Maranville. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Fifth Innings.

Boston.— Gowdy hit the first ball pitched to the fence in right centre, and made third with ease. Maranville singled to right, scoring Gowdy. It was beautifully played, Maranville reaching high and putting the ball on a line past first. Deal attempted to sacrifice, but hit into a double play. Bender grabbing his pop and throwing to McInnis. Maranville being doubled off first. Rudolph fanned, swinging at the third strike. One run, two hits, no errors.

Hank Gowdy again was the hero. His drive to the score board would have been a home run for a faster runner.

Philadelphia.—Barry popped to Maranville The midget shortstop ran into deep left and made a marvellous catch with his back to the ball. Schang fanned, taking a look at the third strike. Rudolph was mixing up his spitter and his slow ball and had Schang guessing. Bender flied to Whitted. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Rudolph seems to be getting stronger as the game progresses. His change of pace, including his slow one, spitter and curves are a source of wonderment to the Athletics. He has something on every batter.

Sixth Innings.

Boston—Moran fouled to Barry. Jack caught the ball near the foul line while going at full speed. It was a greater catch than the one by Maranville. Evers singled to centre on the second ball pitched. Connolly walked. Whitted tripled to right centre, scoring Evers and Connolly. He caught one of Bender's fast ones, high outside, squarely on the nose and the ball travelled on alone almost to the fence. Schmidt singled through Barry, scoring Whitted. The ball shot between Barry's legs like a bullet and he didn't have a chance to stop it. That was all for Chief Bender. For the first time the great Indian pitcher had been driven out of the box in a world's series game. Wyckoff relieved Bender, six runs eight hits off Bender in 5 1-3 innings. Gowdy walked after Wyckoff's two pitches had been called strikes. Maranville was safe at first when Wyckoff threw to third on his grounder to late to catch Schmidt. It was a foolish play, for it was a hit and run and Schmidt was almost at third when the ball was hit. Deal hit into a double play, Baker to McInnis. Three runs, three hits, no errors.

Wyckoff was saved from positive humiliation when Baker started the double play which ended the inning. Wyckoff should have started a double on a throw to second on Maranville's top instead of trying for Schmidt at third.

Philadelphia.— Murphy out, Evers to Schmidt, on the first ball pitched. Oldring out on a high bounder, Deal to Schmidt. Collins out, Rudolph to Schmidt. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Rudolph had the Mackmen eating out of his hand in this inning, three easy bounders to the infield being the best they could do. Lapp replaced Schang behind the bat.

Seventh Innings.

Boston — Rudolph singled over second, Collins making a remarkable stop. Rudolph was almost caught at first on a relay, Collins to Barry to McInnis. Moran forced Rudolph, Baker to Barry, on an attempted sacrifice. Evers fanned as Moran stole second. It was an attempt at the hit and run, but Evers failed to connect. Connolly out, McInnis to Wyckoff. No runs, 1 hit, no errors.

Moran's failure to sacrifice nipped in the bud another chance for the Braves to score, as Rudolph led off the innings with a single.

Philadelphia—Baker was safe on Evers' error. It looked a hit as the ball took a bad bound and hit Evers in the chest, but the official scorers said otherwise. McInnis walked on four straight balls, the last one being a wild pitch, but Gowdy caught it after leaping high in the air. Strunk out, at first, Schmidt unassisted. Barry fanned, taking a wild swing at a wide curve for the last strike. Lapp out, Rudolph to Schmidt. No runs, no hits, one error.

Eighth Innings.

Boston—Whitted popped to Baker. Schmidt dropped a single in short left. Oldring made a great try for the ball but failed to reach it. Gowdy singled to left on the first ball pitched, Schmidt going to third. Maranville fanned. Schmidt scored on a double steal, but Gowdy was out trying for third. Lapp to Baker. One run, two hits, no errors.

Ninth Innings.

Boston—Deal out, Baker to McInnis. Rudolph was greeted with thunderous cheering, when he came to bat. Rudolph out, Barry to McInnis. Moran out, Baker to McInnis. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Philadelphia did not score in their half of the ninth. Final score:

	R	H	E
Philadelphia	1	5	0

FOOTBALL

An interesting football game was played at the King Edward grounds yesterday between the King Edward and King George school teams, the former winning by 2 to 0. Following were the line-ups:

King Edward—Goal, Parkins; backs, Blondin, Killingbeck; halves, Batten, Hunt, Evans; forwards, Wise Fairbrass, Taylor Cranfield, Jubb.

King George—Goal, Collins; backs, Stevens, Record; halves, Pretty, Anderson, Lippsett; forwards, Evans, Hayes, Hagerman, Hill, Legon.

STUFF THAT "NUTS" ARE MADE OF.

A wounded soldier—a lance-corporal in a Highland regiment—said to a doctor in a London hospital: "Our officers were just splendid, taking their chance with the rest of us, and always cheerful and bucking us up. Just before I was plugged I saw Mr. ——— tumble over. I knew that he was badly hit, and he fell down just alongside of me. He was our youngest officer and not much more than a boy, but one of the best. I tried to make him lie a bit comfortable, and he gave the last two cigarettes in his case. I heard that he died the same night, and I wish I had not smoked those cigarettes—I wish I had kept them. Call them what you like—they are nuts. They do their bit of swank at home, but, by heaven, you should see the stuff they are made up of at the front. There ought to be no picking out among them for the Victoria Cross. If I had my way every one of them should have it."

sustained over fairly open ground made by a force equal to ours, we lost only ten killed and sixty wounded, while over four hundred of the enemy surrendered after fifty had been killed.'"

LONDON, October 9.—Antwerp's capture by the Germans will be an empty victory. While maintaining their optimistic belief that the Belgian city will be able to withstand all assaults, the military experts here point out that with the withdrawal from Antwerp of the main forces of the Belgian army, now successfully accomplished by King Albert, the Germans will really gain nothing by the city's capture.

London has fear of Antwerp's use if the Germans capture it, as a Zeppelin base; Germany already has a Zeppelin base at Cologne only a few hours' distant at most from Antwerp. The city is not available for use as a naval base because of the necessity of a passage through Dutch waters.

To-night! Clean Your Bowels and Stop Headache, Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box.

Take a Cascaret to-night to cleanse your Liver, Stomach and Bowels, and you will surely feel great by morning. You men and women who have headache, coated tongue, a bad cold, are bilious, nervous, upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have backache and feel all worn out. Are you keeping your bowels clean with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the bowels.

Remember, a Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning. A 10-cent box from your druggist means healthy bowel action; a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Don't forget the children.

NEWS FROM RUSSIA IS UNCERTAIN

Austrians Reported to Have Relieved Przemysl—Exact Situation Not Clear

ENEMY CLAIMS GAINS

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The following official statement was issued last night by the chief of the general staff in Petrograd:

"On Oct. 11 fighting began on the left bank of the Vistula, in the direction of Ivangorod and Warsaw.

"There is no change at other points on our front.

"Detachments of Russian cavalry, having passed through the defiles in the Carpathian Mountains, have emerged into the plains of Hungary."

An earlier statement announced the abandonment of the siege of Przemysl for strategic reasons.

From the east came tidings of a decided reversal in form, the despatches both from Vienna and Petrograd indicating that the Austrian army at Przemysl, so often reported surrounded, hopelessly outclassed and on the verge of surrender, had, with the aid of reinforcements turned on the Russians and forced them to retreat.

The first news of this claim emanated during the morning from the Austrian capital. It was followed later in the way by what purports to be a Petrograd admission that the Russians had abandoned the siege of Przemysl for strategical reasons, with the object of drawing up a new line against the Austro-German army in other points of Galicia.

Whatever be the truth of the situation the Russians have been claiming an unbroken series of victories in their sweep through Galicia, and the coincidence of yesterday's despatches, supplemented as they were by more circumstantial accounts from Vienna of a vigorous Austro-German offensive seemed to presage important news.

The most reliable report indicates that Gen. Rennenkampf is now before Koenigsberg, menacing the Danzig-Thorn line of forts. These names are familiar and were featured daily some weeks ago when the Russian advance first drove into East Prussia. But Gen. Von Hindenberg won a victory at Allenstein, which forced back the Czar's legions. It has taken weeks of persistent fighting to recover the lost ground, the last phase of this movement developing in a series of operations in the Russian Province of Suwalki, where the Germans suffered heavily. Their armies have recovered poise again, however, and are offering a stubborn resistance all along this front.

The Russian centre has made slight but progressive advances toward Breslau, and are gradually forcing their opponents back. On the Vistula German arms appear to be successful, and the Russians are fighting desperately to affect a passage of that river. In fact, the situation in Galicia and southwestern Poland cannot be judged accurately because of the strict censorship. But desperate fighting is under way and the result appears to be very doubtful, with the advantage turning to the Austro-German forces.

The official German statement of yesterday has the following to say of the eastern operations:

"From Vienna we have reports that in the face of heavy destruction Russia has given up the attempt to take the besieged fortress of Przemysl.

"The Austrian army defeated six Russian divisions near Lancut and routed one Cossack division east of Nymano."

Issue of Rifles Suspended.

OTTAWA, Oct. 13.—The issue of more rifles and service ammunition to civilian rifle associations is suspended by the Government until further orders, according to a headquarters announcement.

RUSSIAN CRUISER BLOWN UP

Armoured Cruiser With 573 Men on Board is Victim of Torpedo Brush With Submarines

ENTIRE CREW DROWNED

PETROGRAD, Oct. 13.—An official communication issued yesterday announces that on Oct. 11 the Russian armored cruiser Pallada was torpedoed in the Baltic Sea by a German submarine and sank with her crew.

The text of the communication, which was made public by the Marine Department, follows:

"On Oct. 10 German submarines were sighted in the Baltic Sea. The same day, early in the morning the submarines attacked the cruiser Admiral Makarov, which had stopped to search a suspected bark flying the commercial flag of the Netherlands.

"A submarine of the enemy launched several torpedoes, which luckily missed the mark and caused no damage whatsoever to the cruiser.

"On Oct. 11 at two o'clock in the afternoon the submarines of the enemy again attacked our cruisers Bayan and Pallada, which were patrolling the Baltic.

"Although the cruisers opened in time a very strong fire, one of the submarines succeeded in launching torpedoes against the Pallada, whereupon an explosion resulted and the cruiser with all her crew sank."

The armored cruiser Pallada carried a complement of 568 men. She measured 443 feet and had a displacement of 775 tons. Her speed was 22 knots. With the Admiral Marakov and the Bayan she constituted a group of cruisers known as the "Bayan class."

The Pallada carried two 8-inch guns, eight 6-inch guns, twenty-two 12-pounders and four 3-pounders, in addition to torpedo tubes. She was laid down in 1905.

Russian Campaign Veiled.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 13.—The battle which began Saturday on the western border of Poland equals the battle in France on the Aisne in extent and may equal it in length of time. The numbers of the opposing armies are as great as in the western theatre of war.

Semi-official intimations that secrecy is needed for the success of the Russian operations have been published and no information as to the tremendous conflict now taking place has been given out.

NOT OVER BY CHRISTMAS.

War Will See More Than One Christmas Thinks Curzon.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Earl Curzon of Kedleston, formerly Viceroy of India, in a speech made at a war meeting at Harrow School last night, said that the taking of Antwerp was a deliberate part of the German plan.

"Germany has taken Antwerp to fortify it, to keep it, to make a great naval port of it, to use it as a great jumping-off place for her future attempts upon this country. It is no temporary occupation unless we make it so."

The speaker added that by fortifying Antwerp Germany would secure a grip on the whole of Belgium, make Holland play her will, and then settle down to her main object — the destruction of this country. He said Britain was in for a long war, and declared he was shocked that some people should think the hostilities would be over by Christmas. In his opinion more than one Christmas would roll by before the ending of hostilities. In conclusion he advised his hearers not to begin to divide up the German Empire "before you have got hold of it."

Britain's need of more fighting men was emphasized by the announcement last night that the infantry standard, which had been raised to check the great rush of recruits at the outbreak of the war, has again been lowered. The minimum height for recruits, which formerly was 5 feet 6 inches, has been placed at 5 feet 4 inches, and chest measurement from 35 1-2 to 34 1-2 inches.

An appeal has been issued in Glasgow for 2,000 recruits to replace the naval men interned in Holland.

PARIS IS SCARED.

Two Visits of German Bomb-Droppers In 24 Hours Causes Panic.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—Paris was attacked again yesterday by a German bomb-dropping aeroplane, the second aerial raid over the city within twenty-four hours, and as a result of the flight the population is in terror and is demanding that the French aerial blockade be strengthened.

The ease with which the German aviator penetrated to a point over Paris and dropped two bombs on the Northern Railroad station, so soon after Saturday's raid by two machines which scattered twenty bombs, killing three and wounding fourteen persons, has roused the people to a realization that their overhead danger is constant and unprevented by the French Aviation Corps.

Following Sunday morning's raid by two German aeroplanes, when the Cathedral of Notre Dame was struck by one of the falling bombs, all of the aerial craft defending Paris was made ready for instant action. Despite these preparations a German aeroplane swooped over Paris at 9.15 yesterday morning and dropped two bombs between two crowded railroad trains which were leaving the Northern Railroad station.

ENEMY NOW MOVING ON OSTEND

Three Hundred Mile Front is Being Formed Across Belgium and Down Into France

ALLIES HOLD GROUND

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Both sides are bending every energy for the campaign that will decide the fate of Ostend. The possession of this port would be of immense advantage to Germany, of much greater significance than the capture of Antwerp. To drive the assault home the Germans are undoubtedly bringing up every available man, both from Antwerp and such points as their centre and left can spare. Opposing these will be an equally allied army, made up largely, it is rumored, of fresh British, Indian and Canadian troops. The battle may open at any moment and will probably be long and bloody.

A Central News despatch from Amsterdam says a troop of German cavalry entered Ghent yesterday morning and the German colors were hoisted over the Town Hall.

Uhlans have also arrived at Selzaete, a short distance from Ghent, and the commander announced that 4,000 soldiers must be quartered in the village.

The whole German front is preparing to take the offensive again along a battle line no less than 300 miles long.

German cavalry has advanced within thirty miles of Ostend; Ghent is threatened by the invaders; Uhlans, screening a heavy Prussian force, have been encountered all through the territory west of Lille.

The first activity of any importance on the centre of the opposing armies that has occurred in some days took place yesterday north of Soissons and east and southwest of Verdun. The French field guns opened on the German trenches in that region and kept up a steady play on their opponents for several hours. Then the French infantry advanced with a rush, and there was a hurculean combat for possession of the trenches. The Germans fought with their usual determination, but were compelled to cede ground at certain points. North of Soissons the French won positions of value. The enemy was also thrown back from elevated posts before Verdun, where preparations were under way by the Germans to essay a new artillery attack on the fortress.

Between Lassigny and Roye, where the allies won considerable ground Sunday, the Germans fought with great valor yesterday in an effort to retrieve the positions lost. But allied reinforcements had come up in the night, and the advantage of Sunday was pushed home, making an appreciable inroad into territory held by the Kaiser's men.

The capture of Apremont by the French is regarded as a great tactical victory. This point covers the German line of communications into Lorraine and would be an effective obstacle to a retreat of the German forces now at St. Mihiel.

In Northern France and Southern Belgium great events are transpiring. Cavalry engagements continue to be the outstanding feature of the fighting, large forces of mounted troops participating on both sides.

French Statement.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—Continuation of the activity in the north of France, and repulses of the Germans between Lassigny and Roye are reported in the official statement given out yesterday afternoon by the War Office. The statement follows:

"On our left wing the cavalry engagements continue in the region of La Bassee, Estieres and Bazbrouck. Between Arras and the Oise the enemy has attempted numerous attacks which have been repulsed, notably between Lassigny and Roye.

"In the centre we have made some progress on the plateaus on the right bank of the River Aisne, before Soissons and to the east and southeast of Verdun.

"On our right wing, in the Vosges, the enemy has made a night attack in the region of Bam de Sapt, to the north od St. Die, but repulsed."

"The flag captured yesterday belonged to the 6th Regiment of Pomerasian Infantry, No. 49, of the 2nd Prussian Army Corps.

"The fusileer brigade was engaged on the 9th and until the morning of the 10th against German forces, which it repulsed, inflicting serious losses. Two hundred Germans were killed and 50 made prisoners. The French losses were 9 killed, 9 wounded and one man missing.

"In Belgium, according to the latest information received from Antwerp, the Germans occupy only the outskirts of the city, the 24 forts on both banks of the Escaut river resisting energetically.

"In Russia the battle on the East Prussian frontier continues with desperate fighting. To the northwest of Lyck the Germans are in retreat, having destroyed the bridges in Southern Poland between Ivangorod and Sandomir. Artilery duels are in progress with the enemy's columns that have reached the Vistula."

"There is nothing in particular to report.

"Violent attacks have occurred along the front. We have gained ground at some points and we have not lost any at any place."

NOT BEATEN YET.

Twenty-Four of Antwerps Forts Still Hold Out.

LONDON, Oct. 13. — The Times correspondent in eBigium under date of Sunday says:

Twenty-four of the Antwerp forts were still holding out to-day in the face of a continuous bombardment. Last night over twenty blazing fires could be distinguished from afar in different parts of the city.

The city itself and the remaining defences are in the hands of the Germans who have signalized their arrival by a demand for a war levy of $100,000,000.

"Antwerp was not seriously damaged by the German bombardment," says The Chronicle's Amsterdam correspondent. "Only the suburb of Berchem and the southeast quarter of the town suffered badly.

"Long after they had been evacuated by the Belgians the Germans continued firing on and around the ruins of the blown-up forts. They feared mines and hoped thus to destroy them. Near the southern suburbs the ground had been extensively mined by the Belgians, but the Germans were warned by trailers from within the city and took care to avoid the danger zone.

"On Thursday morning the retreating troops from Antwerp passed on their flight to Ostend no fewer than 600 motor cars filled with soldiers who had already passed through the town. The intention was to reach Ostend by forced marches, and the soldiers were relieved of their knapsacks, which were carried in the vans. Motor 'buses from London carried footsore troops who had fallen out of line. Then came columns of machine guns drawn by dogs."

Altogether 22,000 British and Belgian soldiers are interned at different points in Holland. About 1,500 of these men are British marines, who were driven over the boundary. This statement has been made by the Dutch War Office, according to a despatch from the Rotterdam correspondent of The Times.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

By Geo. Allan England

"If we can find those records, we'll have made a long step toward solving the problem of how to handle the Folk. They aren't exactly what one would call an amenable tribe, at best. We need their history, even the little of it that the records must contain, for surely there must be names and events in them of great value in our work of trying to bring these people to the surface and re-civilize them."

"Well, what's to hinder our getting the records now?" she asked seriously, with wonder in her grey and level gaze.

"That, for one thing!"

He gestured at the Abyss.

"It's a good six or seven hundred miles wide, and we already know how deep it is. I don't think we want to risk trying to cross it again and running out of fuel en route! Coll-planing down to the village is quite a different proposition from a straight-away flight across!"

She sat pensive a moment.

"There must be some way around," said she at last. "Otherwise a party of survivors couldn't have set out for Storm King on the Hudson to deposit a set of records there!"

"That's so, too. —But—remember 'Never returned.' I figure it this way: A party of the survivors probably started for New York, exploring. The big, concrete cathedral on Storm King—it was new in 1916, you remember—was known the country over as the most massive piece of architecture this side of the pyramids. They must have planned to leave one set of records there, in case the cast, too, was devastated. Well—"

"Do you suppose they succeeded?"

"No telling. At anyrate, there's a chance of it. And as for this Rocky Mountain cache, that's manifestly out of the question, for now."

"So then?" she queried eagerly.

"So then our job is to strike for Storm King. Incidentally we can revisit Hope Villa, our bungalow on the banks of the Hudson. It's been a year since we left it, almost—ten months, at any rate. Gad! What marvels and miracles have happened since then. Beta—what perils, what escapes! Wouldn't you like to see our little nest again? We could rest up and plan and strengthen ourselves for the greater tasks ahead. And then—"

He paused, a change upon his face, his eyes lighting with a sudden glow. She saw and understood; and her breast rose with sudden keen emotion.

"You mean," whispered she, "in our own home?"

"Where better?"

She paled as, kneeling beside her, he flung a powerful arm about her, and pulled her to him, breathing heavily.

"Don't! Don't!" she forbade. "No, no, Allan—there's so much work to do—you mustn't!"

To her a vision rose of dream-children—strong sons and daughters yet unborn. Their eyes seemed smiling, their fingers closing on hers. Cloud-like, yet very real, they beckoned her, and in her stirred the call of motherhood—of life to be. Her heart-strings echoed to that harmony; it seemed already as though a tiny head, downy-soft, was nestling in her bosom, while eager lips quested, quested.

"No, Allan! No!"

Almost fiercely she flung him back and stood up.

"Come!" said she. "Let us start at once. Nothing remains for us to do here. Let us go—home!"

An hour later the Pauillac spiralled for aloft, above the edge of the Abyss, then swept into its eastward tangent, and in swift, droning flight rushed toward the longed-for place of dreams, of rest, of love.

Before them stretched infinities of labour and tremendous struggle; but for a little space they knew they now were free for this, the consummation of their dreams, of all their hopes, their happiness, their joy.

CHAPTER III.
Catastrophe!

Toward five o'clock next afternoon, from the swooping back of the air-dragon they sighted a far blue ribbon winding among wooded heights, and knew Hudson once more lay before them.

The girl's heart leaped for joy at thought of once again seeing Hope Villa, the beach, the garden, the sun-dial—all the thousand and one little happy and pleasant things that, made by them in the heart of the vast wilderness, had brought them such intimate and unforgetable delight.

"There it is, Allan!" cried she, pointing. "There's the river again. We'll soon be home now — home again!"

He smiled and nodded, watchful at the wheel, and swung the biplane a little to southward, in the direction where he judged the bungalow must lie.

Weary they both were, yet full of life and strength. The trip from the chasm had been tedious, merely a long succession of hours in the rushing air, with unbroken forest, hills, lakes, rivers, and ever more forest steadily rolling away to westward like a vast carpet a thousand feet below.

No sign of man, no life, no gap in nature's all-embracing sway. Even the occasional heap of ruins marking the grave of some forgotten city served only to intensify the old half-terror they had felt, when flying for the first time, at thought of the tremendous desolation of the world.

The shining plain of Lake Erie had served the first day as a landmark to keep them true to their course.

That night they had stopped at the ruins of Buffalo, where they had camped in the open, and where next morning Stern had fully replenished his fuel-tanks with the usual supplies of alcohol from the debris of two or three large drug-stores.

From Buffalo eastward, over almost the same course along which the hurricane of ten months ago had driven them, battling at random with the gale, they steered by the compass. Toward mid-morning they saw a thin line of smoke arising in the far north, answered by still another on the hills beyond, but to these signs they gave no heed.

Already they had seen and scorned them during their first stay at the bungalow. They felt that nothing more was to be seriously feared from such survivors of the Horde as had escaped the great Battle of the Tower—a year and a half previously.

"Those chaps won't bother us again; I'm sure of that!" said Allan, nodding toward the smoke-columns that rose, lazily blue, on the horizon. "The scare we threw into them in Madison Forest will last them one while!"

Still in this confident, defiant mood it was that they sighted the river again and watched it rapidly broaden as the Pauillac, in a long series of flat arcs, spurned the June air and whirled them onward toward their goal.

Nearer the Hudson drew, and nearer still; and now its untroubled azure, calm save for a few cat's-paws of breeze that idled on the surface, stretched almost beneath them in their rapid flight.

"We're still a little too far north, I see," the man judged, and swept the biplane round to southward.

The ruins of Newburgh lay presently upon their right. Soon after the crumbled walls of West Point's pride slid past in silence, save for the chatter of the engines, the whirling roar of the propeller-blades' vast energy.

No boat now vexed the flood. Upon its bosom neither steam nor sail now plowed a furrow. Along the banks no speeding train flung its smoke-pennant to the wind. Primeval silence, universal calm, wrapped all things.

Beatrice shuddered slightly. Now that they were nearing "home" the desolation seemed more appalling.

"Oh, Allan, is it possible all this will ever be peopled again—alive?"

"Certain to be! Once we get those records and begin transplanting the Merucaans, the rest will be only a matter of time!"

She made no answer, but in her eyes shone pride that he could know such visions, have such faith.

Already they recognized the ruins of Nyack, and beyond them the point in the river behind which, they knew, lay Hope Villa, nestling in its gardens, its little sphere of cultivation hewn from the very heart of the dense wilderness.

Allan slackened speed, crossed to the eastern bank, and jockeyed for a safe landing.

The point slipped backward and away. There, right ahead, they caught a glimpse of the long white beach where they had fished and bathed and built their boat-house, and whence in their little yawl they had ten months before started on their trip of exploration—a trip destined to end so strangely in the Abyss.

"Home! Home!" cried Beta, the quick tears starting to her lids. "Oh, home again!"

Already the great plane was swooping downward toward the beach, hardly a mile away, when a harsh shout escaped the man.

"Look! Canoes! My God—what—"

As the prive of the Pauillac opened up the concave of the sand and brought its whole length to view, Stern and the girl suddenly became aware of trouble.

There, strung along the beach irregularly, they all at once made out ten, twenty, thirty boats. Still afar, they could see these were the same rough bancas such as they had seen after the battle—bancas in one of which they two had escaped up-river!

"Boats! The Horde again!"

Even as he shouted a tiny, black, misshapen little figure ran crouching out our boat loose afterward — and and a third, and now a dozen showed there, very distinct and hideous, upon the white crescent.

Stern's heart went sick within him. A terrible rage welled up—a hate such as he had never believed possible to feel.

Wild imprecations struggled to be voiced. He snapped his lips together in a thin line, his eyes narrowed, and his face went grey.

"The infernal little beasts!" he gritted. "Tried to trap us in the tower—vut our boat loose afterward—and now invading us! Don't know when they're licked, the swine!"

Beatrice had lost her colour now. Milk-white her face was; her eyes grew wide with terror; she strove to speak, but could not.

Her hand went out in a wild, repelling gesture, as though by the very power of her love for home she could protect it now against the insursion of these foul, distorted, inhuman little monsters.

Stern acted quickly. He had been about to cut off power and coast for the beach; but now he veered suddenly to eastward again, rotated the rising-plane, and brought the Pauillac up at a sharp tilt. Banking, he advanced the spark a notch; the engine shrilled a half-tone higher, and with increased speed the aerp lifted them bravely in a long and rising swoop.

He snatched his automatic from its holster on his hip and as the plane swept past the beach, down-stream, let fly a spatter of steel-jacketed souvenirs at the fast-thickening packk on the sand.

Far up to the girl and him, half heard through the clatter of the motors, they sensed a thin, defiant, barbarous yell—a yapping chorus, bestial and horrible.

Again Stern fired.

He could see quick spurts of water jet up along the edge of the sand, and one of the creatures fell, but this was only a chance shot.

At that distance, firing from a swift-skimming plane, he knew he could do no execution, and with a curse slid the pistol back again into its place.

"Oh, for a dirigible and a few Pulverite bombs, same as we had in the tower!" he wished. "I'd clean the blighters out mighty quick!"

But now Beatrice was pointing, with a cry of dismay, down, away at the bungalow itself, which had for a moment become visible at the far end of the clearing as the Pauillac scudded past.

Even as Stern thought: "Odd, but they're not afraid of us — a flying-machine means nothing to them, does not terrify them as it would human savages. They're too debased even to feel fear!"—even as this thought crossed his brain he, too, saw the terrible thing that the girl had cried out at sight of.

"My God!" he shouted. "This—this is too much!"

All about the bungalow, their home, the scene of such happy hours, so many dreams and hopes, such heart-enthralling labours, hundreds of the Horde were swarming.

Like vicious parasites attacking prey, they overran the garden, the grounds, even the house itself.

As in a flash, Stern knew all his work of months must be undone—the fruit trees he had rescued from the forest be cut down or broken, the bulbs and roots in the garden uptorn, even the hedges and fences trampled flat.

Worse still, the bungalow was being destroyed! Rather, its contents, since the concrete walls defied the venomous troop.

They knew, at any rate, the use of fire, and not so swiftly skimmed the Pauillac as to prevent both Stern and Beatrice seeing a thin but ominous thread of smoke out-curling on the June air from one of the living-room windows.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."—Mrs. JOSIE HAM, R. Dr. Chase Is No Stranger

In This Home — Receipts Book and Medicines Kept at Hand All the Time.

There is no better safeguard against disease and suffering than a good cathartic medicine. In the great majority of homes Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are constantly kept at hand, because they quickly awaken the action of liver, kidneys and bowels, and cure the most common ills of life.

Mrs. Thos. Smith, Jamestown, Ont., writes:—"Dr. Chase is no stranger in our home, for we have two of his Receipt Books in the house. My father and my husband's father each had one, and I have been familiar with it ever since I can remember. It was only natural that we should use the Kidney-Liver Pills, and we found them so satisfactory in regulating the digestive system and curing the common ills of life that we always keep them on hand. Many a time those pills have saved me much suffering and prevented serious disease. We also keep the Ointment in the house all the time."

STARVING FOR THE BREAD OF LIFE

In the Midst of a Famine After Righteousness.

THE POWER OF GOD'S WORD

A Famine in the Land—Many Hearts Crying Out For a Living and True God—Faint For Want of Spiritual Food—Table of Divine Provision Well Filled—The Bread and the Water of Life—A Satisfying Portion.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

October 11.—To-day Pastor Russell chose for his text the words, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." (Amos 8:11.) He spoke in part as follows:

To-day this prophecy is fulfilled in our midst! Notwithstanding the fact that during the past century Bibles have been printed and circulated amongst the people by the million, and notwithstanding the fact that education has become so general that rich and poor, old and young, have the ability to read the Word of God, nevertheless we are in the midst of the very famine which the Prophet specifies. It seems almost incredible that we should be famishing now with Bibles in our homes, when our saintly forefathers did not famish, although their education was limited. The secret lies in the fact that increasing intelligence on every hand has awakened our reasoning faculties along religious lines, and the result is the gnawing of hunger in our hearts. Both heart and flesh cry out for a living and true God—a God greater than ourselves—more just, more powerful, more loving. Realizing our own impotency, we feel more and more our need of the Friend whose love is closer than a brother's.

Consequently we cannot find in the Scriptures the rest, the refreshment and the comfort which our forefathers derived therefrom. Consequently the young men and the purest of heart in the world are repelled by the religion of the past. They are hungry for the Truth, thirsty for the refreshment which they need. Intellectually, many are looking, wandering from sea to sea, desiring the Bread of Life.

Scanning the creeds of all denominations, they find these practically alike as respects theories of eternal reprobation and damnation for all except the Elect, the saintly few. They grow faint for want of spiritual food and drink. They even look to the heathen world, and examine the Theosophy of India, the Buddhism of Japan and the Confucianism of China, seeking for some satisfying portion of Truth.

In some respects these are like the prodigal son—far from home. They perceive the swinish content with the husks of business, money, pleasure and politics; but their spiritual longings cannot be satisfied with the husks which the "swine" eat. Because of their interest in spiritual things they are thought peculiar. They are misunderstood by their best earthly friends. In their wanderings along the highways of science and world-religion they must surely learn that they will get no satisfaction from those sources.

Ho, all ye that hunger for Truth, come ye! There is an abundance for us all in our Heavenly Father's wonderful provision—in the Bible. Deserting all the creeds and traditions of men, let us gather at our Heavenly Father's Board as His family, as His children. Let us prove the truthfulness of His declaration that "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that reverence Him." Let us seek and find the satisfying portion. Let us satisfy our longings at the table of Divine provision. Mark the words of the Lord and consider how truthful they are —"Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled."

It is this Truth-hungry class whom we address. We know their heart-longings; for we have had the same experience. We know the satisfaction which they crave; for we have received it and are therefore doubly glad to hand forth the Bread and the Water of Life to those who desire it. There are many who are ready to serve the appetites of those who long for pleasure—ball games, society fetes, chess, travel, etc. Against these we have not one word to say. It is not our thought that they are en route to eternal torment; hence we do not frantically beset them or annoy them. Let them have their pleasure. Let them wait for the time to come when something may occur in their experiences which will put them into the class of the broken-hearted and contrite of spirit, something which will cause them to feel after God, if haply they might find Him as a satisfying portion.

In harmony with the Master's directions, it is our aim to "bind up the broken-hearted and to comfort those that mourn," to tell them of the oil of joy which the Lord is willing to bestow for their spirit of heaviness and sorrow for sin. (Isaiah 61:1-3.) As the Master expressed no reproof of those engaged in any sort of moral reform, even asceticism, so it is with us. We desire to oppose no one who is doing any good work whether or not he follows with us in every particular. There are so many engaged in doing evil works, and so few engaged in doing good, that not one of the latter class can be spared from the ranks of the service of righteousness.

As the Master did not give His time to temperance reform or to social reform or to political reform, but gave it to the instruction of the people in the doctrines of the Word of God, so let us be intent to follow His example in this matter, not "teaching for doctrines the precepts of men," but the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever—expounding to the people the Scriptures and assisting them to see the length and the breadth and height and depth of their meaning.

Nevertheless, as the religious teachers of the Master's day hated Jesus and His disciples for this cause, "because they taught the people," and as they persecuted the Master and His followers because they did not walk in the beaten paths of their day, so we may expect that the Scribes, the Pharisees and the Doctors of the Law to-day will be grieved because the people are taught, because the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shining in the face of Jesus Christ is presented to the people as an incentive to love and obedience, instead of the doctrine of eternal torment.

It matters not that all the educated ministers to-day well know, and would not for a moment deny, their disbelief in the doctrine of eternal torment, if cross-questioned. Nevertheless, many of them hate us and oppose us because we show the people the true interpretations of the Word of God and lift before the eyes of their understanding a God of Love, just, merciful, righteous altogether, and fully capable both in Wisdom and Power to work out all the glorious designs which He "purposed in Himself before the foundation of the world."

(1) They perceive that the teaching of the doctrines of purgatory and eternal torment has not had a sanctifying influence upon mankind in all the sixteen centuries in which these doctrines have been preached. But they fear that to deny these doctrines now would only make a bad matter worse. They fear that if the Gospel of the Love of God and the fact that the Bible does not teach eternal torment for any were generally made known, the effect upon the world would be to increase its wickedness, to make life and property less secure and to fill the world with blasphemies still more than now.

(2) They fear also that a certain amount of discredit would come to themselves because, knowing that the Bible does not teach eternal torment, according to the Hebrew and Greek original, they secreted the knowledge from the people. They fear that this would forever discredit them with their hearers. Hence they still lend their influence outwardly to the doctrine of eternal torture, which they do not believe, and feel angry towards us because we teach the people the truth upon the subject, which they know will bring to them hundreds of questions difficult to answer or to dodge.

We ask you, dear fellow Christians, Were you constrained to become children of God and to render to the Lord the homage and obedience of your lives through fear or through love? We are not asking you whether you never have feared; but what brought you to the point of consecrating your life to God? Surely it was not fear! We are aware, of course, that there is a proper, godly fear, reverence; and that the Scriptures declare it—"The fear (reverence) of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." (Psalm 111:10.) But this is not the fear of eternal torment, which tends to drive out love. How could we love or esteem or truly worship a God who purposed the eternal torment of His creatures from before their creation!

We could give you many proofs of the power of love over the human heart, in contrast with the ungodly fear of the error. God says to us in so many words, "Their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men." (Isaiah 29:13.) As an illustration: Some years ago at a Bible Students Convention in Ohio a well-dressed gentleman in attendance told me of how his heart had been touched with our presentation of the "Love Divine, All Love Excelling."

He said, "For years I have been a member of the Presbyterian Church without being really a Christian at all. Occasionally I went on sprees, sometimes I gambled and drank, etc. Not until I received a knowledge of the true character of God as set forth in your 'STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES' did my heart ever come to the proper attitude of surrender to the Lord. Then I was glad to give Him my little all, and wished that it was more."

The next day, as I was passing from the hotel to the auditorium to conduct a question meeting, this gentleman put a slip of paper into my hand. Supposing that it contained a question, I thrust it into my coat pocket. On the platform I drew it forth as one of the questions to be answered, and to my astonishment I found it to be a check for one thousand dollars. The man had not been asked to contribute even one cent; but the love of God had captivated his heart and had gotten control—not only of it, but of his pocket-book and all. He wished to show the Lord his appreciation of the Love Divine, the length, the breadth, the height and the depth of which he now comprehended as never before.

Another case: Several years ago I met with a Convention of Bible Students in Chattanooga. While there, a gentleman introduced himself, saying that he was from Mississippi and that he had become deeply interested in our presentations of the harmony of the Word of God. He said in substance, "I will not attempt to tell you how wicked a man I was before I got your literature. My dear wife here, an earnest Methodist, said to me, 'John, John you will surely go to Hell!' I replied to her, 'Mary, I know it! I know it! And, Mary, I am determined to deserve all that I get. I am not going to Hell for nothing.'

"One of your tracts came to my desk in my store. I read it and perceived that it was different from any thing I had ever understood respecting the teachings of the Bible; for it seemed more rational and more God-like. I sent to you for various Bible Students' Helps. The result is that the Love of God has constrained me, has conquered me, in a way that the doctrines of devilish torments could not influence me. Now I see the true teachings of the Word of God; I can honor Him, worship Him, and take pleasure in laying down my life in His service. I have made a full consecration of everything I possess.

"For a time I sent you a fifty-dollar check every month; but, Brother Russell, it was in the nature of conscience-money. At that time the most profitable feature of my store trade was the sale of liquor to the Mississippi negroes. As the grace of God more and more filled my heart to overflowing, it brought me to see that I must love my neighbor as myself and do injury to none, and those checks stopped. I ceased to deal in liquor, and have devoted my whole life to the service of God and of my fellow men."

Three murderers confined in the Ohio State Penitentiary had from childhood been trained in the doctrine of eternal torment by different denominations; and yet these men had committed murder. Under the providence of God, these men received some of our literature—"STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES"—and were cut to the heart when they learned of the Love of God, as expressed in the Divine Plan of the Ages. This knowledge made such a change in the hearts and the lives of these three murderers that the prison-keepers took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus and had learned of Him. By and by they were patroled, and to-day two of them are preaching the Gospel of the Love of God, seeking to bring their fellow-men out of the condition of darkness and sin into the glorious sunlight of Divine Love and Truth.

Having tried the Gospel of Fear and Damnation and Torture for the past sixteen centuries, and having seen that under this teaching there are more blasphemy and general wickedness in Christendom than even in the heathen world, should we not decide that it is due time to give the true Bread and Water of Life to the hungry and thirsty ones who, for lack of it, are searching the earth over, and many of whom are falling into Higher Criticism and other delusions peculiar to our day?

With shame of face we must all acknowledge that "we have done those things which we ought not to have done, and have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and there is no health in us." The proper thing for us to do, dear Christian friends, is to get down upon our knees before the Lord and in contrition of heart acknowledge that we have wrought no deliverance in the earth (Isaiah 26:18); that our sectarian differences are our shame; that the ignorance in which we have all been respecting the Word of God is humiliating.

When once the eyes of our understanding are opened, we can comprehend as never before the harmony of God's Message from Genesis to the Revelation. Daily the Word of God becomes more precious to us. More and more we realize that it is our duty to fly to the assistance of our dear brethren in Christ and to call upon them to join us in a determined stand for God and His Word of Truth. We must show them that our God has been dishonored by misrepresentations of His character and of the real teachings of His Word. We must point them to the fact that the Bible does not teach that all mankind except the Elect will be consigned to an eternity of torture at the hands of demons.

We must also show them that the Election of the Church during this Gospel Age does not mean injury to the non-elect; but that on the contrary it is the Divine purpose that the elect saints with the great Redeemer shall constitute God's Kingdom, which will bind Satan, put down sin, banish ignorance, error and superstition, and uplift mankind by resurrection processes to all that was lost in Eden by Adam's disobedience, but secured for him and all his race through the great transaction accomplished on Calvary. All mankind shall yet see that the Divine Purpose shall be accomplished; that the Word which has gone forth out of Jehovah's mouth shall prosper in the thing whereunto He sent it.

In concluding his discourse, the Pastor declared that as the test at the end of the Millennial Age will be loyalty, even so this is the test upon Christian people to-day. The Lord desires not those who merely fear to do wrong, but those who love to do right and hate to do wrong. He claimed that there is only a little more time in which Christians will have the opportunity to develop character and to stand the test.

How To Get $10,000.

Young people seldom love money for its own sake. They are usually so eager to spend it for the pleasures it will bring that they need to be urged to save a part of it. Boys and girls should be taught early to save money for the future. Not so many men and women would miss marriage and parentage and the joys of a home of their own if boys and girls were taught that $3.30 a week saved will in thirty years at savings bank interest become something more than $10,000 — a handy sum to educate your boys and girls if you begin in the teens to save so much by giving up things which are useless if not also harmful.

"Kubisagari."

One of the strangest diseases is known as kubisagari. It is common in northern Japan and in a small district on the Franco-Swiss frontier, but unknown elsewhere. Its symptoms are a sudden paralysis of certain muscles, loss of vision and vertigo. The attacks last about ten minutes and continue from May to November, recovery always coming in the autumn. Nothing is known about its cause, though Dr. P. L. Couchaud describes in the Presse Medicale a microbe he found in the cerebro spinal fluid and the milk of persons suffering from the disease. The name kubisagari in Japanese and means "drop head."

With Frequent Sick Headaches and Much Pain After Eating — Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured.

This letter is from a lady who gained 14 pounds by using the great food cure. It did wonders for her in improving her general health. She is enthusiastic in its praise, and refers to her neighbours as witnesses of the splendid results obtained.

Mrs. Susan oDbson, Spring Hill Mines, N. S., writes:—"It is with pleasure that I write to you in praise of Dr. Chase's Nerve ood. I was troubled with dyspepsia, and could not eat without suffering much pain; also had sick headaches frequently, and my nerves were in bad condition. About ten years ago I took a thorough treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, using altogether 21 boxes, and since then can eat anything, have been freed from headaches, and my health has been greatly improved in every way. I gained 14 pounds in weight, and feel sure I owe everything to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You may use this letter, and my neighbours can tell you of my condition before using this treatment."

Immigrants and Literacy.

Scandinavians lead the world in point of literacy. Among every twenty German immigrants over fourteen years old is found one illiterate. Of immigrants from other nations it is claimed there is found an illiterate among every twenty-three Dutch, thirty-eight Irish, fifty-two Welsh, fifty-nine Bohemians, seventy-seven Danish, 106 English and 128 Scottish, but the proportion among those who come from Scandinavia is one in 250. Among the Lithuanian immigrants and those from southern Italy half of them read no language.—Argonaut.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Home In America

A Story For Labor Day

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

Jean Stahren and Elsa Vogan lived on adjoining farms on the western coast of Norway. Neither had any brothers or sisters; consequently they were constant playmates, for there were no other children within a couple of miles. Since the country was rocky and not very productive their parents were very poor. But neither Jean nor Elsa had ever known luxuries, and what we do not know of we do not covet. Besides, there is an unconsciousness of deprivation in childhood, and so long as children have enough to eat, though of the plainest food, and enough clothing to keep them warm they are content.

But there came a time with Jean when he began to think of his future. This was when he was seventeen years old. One day, standing with Elsa on a high ridge overlooking the Atlantic ocean, he said to her:

"Elsa, it will not satisfy me to remain here with father and mother to work this little farm. There is barely enough for them to be made out of it, and I feel that I must go out into the world to make something for myself."

A frightened look came to Elsa's face. This was the first intimation she had that she and Jean would not live near each other always as they had lived.

"Where would you go, Jean?" she asked.

"If one sails westward from here in a few days he will reach some islands called Britain. They have a king there, as we have here, and nobles, but I understand that the people are active, and there are opportunities for poor men to make a good living. But if one continues on southwestward he will come to a great continent called America. The people there have no king, no nobles. All are on the same level so far as the law is concerned. To that land people of small means from all nations are flocking. There is plenty of land there which is very rich, and great factories where people work, and those who are skilled receive wages that are unheard of here in Norway. I am thinking of going to America to join in the battle for fortune."

"But, Jean," cried the girl, "you are not skilled at any work, and in no country are farms given away. Having no trade and no money to buy a farm, what will you do to earn a living? And where will you get money to pay your way?"

"I am now of a proper age to learn a trade, and as to the means for the journey I shall work my passage. I shall go on a ship to Hamburg, for which I have the money. There, I understand, there are great vessels sailing to America. They need many persons to wait on the passengers, and it will not be difficult for me to secure one of these places."

"How did you learn all this?"

"Lars Olsen told me; he has been to Hamburg."

Elsa was looking out to the westward, and Jean saw tears gathering in her eyes. He put his arms about her and kissed her. The boundary between childhood and youth had been passed. From that moment they were lovers, though they were still unconscious of the change.

"Don't cry, Elsa," said Jean. "When I have become a skilled workman I will send for you to come over the sea and be with me."

"How could I go over there and be with you, Jean? That would not be right."

"But I will then be a man and you a woman; we can be married."

This ingenuous proposal did not seem to give comfort to Elsa. She said that it would be a long while before Jean could send for her, and even then she could not leave her father and mother, who were every day becoming more dependent upon her. This made Jean feel ashamed, for he knew that he, too, was needed at home. But Jean looked further into the future than Elsa and had more resolution to break the barriers between him and success. Besides, he looked forward to the day when, having become a skilled laborer he could earn more than he needed for himself and could send money to his parents.

It was a sad day for all when Jean departed. His mother begged him to stay, but his father approved of his going.

"Goodby, my son," he said. "I have heard o' that great country beyond the sea where the people are the government and where the workingman must be educated for what he does the same as the lawyer, the doctor and the priest. And they tell me that when he learns his trade he is protected by the trade unions against the competition of those who are unskilled. Go, and God grant that you may prosper."

Elsa went a part way on the road with Jean and when they parted surprised him by encouraging him instead of giving way to repining.

"It will not seem long, dear Jean, before you will be building houses or railroads or ships, and every day you will earn more than you need, so that you can send money to your father and mother to buy them comforts they sorely need in their old age."

"But I shall not be satisfied, sweetheart, till I have earned not only enough for that, but to send for you to come to me."

Nevertheless they had no sooner passed away from each other than Jean's eyes became moist, and Elsa broke down and sobbed as though her heart would break.

* * * * * * *

An ocean liner came sailing down the coast and, entering the lower bay of New York, made its way up toward Ellis island, where emigrants must prove that they come within the laws governing their admission to the United States of America. Among those who were transferred from the vessel to the island was a young woman, who gave her name as Elsa Vogan and her age as twenty-two. She stepped from the lighter that bore her to the dock and looked about her as if expecting some one to meet her; but, seeing no one she knew, her expression of expectancy changed to one of disappointment. Passing with the throng into the apartment where emigrants present their claims for admission, Elsa was brought before an official for examination.

"What means have you?" he asked.

"Only a few silver coins left over after paying for my passage."

"How do you expect to live here in America?"

"I came over here to be married. I expected to meet at the dock when I landed the man who will marry me, but he did not appear."

The official asked the man's name and where he lived. Elsa told him that his name was Jean Stahren and that he was an ironworker in Pennsylvania, but what place in Pennsylvania she could not tell him.

Elsa was told that she might remain on the island for a few days, but if at the end of that time her lover did not appear she must be sent back to Hamburg, whence she had sailed. This was a terrible blow to the poor girl, for she knew that there was some reason why Jean had not met her, which might not be corrected within so short a time.

Fortunately it was summer, the end of August, and Ellis island, surrounded as it is by water, was not a disagreeable place to wait. Elsa gazed out over the bay, wondering at the gigantic statue of Liberty, at the skyscrapers of lower New York, at the Brooklyn suspension bridge and at Castle Williams on Governors island. A day passed, and Jean did not appear. Another day went by and still there were no tidings of him. The third day was Sunday, the 1st of September. Elsa was called before one of the immigration officials and informed that a steamer would sail for Hamburg the next day and if she could not satisfy the authorities that she would not be a burden on the United States before that time she would be sent back to Germany, whence she came.

Elsa was in agony. Jean had sent her the money for her passage, at the same time telling her to write him the name of the steamer on which she would sail, promising to meet her on the dock when the ship arrived. She had written him the name of the steamer, but, not being versed in the ways of the world, had not mentioned the date of its arrival, though she had said that she expected to sail about the last of August. And now, after having waited seven years to be united to Jean and having come all the way across the Atlantic ocean for the purpose, she must go back to Hamburg.

That Sunday was a sultry afternoon, and Elsa in order to get cool sat on the dock gloomily looking out over the waters of the bay. She saw a little steamer leave New York and make for the island. Boats were coming often, and she had looked when each had arrived for Jean. But now she had given up hope. When the boat reached the dock she scarcely noticed those who came ashore. But a man passed near her, stopped and looked at her scrutinizingly.

"Elsa!" he exclaimed.

She arose and for a moment did not recognize Jean, for he wore a full beard.

"Oh, Jean!" she cried. "Why have you not come before?"

"How long have you been here?"

"Three days."

"I supposed you would come on the steamer that is telegraphed to be here presently."

Elsa had little education, and she had written the name of the ship on which she would sail so badly that Jean could not read it. He had therefore judged of the time of her arrival from the date she gave and consequently fell between two steamers. But he wasted few words in explanation.

"Come, Elsa," he said. "We must be married at once, go to New York and leave for my home in Pennsylvania on a night train. Tomorrow will be Labor day, and I am at the head of the committee of arrangements for my union and have much to do."

So Jean and Elsa were married on the island and left there at once. It was past midnight when they reached their home, a cottage near a steel works where Jean was employed. Though it was late, Elsa found time to admire the cozy home that Jean had prepared for her.

The first day Elsa spent in America was Labor day, and though she saw little of her husband she saw one of the most important celebrations of the new world.

Jean Stahren became a master mechanic, and, having a wife who was a good manager, they sent monthly remittances to the old folks in Norway and after awhile made them a visit. But by this time they took with them several children to introduce to their grandparents.

A Human Churn

WHILST the food reaches the stomach it is subjected to a peculiar churning movement by the muscular walls of the stomach"—(See Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, page 65). In the liver, kidneys and skin, the blood is purified of its waste materials—these organs act as human filters, leaving the blood pure and clear—unless liver, digestive tract and kidneys are clogged.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a stomach, liver and kidney tonic—by assisting the stomach to assimilate, the liver to filter, the kidneys to act—the poisons are removed, the red blood corpuscles are increased and one feels light, fresh and active instead of logy, dull and heavy. The "Discovery" stimulates the stomach, increases action of heart and arteries and is a most satisfactory alterative in blood-taint of any character. The refreshing influence of this extract of native medicinal plants has been favorably known for over forty years. Everywhere some neighbor can tell you of the good it has done.

Sold by all medicine dealers in liquid or tablet form, or send 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., and a trial box will be mailed you.

SAN GIULIANO NEAR DEATH.

Passing of Italian Foreign Minister May Alter Situation.

ROME, Oct. 13.—Minister of Foreign Affairs Di San Giuliano has received his last sacrament and the attending physicians say death is imminent.

Marquis Antonio Di San Giuliano was born in Catania, Dec. 9, 1852. He was appointed senator March 4, 1905. He has served as ambassador in London and Paris several times. He was postmaster-general from May of 1899 to June of 1900 and was Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Cabinet, headed by Fortis, from Dec 24, 1905, till Feb. 8, 1906. He was again Secretary of Foreign Affairs from the date just mentioned until March 31, 1911, this time in the Cabinet headed by Luzzatti, and again Secretary of the same Department from the last mentioned date till March of the present year in the Cabinet headed by Giolitti, and was again appointed Secretary of Foreign Affairs in the present Cabinet, headed by Salandra.

San Giuliano is strongly pro-German and his death may result in a sharp change in Italy's position.

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS AND FOOD FERMENTATION

By a Stomach Specialist.

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and difficulty, is acid in the stomach, usually due to, or aggravated by, food fermentation. Acid irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which distends the stomach abnormally, causing that full bloated feeling. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard the process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign elements—acid and wind. In all such cases — and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and only step necessary is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and only really effective antacid and food corrective known. The acid will be neutralized and the fermentation stopped almost instantly, and your stomach will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your chemist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties. — F. J. G.

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irriration or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

General Advance Made By Allies

AIDED BY GERMAN TROOPS BOER COMMANDO MUTINIES SOUTH AFRICAN TROUBLE

Several Leaders Have Been Arrested and Shot and Whole of South Africa Has Been Placed Under Martial Law ---General Botha Says Situation is Serious.

Special to The Examiner:

CAPETOWN, South Africa, October 13.—There has been mutiny in the British-Boer commando under Colonel Maritz, in the northwestern part of British South Africa, and several of the leaders have been arrested and shot. The whole of South Africa was to-day proclaimed under martial law. Premier Botha says that the situation is most serious but that most of the commandoes are fully loyal and any uprisings will be very promptly and of necessity harshly suppressed.

Colonel Maritz was found to be the leader of a plot to establish a republic in north-west South Africa. He was aided by German troops and supplied with German guns.

LONDON, October 13.—It is reported that the Belgian Government ministers have already arrived at Havre, although no official announcement has yet been made. King Albert is still with his army.

The first skirmishes of the big impending battle of Lys are on. They are mostly between cavalry. The allied forces are now well supplied with this branch, and they have rendered efficient service feeling out the exact line of the German advance.

German aviators have been seen as far as the coast, and some are reported to have dropped bombs without effect. Persistent rumours are current that the Germans are assaulting Bruges.

HEADQUARTERS AT HAVRE

PARIS, October 13.—Announcement from Bordeaux to-day says that quarters have been provided for the Belgian government officials at Havre, France, and that the Belgian capital will be established at that place.

LONDON, October 13.—A despatch to the Times from Ostend says that a German aviator dropped two bombs on Ostend yesterday. Neither of the missiles exploded. The correspondent adds that the Germans occupied Ghent at 7 o'clock on Monday morning, and that refugees from that city are coming into Ostend.

PARIS, October 13.—The Minister of Marines Office announced this afternoon that the French guns taken to the hills commanding the Austrian port of Cattaro, were now in action against that seaport.

RUSSIANS SWEPT BACK?

BERLIN, via Amsterdam and London, October, 13.—An official war office statement to-day declares that the whole of Poland west of the Vistula River is in German possession, the Russians having been swept back. The only point now held by the Russians in this section is Warsaw, on the east bank of the Vistula.

GERMAN LOSSES

BERLIN, October 13.—The 44th list of German casualties issued to-day, brings the total of losses in the war to date up to 211,000. The list does not include the losses to the Bavarian, Saxon and Wurtemburg armies.

CETTINJE, October 13.—The Montegrin troops, under General Vukovitch have won an important victory over the Austrian forces south of Sarajevo, according to an official statement issued here to-day. The total force of 16,000 Austrians is again in retreat. The battle was marked by desperate hand to hand conflicts in which the Austrians lost 2,500 and the Montegrins only 300.

PARIS:—An Offensive movement against the German right wing under Generals Von Kluk and Von Boehm has begun according to to-day's three o'clock official communique. It was stated that the French-British have begun their movement in the region of Hazebrouck and Bethune. The Germans still occupy Lille. In the centre the French troops have advanced considerably in the regions of Berry-au-Bac, in the Argonne and along the Meuse. A forward movement along the south road from Verdun to Metz has resulted in the Germans being driven back.

On the extreme right the situation is described as being unchanged.

THE GARAGE WAS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Ald. Stratton's Motor Car Also Ruined When Building Went Up in Flames on Saturday Night.

SPECTACULAR BLAZE

Ald. Stratton's garage was struck by lightning Saturday night, and owing to the gasoline, oil, etc., which was kept in the building, the fire had made such headway before the brigade arrived that the garage and contents were burned. In the garage was Ald. Stratton's McLaughlin-Buick car, valued at about $3,500, which was completely destroyed.

The lightning struck the roof of the garage near the back of the building, smashing it inward and setting fire to a great part of the place at once. The fire was seen by neighbours and Mrs. A. P. McClean telephoned the fire hall. At the same time an alarm was rung in from Box 25 at the corner of Hunter and Park Streets. When the brigade reached the scene the outbuildings were a mass of flames, but undaunted by the possibility of an explosion on account of the gasoline which they knew must be in the garage, the firemen attacked the blaze. The fire was a spectacular one, the flames shooting high into the air, and the problem of fighting them was a big one. Three lines of hose were used, but it was not before an hour had passed that the flames were extinguished. Five gallons of gasoline had been put in a tank in the garage that evening and it too was burned.

The fire spread rapidly from the garage to an outbuilding nearer the house, which is used as a store room, and from there to the summer kitchen and kitchen. The former with its contents, including the storm windows for the residence, was burned and the damage to the contents of the store room will amount to nearly $500.

By hard and effective work, for which they have since received the thanks of those whose homes were threatened by the fire, the brigade managed to keep the fire in the outbuildings. They, however, were very badly damaged. The loss in all will amount to nearly $5,000, according to information given the Examiner. The car was valued at $3,500, the contents of the store room at $500, and the damage to the kitchen is estimated at $1,000.

Ald. Stratton was at the time, and still is, with the Jack's Lake fishing club in the north.

NEW PLAYER PIANO FOR LOUIS YEOTES' BILLIARD ROOMS

Mr. Louis Yeotes, the enterprising proprietor of the Billiard Parlour and Cigar Store, George Street, evidently intends to keep up-to-date. This week Mr. Yeotes installed a magnificent Player Piano, manufactured by the Nordheimer Piano Co., Toronto, and purchased from Mr. Whitehouse, their local agent here. It is indeed an acquisition to the institution and the many patrons of Mr. Yeotes will no doubt appreciate the beautiful music provided in this way by him. He has also made arrangements to be regularly supplied with all the latest music. This piano took first prize at a recent Exhibition.

THE DUTY OF CANADA

Special Wire to The Examiner:

KINGSTON, Ont., Oct. 13. — Professor W. L. Grant, of Queen's University, in an article to-day says Canada has been worthy of her traditions. By Christmas we must have one hundred thousand men in training, by April, should this war still rage, that one hundred thousand must be on their way to the front, for we are fighting not merely for Great Britain, not merely for the Empire, we are fighting in the liberation war of humanity.

RUSSIAN VICTORY

Official Announcement From Petrograd Says Austrian-German Forces Were Beaten Near River San

LOST MANY GUNS

Examiner Special:

PETROGRAD, Oct. 13.—An official announcement to-day said Prince Oleg, son of Grand Duke Constantine, had succumbed to wounds received while in action in Galicia. The general staff announced the defeat of an Austro-German force in Galicia near the River San. The exact location was withheld in accordance with this new policy of secrecy regarding this campaign. It was declared, however, that the enemy suffered greatly, losing a number of guns and many transport waggons. It is unofficially announced that the German advance in East Prussia has been checked by the Russian victories northeast of Suwalki, wherein the Czar's troops also captured a number of prisoners and guns.

FIELDS FOR PLOUGHING MATCH ARE SELECTED

The Committee that was appointed to select fields for the ploughing match for the championship of the County of Peterborough, which will be held on October 28th, have selected two fields on the farm of Mr. Sandy Matchett, in Otonabee. As ploughing will be done in both sod land and in stubble it was necessary to have two fields for the purpose of the match. Mr. Matchett has been able to furnish both classes of soil on his farm. Although the fields are a little apart those who witness the match will have little difficulty in following the contests in both fields. Mr. Matchett has kindly consented to entertain to dinner the competitors, officers, directors and judges.

The prize list for the competitors is unusually liberal. The officers of the club have received a letter from Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.L.A., offering to contribute a $10 prize, which offer has been gratefully accepted. It is possible that some special prizes will be offered, announcements concerning which will be made later. The judges have yet to be selected.

ON EVE OF BIG BATTLE IN EAST

Russians and Teutonic Allies Preparing for What May Be One of the Most Decisive Combats of the War.

GIGANTIC CONFLICT

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Oct. 13.—All eyes today are turned to the eastward where, under conditions of the utmost secrecy, the Teutonic allies and the Russians are preparing to engage in what may prove one of the most decisive combats of the war. Evidence is accumulating to show that this gigantic conflict will be determined in Russian Poland, and the only question disturbing British experts, is as to which side has chosen the battle ground. Berlin admits having withdrawn from the Niemen river, and at the same time discounts the whole movement in that region as being of no strategic importance.

BOSTON WINS THE BIG WORLD'S SERIES BEAT ATHLETICS 3-1

With Rudolph on the Slab Boston Makes it Four Straigh From Mackmen--Evers' Timely Single in the Fifth Innings Drives Two Runs in and Won the Game for Boston.

BOSTON, Oct. 13.— Connie Mack surprised the fans when he sent Shawkey in to pitch in a last desperate effort to check the Boston Braves. It was thought that he would pin his hopes on Bender. Overcoats and steamer rugs were in order this afternoon when the Braves and Athletics took the field. The sun was shining, but there was little warmth in its rays and a raw wind swept the field. The Braves appeared at 12.30 and started their batting practice for the tussle they hope will bring them the worlds baseball title. The Athletics appeared somewhat later. The batteries announced were: Boston— Rudolph and Gowdy; Philadelphia —Shawkey and Schang.

First Innings.

Philadelphia—Murphy out, Evers to Schmidt. Oldring fouled to Gowdy. The high wind caried the ball back away from the plate, but Hank got under it and made a sterling catch. Collins singled to centre. Baker flied to Whitted. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Rudolph disposed of the first two men on five pitched balls. He used but tenfor the side and pitched but two called balls. Collins rapped a low one outside for the hit.

Boston — Moran out, Baker to McInnis. Moran tried to work Shawkey for a pass, but could not resist the temptation to swing at a good one. Evers out, Baker to McInnis on the first pitched ball. Connolly flied out to Oldring. No runs, hits or errors.

Second Innings.

Philadelphia—McInnis out, Deal to Schmidt, Deal making a great one-handed stop and a perfect throw to first from a hard angle. Walsh doubled against the fence in left. Barry out, Maranville to Schmidt, a fast and snappy play by Maranville, Walsh being held at second. Schang fanned. No runs, 1 hit, no errors.

Connolly made a great try for Walsh's double. He jumped high in the air for the ball, but it glanced off his glove Rudolph used his slow ball to advantage. Shang fairly broke his bat swinging at two of them.

Boston—Whitted lined to Oldring. It was a terrific drive, but Oldring ran forward and made a thrilling catch. Schmidt out, Shawkey to McInnis. He hit the ball on the nose, but straight at the pitcher. Gowdy walked. Shawkey gave him wide ones, fearing one of those long drives into the stands. Maranville forced Gowdy, Barry to Collins. No runs, hits or errors.

By this time all the stands were jammed. The crowd appeared as big as that of yesterday. It was so cold, errors in the field were expected. Shawkey stopped in this innings to warm his hands by rubbing them.

Third Innings.

Philadelphia —Shawkey fanned on three straight strikes, the only three balls Rudolph pitched. Murphy out, Deal to Schmidt. Deal caught the ball right over the sack and it took a beautiful throw to get his man. Oldring singled to centre on the first ball pitched, his first hit of the series. With Collins up, Oldring was out stealing, Gowdy to Maranville. No runs, 1 hit, no errors.

Gowdy's throw to second that nipped Oldring was a perfect peg. Rube said, but Maranville was waiting for him.

Boston.— Deal flied to Oldring on the first ball pitched. It was an easy chance. Rudolph out, Barry to McInnis. It was an easy roller which Barry handled practically without effort. Moran out, Barry to McInnis. No runs, hits or errors.

Shawkey continued to turn back the Braves in order, but ten men had faced him up to this innings and Gowdy was the only man to get on bases.

Fourth Innings.

Philadelphia—Collins out, Evers to Schmidt. Johnny found Collins' chance pie for him. Baker shot a single down the first base line which was to hot for Schmidt. McInnis singled to left. Baker going to third. McInnis went out trying for second, Connolly to Deal to Evers. McInnis hit the first ball pitched. Walsh fanned. No runs, two hits, no errors.

At this time the Athletics had nicked Rudolph for five hits. This was as many as they got in the entire first game against him, but runs were lacking.

Boston— Evers walked. Shawkey's control deserted him while Johnny was at bat. Connolly out, Collins to McInnis. Collins had a double play before him, but fumbled momentarily and Evers reached second safely. Whitted singled to Collins, Evers reaching third. Whitted's rap was too hot for Eddie to handle. The Athletics' infield held a strategy board meeting with Shawkey. Schmidt out, Barry to McInnis, Evers scoring and Whitted taking second. Gowdy out, Shawkey to McInnis. 1 run, 1 hit, no errors.

Shawkey's sudden wavering in this innings came as a surprise. He was wild, however, pitching them every place but over the plate. To gain any control he had to resort to straight ones.

Fifth Innings.

Philadelphia— Barry singled, the ball bounding over Deal's head. It was his first hit of the series. Schang out, Evers to Schmidt, Barry reaching second. Shawkey doubled to left centre, scoring Barry. It was a beautiful drive between Connolly and Whitted, and would have been a homer on an open field. Murphy out, Evers to Schmidt, Shawkey taking third. Oldring fanned. One run, two hits, no errors.

Rudolph had Oldring swinging like a pendulum at his spitter. Rube missed them by a foot. Although the Athletics have collected seven hits up to this time, the fifth innings was the first in which they could bring two in a row.

Boston— Maranville out, Barry to McInnis. He hit the first ball pitched. Deal out, Baker to McInnis. Deal got Shawkey in the hole at the start by working him for three straight balls. Rudolph singled to centre on the first ball pitched. It was a corking line drive. Moran doubled to left. Rudolph reaching third. Evers singled to centre, scoring Rudolph and Moran. It was a wicked drive that shot past Shawkey like a shell shot from a British cannon. With Connolly up, Evers was caught off first and retired, Shawkey to McInnis. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

The Braves crossed Shawkey. Deal, Rudolph and Moran hit the first ball pitched. Shawkey had been trying to put this ball over because of the uncertainty of his control.

Sixth Innings.

Philadelphia— Collins out, Maranville to Schmidt, a really wonderful play. The ball shot over second, but Maranville got it back of the bag and tossed it to Schmidt. Baker fouled to Deal. McInnis out, Maranville to Schmidt. No runs, no hits, no errors.

With their two run lead, the Braves infield showed renewed pep and flashed brilliantly. Collins' smash over second would have been a hit nine times out of ten, but Maranville made a seemingly impossible play on the ball. Pennock was called in to replace Shawkey for the Athletics. Three runs and four hits off Shawkey in five innings.

Boston—Mann bats in place of Connolly. Mann lined out to Walsh. Whitted singled over third. Schmidt singled through Collins, Whitted reaching third. Gowdy fanned, looking at a called strike, which appeared to be high and inside the plate. Maranville up. On an attempted double steal, Schmidt was run down, Schang to Collins to McInnis. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Mann went to left field in place of Connolly for the Braves. Pennock looked decidedly unsteady, until he showed his stuff by whiffing Gowdy.

Seventh Innings.

Philadelphia— Walsh walked. With Barry up, Walsh took second on a wild pitch. Barry fanned and Walsh was doubled at second, Gowdy to Evers, a very fast and brilliant play. Schang fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

The third strike was called on Schang. Walsh got the surprise of his life when he was nipped at second on Barry's strike-out. The stands roared with delight at the exhibition of the Braves' infield.

Boston—Maranville out, Collins to McInnis. Deal out, Baker to McInnis. Rudolph walked. Moran fouled out to Baker. No runs, hits or errors.

Eighth Innings.

Philadelphia—Pennock out, Evers to Schmidt, on the first ball pitched. Murphy flied to Mann. It was a beautiful running catch. Oldring flied to Evers. No runs, hits or errors.

Boston— Evers fanned. Mann out, Collins to McInnis. Whitted walked. With Schmidt up, Whitted stole second, and went to third on a passed ball. Schmidt fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Ninth Innings.

Philadelphia— Collins fanned. He swung hard at the last one. Baker out, Evers to Schmidt. McInnis out, Deal to Schmidt. No runs, no hits, no errors.

NO ELECTION WANTED.

No doubt popular feeling is reflected in the fact of the congregation of a Baptist Church at St. John, N.B., applauding the declaration of the pastor that we do not want political contests at present—"we are united in fighting a common foe and we want to remain united." There is no necessity or even excuse for a general election. The present parliament was elected in September, 1911, and is good till September, 1916—two years hence. The people of Canada have their hands full and every energy is needed. With the united action of the people it will be a difficult enough thing to do our duty effectively. We can't do it if we are disunited, torn asunder, with the turmoil of an election. The proposal for a general election comes from politicians who wish to grab party profit at the expense of public unity of action, and to that extent imperilling the fortunes of the Empire in this hour of mortal stress, as will be done if we turn aside from this duty to waste our time upon politics, of the utmost litleness compared with other isues, especially as there is no constitutional demand for an election. As a virtual treason to Imperial and Canadian interests, the idea of a general election must have originated in Germany. We have 35,000 Canadians ready to lay down their lives for the Empire. While they are fighting our battles, some domestic traitor proposes to withdraw support and sympathy by bringing on an election, that will not oniy interfere with the sending of further support, but disfranchise 35,000 Canadians now engaged in much sterner and much more needed work than that of a premature election.

FAVOUR HOME PRODUCTIONS.

While, under present conditions an unselfish attitude is demanded of Canada, there is also demand for a selfish attitude in commercial and industrial matters. There should be universal substitution of "made in Canada" for "made in Germany" or elsewhere. This demand can only be made effective or even logical by the action of the manufacturers of Canada. It is evident that they must supply made in Canada goods. We do not perhaps realize the extent of our failure to industrially supply the home market. Last year Canada imported goods to the amount of 686½ million dollars, and the total amount imported from foreign countries—outside the British Empire — was 523 millions. If Canada had been able to supply even a third or half of the manufactures and commodities of all kinds, imported from abroad, the difference would have been tremendous. If our manufacturers and capitalists and our banks who supply the sinews of industrial war should form an alliance in the interests of the development of industrial output, Canada will be reaping a golden harvest from the war situation. There never was a time when the opportunities for industrial expansion were greater. For years we need not fear the rivalry of Germany, Austria, France, or even Great Britain. We have an open field of enterprise. Europe's extremity is Canada's opportunity, especially in the matter of industrial expansion. If manufacturers will aim to produce articles, of at least equal merit and value to those imported, the purchasing public of the country will cooperate to give effect to the "made in Canada" slogan.

GLOOMY BUT NOT HOPELESS.

At present in the war regions the outlook seems dark, but there is no reason to lose hope, but much encouragement to put forward greater effort. Germany is showing extraordinary activity. It must be remembered, however, that the military power of Germany is at a higher point now than it will be at any time hereafter. She went into this war with the highest degree of military and naval effectiveness. There is evidence that her state of preparation was the culmination of forty years untiring effort in this direction. Germany was, therefore, at the highest point of war power when the war broke out. Yet she has been defeated in all her plans at the time when her power was greatest. Little Belgium was a stumbling block in the beginning, and Great Britain's plucky little handful held the assumedly resistless war machine back till the allied armies were ready to drive them back from the great goal of Germany's ambition—Paris. If Germany at her best has not been able to make the advance expected, but on the contrary has been driven back, we cannot expect she will make permanent progress hereafter. There will, of course, be fierce fighting with tremendous loss of life; the allies may be subjected to reverses in incidental engagements of the great struggle; but while Germany's strength for many reasons is growing less, that of the allies, especially Britain, is growing greater. In addition to the great destruction of German troops by their reckless mode of attack, other sources of weakness exist. Germany is commercially isolated, her colonies are slipping from her hold. Her trade is practically dead; and though she may have laid in considerable food supplies, the longer the war lasts the more she will be starved down. Her internal resources for the making of munitions and ammunitions of war are lessening, and her chance for getting supplies abroad are gone. So that it seems certain that the longer the war lasts, not only will Germany's power of aggression, but also her power of resistance be weakened. On the other hand the allies will gain, or at least, retain the power of reinforcement. The avenues of trade are open to them and they can in some respects draw strength from all the corners of the earth. The struggle will probably be a long one; but it will be carried on till the day of success comes. If Germany at her strongest is not meeting with any of the success she expected, how can she expect to gain as her strength becomes progressively less and the power of her enemies progressively greater in all essential respects. There is no reason for taking a despairing outlook. It may be gloomy enough, involving as it does great loss of life, great destruction of property, and perpetual sacrifice and struggle, but in the end the work will be crowned with triumph.

DO SOMETHING.

The United States, through the Department of Agriculture, are contemplating the establishment of a system of free distribution of trees to prairie settlers for planting as shelter belts, etc. This is a system that Canada through the Dominion Forestry Branch has had in operation for some years. This applies chiefly to the West; but in the East—in Ontario—the work of forestry and reforesting has not received the practical attention it deserves. Ontario has 11 million acres of forest reserves as against 113 million acres in Quebec; while Quebec has in addition about twenty township reserves, something more important, in one sense, than provincial reserves. In Ontario we are suffering much in the matter of equable rainfall, and, through that, in crop conditions from the removal of forests. There are in nearly all parts of the province—on nearly every farm, waste places, fitted to produce no other crops than trees. These should be utilized. Planting them to trees would not only yield the farmer a source of fuel supply, but the existence of clumps of trees generally distributed would have an important and beneficial modifying influence upon rainfall and the success of agricultural operations. The government should encourage and stimulate the planting of these areas by supplying seedling trees, and by legislation practically compelling planting.

There are in this county some townships that it would pay the county to purchase as an investment. Lumbering operations have stripped them of their forest and they have not enough tillable land to support the population, especially since the local lumbering market has been greatly reduced or practically gone. If the county acquired some of these townships or parts of themand had them judiciouslyplanted to trees, in the course of a generation or two, they would yield enough revenue to carry on the affairs of the county without direct taxation. The trouble is that, governments, provincial and county and others, don't realize the opportunities sufficiently to take action. There is an infinity of talk, but little or no effective action. If the provincial government—of Ontario — had taken four-fifthes of the million dollars sunk in an unnecessarily elaborate and costly "Government House," and devoted it to real live practical forestry, or reforesting operations, the profit to the people would have been out of all proportion to the practical loss from wasting money in building a costly gubernatorial residence. It is not too late to begin now. Though we are in a state of war, we shall exist and be doing business after the war is over. We must not only continue doing "business as usual," but we must have no surcease of progressive measures of development. Ontario's enterprise heretofore in the matter of forest wealth and growth has been development of destruction; and the sooner we inaugurate restorative development, the sooner will the province get the incalculable advantage that would come from energitic, and continuous, forestry and reforesting operations. Let us do something.

The War and Canada's Participation In It

Canada was first officially declared to be at war on the fifth day of August, when the Governor-General-in-Council issued a document concerning enemy merchant ships which began thus:

"Whereas a state of war now exists between this country and Germany."

On the following day another such order was issued with regard to the militia. The wording was somewhat different.

"Whereas in view of the state of war existing between the United Kingdom and the Dominions, Colonies and Dependencies of the Empire on the one side, and Germany on the other side, and in view of the fact that thereby the Dominion of Canada is liable to invasion and other assaults of a hostile nature, such an emergency has arisen as calls for the placing of the militia on 'active service.'"

Canada therefore has been in a state of war for more than two months, although many of our citizens seem to have small appreciation of the fact. Canada is liable to invasion, her steamers are open to seizure on the high seas, every citizen between 21 and 60 years of age may be called to bear arms, Canadian goods may be shipped only to certain countries and certain goods not at all, aliens within our borders may be made prisoners of war, and other consequences may follow. Nevertheless our citizens go about their work much as usual. Only the closed stock exchanges and the idle ocean docks bear open testimony that a new and historical period in our history has begun.

Nevertheless it would be well for Canadians to realize that this is "our" war. The fact that the fighting so far has been in Europe should not blind us to a clear perception of the fact that we share the losses of the Belgians and the French, and that we share the cost of maintaining the allied armies in the field. The sacrifice that Canada has made in sending an army of 30,000 men to Britain is but the beginning. If the war is at all prolonged, and this seems more and more certain, the sacrifices Canada must make have but begun. It might possibly be that before the war is ended Canada will be called upon to contribute five times as many men as have already gone, and to spend vast sums in maintaining them.

Canadians therefore must prepare themselves for every emergency. Another army division must be equipped and held ready for the call which may come. Further measures are required to put our coast defences in better condition. More artillery, rifles and ammunition must be manufactured. Trade conditions must be adjusted to altered circumstances. The finances of the country should be adjusted to meet the strain of even a succession of defeats. It will certainly be several years before capital will again be flowing freely between London and Canada, as it did in years gone by. An equally long period must elapse before we can call on the factories of Europe for much that had come to be thought common necessaries. It behooves us to think and ponder and plan and execute! The task which lies before this new, small nation must not be underestimated. It will require all our courage and all our resource to perform it in a manner worthy of the Empire of which we are a considerable part.—Canadian Courier.

HELP THE BELGIANS.

Australia has given half a million dollars to help the Belgians. That is something like the scale of which relief should be granted. The aid given by Canada from various sources ought to run into the millions. Patriotism and humanity demand it. History holds no record of suffering more cruel and more undeserved, or of loftier heroism. Belgium is the martyr of civilization and humanity. Upon Belgium has fallen the burden of the Kaisers hosts. Nietzsche scoffed at the Ten Commandments and the essential teachings of Christianity. His disciples in Belgium have faithfully carried out his teachings with murder, arson, and outrages on women and children. Germany has declared war upon civilization and upon Christianity, and upon all that is best in every religion. It is not fair that a little nation like Belgium should bear so grievous a share of the burden.

It is our duty not only as Canadians and as Britons, but as human beings, to aid the cause of Belgium on the field, and to comfort and assist the afflicted people of the country. There must be stern punishment for the robbers and murderers, but there must also be help for their victims. Belgians have fallen a prey to thieves, who have left them stricken by the roadside, and it is our duty to follow the example of the good Samaritan. Let the response to the appeal for aid be generous.

FREE TRADE AND BLOCKADE: A CONTRAST.

Great Britain and France can carry on war indefinitely against Germany and Austria-Hungary, not without financial inconvenience, but without economic disaster, because both nations are, in spite of the war, free to trade with the whole world outside of these two countries. Mr. Lloyd George, Chancellor of the British Exchequer, has stated publicly that the only British trade seriously injured is the cotton trade, which has fallen off materially on account of the loss of the German market. In time even this loss will be adjusted, though meanwhile it bodes distress for the coming winter in Lancashire—not so intense, however, and certainly not so protracted, as the distress caused half a century ago by the blockade of the Southern States in the American Civil War.

The extent of Great Britain's oversea business in September has surprised the most inveterate optimists, and has created the impression that trade is rapidly recovering from the first shock of the war. The loss of German and Austrian sugar has been made up by increased imports from Cuba, Java, and the West Indies. Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden have increased by one-half their importations of British coal. Wheat imports into Great Britain have increased forty-two per cent. In a few months her whole foreign trade will have readjusted itself to the new conditions without any serious impairment or derangement.

It is quite otherwise now with Germany and Austria-Hungary, which are almost completely blockaded and are prevented from carrying on any foreign trade worth mentioning. Both are populous food-importing countries, with many large cities and the usual amount of pauperism under normal conditions. Both are manufacturing countries with a large number of operatives dependent on a constant supply of imported raw materials. Already, after only two months of war, there is acute and widespread suffering from famine. From Hamburg, the greatest seaport in the world as to business and equipment, a wail of distress came a fortnight ago, and for this condition of famine there can be no relief while the blockade lasts. Matters are still worse in Vienna and Budapest, both of which may shortly be compelled to surrender to Russia. To make matters worse, winter is at hand, and there are troops aggregating five millions to be maintained in continuous fighting condition, at enormous cost in money and a perennial sacrifice of life and the means of living. The fatuity of this war is as remarkable as its diabolism. —Globe.

THE WORLD'S TELEPHONES.

Europe Makes a Poor Showing Compared With This Country.

It has been roughly estimated that of the 10,000,000 telephones in the world 7,000,000, or 70 per cent of the whole number, are in America, 2,000,000 in Europe, with the remainder scattered over the earth's surface.

The reason why Europe presents so poor a comparison in this respect with America is said to be because four or five of the most civilized and populous countries are extraordinarily backward in telephonic development. France, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy, in the first four of which the telephone is entirely in the hands of the government, may be instanced. In the whole of the French republic, it is estimated, there are few more than 200,000 stations, and in Austria and Hungary combined there are actually fewer phones than in Chicago.

Ancient cities of universal renown, prosperous and thriving places of from 400,000 to 500,000 inhabitants, in many cases centers of great commercial importance, such as Lyons, Marseilles, Naples, Antwerp and Prague, are far behind American towns with 50,000 to 100,000 people, such as Peoria, St. Joseph, Dayton and Norfolk, towns that Europeans in many cases have never heard of, while Vienna, with a population somewhere near 2,000,000, has not so many stations as San Francisco, with one-fourth that many inhabitants. If the countries of central and western Europe were as well provided telephonically as Great Britain and Germany, to say nothing of Scandinavian countries, the old world's phone statistics would compare far more favorably with those of the new.—New York Tribune.

Put Petitions in Golf Holes.

The amir of Afghanistan has taken up golf keenly and has had good links laid out in the neighborhood of Kabul. The natives were much puzzled by the well kept greens; but, recognising the game as a royal one, they put the holes to a practical purpose. They got into the habit of placing petitions in the holes at night in the hope that they would reach the amir when he was putting next day. But his majesty's temper apparently was not improved by the royal game. He resented this attempt to take advantage of his recreations and ordered that all such petitions be burned unread.—London Mail.

Planning a Future.

"Do you think you can support my daughter in the style to which she has been accustomed?"

"Yes," replied the slangy young man after some hesitation. "But don't you think I'd better stick around with your family a few years so as to get accustomed to it?"—Washington Star.

Nothing Doing.

"Can I interest you in an attachment for your typewriter?" asked the agent as he entered the office.

"No chance," replied Mr. Grouch. "I'm still paying alimony on the strength of the attachment I had for my last typewriter."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

RAID BREWERY

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, Oct. 9—An amusing story of the cool bravery of Bavarian troops and the difficulties under which they obtained beer in France is told by the Munich correspondent of the Lokal Anzeiger.

"Our Bavarian troops were fetching beer in a French town when shell fire was directed upon the brewery," the correspondent wrote. "The walls fell in, beams were shattered and the whole place enveloped in flames and smoke. The horses bolted. The men took refuge in a small cellar. As soon as the bombardment ceased they came out again and went on loading up beer barrels. They continued to avail themselves of pauses in the bombardment until their supply of beer was collected and then got away.

"The next day volunteers were called for to go on the risky beer fetching expedition and a whole column stepped out of the ranks."

BELGIANS BEING MARCHED TO EXECUTION FOR DEFENDING THEIR HOMES.—Here is one of the most tragic pictures received from the war zone. It shows a group of Belgian civilians, many of them too old for the Belgian army, being marched out by the Germans to be shot because they engaged in guerilla warfare against the Kaiser's soldiers. The fact that the Germans allowed this picture to be taken by an American photographer shows that the method is the most approved German mode of warfare.

ATROCITIES COMMITTED BY GERMANS WERE ORDERED BY HIGHEST OFFICERS

Capt. Coleman, U. S. A., Does Not Hide His Opinions Formed From Accounts He Gathered on Battle Field--Wm. F. Corey, Steel King, Says War Will Be Prolonged--Warburton Declares Russia Can Put 40,000,000 Men on War Footing in a Year.

INTERESTING INTERVIEWS WITH U. S. CITIZENS

Accounts of German atrocities, detailed and horrible, were brought to New York yesterday by many passengers on board the Lusitania, of the Cunard line, which arrived from Liverpool early in the morning with 553 persons in her first cabin accommodations and a total of 1,477 passengers in all classes. Most of the stories of experiences near or on the battlefields in France have come to this country second or third hand, and few of them have been the observations of experts in the art of war.

Such was not the case with Captain Le Vert Coleman, U. S. A., who was one of the officers detailed to duty on board the Tennessee, which was sent to England with gold for the relief of American refugees. Captain Coleman was on the battle line of the Allies during the battle of the Marne and in a position to observe the various moves of both invaders and defenders. He attributes the German retreat to the lack of food and ammunition and criticised their means of communication with their bases.

"Every Frenchman on the firing line and those in the rear," said Captain Coleman, "knows that he is fighting for his very existence, and the German army never will again get so close to Paris as it has been. From what I observed the French light artillery is far superior to that of the German army, but the latter's cavalry is much better than the French."

Declares Atrocities Ordered.

Captain Coleman declared that the atrocities committed by the German soldiers did not result from cases of individual barbarism, but from orders promulgated from the highest officers in command of the invading forces.

"I have in my possession," he said "the copy of a speech that was delivered by Kaiser Wilhelm in 1910, in which he declared that the next war would be one to death, and he ordered his men to neither give nor accept quarter and to take no prisoners. I am told that this speech, or one of similar nature, was delivered to the soldiers at the beginning of this war."

Captain Coleman said that during the retreat of General von Kluck's army from its most advanced position, raiding parties of cavalry would return to the scene of the larger rear guard actions and deliberately turn their machine guns on the wounded lying on the field, killing them to a man.

"One wounded French soldier," said the Captain, "told me how these Uhlans would dismount and kick the dead and wounded. If a groan or any movement followed this treatment the wounded man was shot summarily. The man who told me this had been kicked. He groaned and was shot, but not mortally."

The action of the French troops under fire, Captain Coleman declared, was excellent. "They charge," he said, "with wonderful spirit, and I have seen them go into action knowing full well that only 50 per cent. of their number would return, but confident that their death list would be only half that of the Germans.

William F. Corey, formerly head of the United States Steel Corporation, was also a passenger on board the Lusitania. He went abroad to rescue Mrs. Corey, who was in her French chateau at the beginning of the war. After great difficulty he brought her to Paris and thence to London, where she remained.

Mr. Corey Foresees Long War.

"It is foolish to talk of peace now" he said. "A year from now will be time enough for that, for England is ready to fight to the last; France realizes that Germany must be crushed before she can conduct her affairs with freedom from the war cloud and Germany has food, clothing and ammunition enough for a war of two summers and one winter. After that I believe that their resources will have been competely drained.

"It is absurd to say that the United States will be benefited by the war. No country was ever benefited by a war, but we will fare better than any other nation."

Mr. Corey said that Italy's position in the present struggle rested on a pecuniary foundation. He declared that if Italy were to remain neutral then Germany must foot the bills caused by the mobilization of the Italian army. If Germany refuses this Italy will cast her lot with the Allies and take a chance on being indemnified at the end of the war.

When he reached the chateau where Mrs. Corey was, Mr. Corey found his estate in possession of the French army and some three thousand head of cattle were grazing on the lawns and in the fileds. He had considerable trouble in persuading the French comandant of the troops that he was really the owner of the property, but as soon as he had established his identity he was assured that the buildings would be kept intact and not injured in any way except in case of dire military necessity.

Mistreated, Says Mr. Clews.

With her grandson and Mrs. W. P. Douglas was Mrs. Henry Clews, wife of the banker. She had been in Carlsbad and Munich, and was extremely indignant at the treatment accorded her by the people of Germany. She declared that almost at intervals of every hour she was stopped and measured according to the Bertillon system, and that it was impossible to walk in the streets without being hooted and jeered unless she wore a large American flag to show her nationality. Mrs. Clews was with her son in Paris when the German military aeroplanes dropped several bombs into the City.

Calls Rapine Preconceived.

James Barnes, a writer, also was a passenger. He has been over the battlefields of Belgium to obtain material for a series of articles. Mr. Barnes' opinion of the orders behind the destruction of the Belgian towns and the ruins of the Rheims Cathedral coincidedt with that of Captain Coleman.

"This German reign of terror," he said, "which was inaugurated by dropping bombs into Antwerp and Paris, and carried to its full extent by the bombardment of the Rheims Cathedral and the destruction of Louvain and its antique art treasures and library, is part of the preconceived plan of the German attack. Orders were given for every bit of the work and they did not come from commanders of raiding cavalry squadrons, but from the General Staff."

Has Rheims Glass.

First hand information regarding the destruction of the Rheims Cathedral came from Thomas Siddell, of New York, who brought back with him a fragment of one of the German shells that pierced the roof of the ancient edifice and several pieces of glass from the beautiful windows that were almost pulverized by the shrappel bullets and concussion of explosion of shells. He declared that the cathedral could never be rebuilt. Only the outside walls are now standing. He also brought back a German helmet he picked up on the battlefield at Meaux. Inside it was an inscription in German: "Kettler, 9th Regiment." That the one-time wearer was a soldier from Saxony also was indicated.

Russia Has 40,000,000

Another passenger was Barclay Warburton, inventor of a rapid fire gun that is used by the Allied armies. He was in Russia during the mobilization ar her tremendous armies and declared that it had been carried on with a degree of organization equal to if not exceeding that of Germany. "In a year Russia could put 40,000,000 men on a war footing if she called every available man to the colours," he said. "It would take that long to train and equip them, but it could be done and they would be efficient soldiers."

Ambassador's Opinion.

There was some criticism among the passengers of the speech made last Wednesday night by Representative George S. Graham of Philadelphia, who denounced the Germans for their actions in the war. In explaining his attitude to the reporters Mr. Graham said he had merely spoken of the destruction of the British cruisers, and said it was a pity for so many young men to be sacrificed to a military despot.

"When I was in Germany," Mr Graham said, "I was literally deluged with speeches that were intended to impress me and my party with the nobility of the German cause. I confess that I was impressed and believed that the Allied Powers might be in the wrong, but when I came to make a careful study of the diplomatic correspondence in the White Papers I could not help changing my attitude, for I felt that Belgium's neutrality was violated by the Germans and that England had this war forced upon her."

A VALUABLE REMINDER

The pot full of scalding water that is carelessly left on the stove or table where the youngster can reach it is every year the cause of hundreds of painful accidents, many of which result in death. A forcible reminder of this fact is found in one of the illustrations of the October number of the "Canada Life Echoes." That well-known little periodical this month takes the form of a number for women, and both in the reading matter it contains and the large number of especially interesting pictures with which it is illustrated, it is likely to appeal strongly to women readers. The cover is handsomely designed and incorporates a reproduction of a timely photograph of a party of Canadian ladies at rifle practice. A feature of the booklet that is likely to have a permanent value for those who receive copies is to be found in a comprehensive series of directions for the application of first aid in accidents that is always more or less likely to happen in the home. This booklet is published by the Canada Life Assurance Co., and a supply has been sent to W. R. Scadding, District Agent, Peterboronugh, who will send out free copies in answer to enquiries as long as they last

Traps have been invented to catch flies at their breeding places before they become old enough to move away.

Fry's Chocolate Powder

"Her first cake" will be just as much of a success as mother's best effort if the icing is made this way; Mix ¼ cup of FRY'S CHOCOLATE POWDER with 2 cups of powdered sugar, adding 2 tablespoonfuls of cream or of boiling water. That's all!

FRY'S makes an icing of delicious flavor, silky smoothness and rich appearance. Just try it, but—

Remember: "Nothing will do but FRY'S"

FUNERAL OF LATE P. C. PATTERSON LARGELY ATTENDED

The funeral of the late William Patterson, Police Constable, was held on Monday afternoon. The wide esteem in which he was held was evidenced in the large assembly that attended the service in Knox Church, the long cortege and the floral tokens, all testimonials to the wide circle of friends he had made during his residence in Peterborough. The body was taken to Knox Church on Monday morning and at 2.30 p.m. the service was opened by Rev. H. J. Keith, Mr. Kenyon playing Mendelssohn's "Rest in the Lord." The Scripture lesson was read by Adjt. McElhiney, who also led in prayer. Mr. Keith spoke briefly in reference to the death of the late Mr. Patterson, and Chief Thompson delivered an eulogy of the deceased Constable, speaking in unrestrained terms of his character as exhibited in the Department.

The ceremony at the grave was the prescribed Masonic service. The pallbearers were H. Rush, Dr. Morgan, Dr. R. F. Morrow, J. C. Anderson, Jas. Carey and Mr. Voaden.

A large representation of the local Masonic lodges attended in a body. Floral tributes were numerous, among them being those sent by the Fire and Police Departments, the Caledonian Club, W. H. Young, Chamberlain street, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. McLean, Royal Arthur Lodge of Masons, St. Paul's Choir, and others. Knox Church was filled during the service.

LITTLE CHUNK OF TRUTH.

Don't waste your coin on posters, man,
The rain will wash them from the fence.
But in the papers put your ads—
They'll bring you in returns immense
For papers are all read at home;
While no one reads a poster, man,
When seated in an easy chair.

Let us show you THE NEW 1914 MODEL of the Happy Thought Range

YOU will find it of beautiful and harmonious design, smooth and elegant, without too much carving, easily kept clean - a delight to the most artistic eye. Every feature of utility in the former model is retained or enhanced.

A particularly distinctive feature is the new design steel warming closet, the largest and most convenient made, with drop down door—in every way the finest ever turned out; compare it with any other.

The Happy Thought is the product of fifty years experience in stove building. Daring all that time it has been the acknowledged leader, and it's own only competitor. It's reputation has been established and is maintained on pure merit alone.

You take no chances in buying a HAPPY THOUGHT. There are now over 300,000 in actual use.

"DRUNKS" WERE NUMEROUS ON THE HOLIDAY

Police Rounded Up Several Offenders Yesterday Who Had to Pay Fines Ranging From Two to Ten Dollars

DOCK WAS CROWDED

That the real enjoyment of a holiday consists in getting drunk and raising a disturbance, is evidently the opinion of eight men who appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning and had to pay fines ranging from two to ten dollars for their hilarious conduct of yesterday. Two of the offenders were blacklisters who could not withstand the holiday temptation to step from the straight and narrow path on which the law had placed them. Another, who for the past few months had been under the guiding hand of Adjutant McElhinney, could not let Thanksgiving pass without a little of the old-time celebration "stuff." The "little" proved to be too much. Consequently he passed the night in a police cell, but this morning was allowed to go, on the promise that he would return to the better way of living.

The prisoner's dock was filled beyond capacity and many of the offenders were lined along the wall. All too plainly on the faces of the accused were the evidences of their dissipation. Black eyes and blood stains bore witness to their rowdyism while under the influence of liquor. Dishevelled hair and soiled clothes bore out the fact that the night's incarceration and the absence of a morning wash, had added nothing to their appearance. In other words they were a "sorry" looking crowd.

Charging a young Englishman with being a German is going too far in these war times. Consequently a Lakefield visitor here got himself into a fight and for the disturbance he raised, had to pay two dollars and costs, amounting to $5.75.

Fighting with an Italian, Florenz Bankhurst got himself into similar difficulties and was obliged to pay the same amount before he got his freedom.

Ira McMullen, Stephen Scobi and Alex. Ross were each assessed two dollars for being drunk. "I wouldn't let any holiday pass without a few drinks," reamrked Ross when admitting that he did have something.

Two young men, one of them on the "Indian list," whose names are withheld, out of deference for their relatives, were making themselves a nuisance in a local poolroom yesterday afternoon when P. C. Blade took them in charge and with Detectives Newhall and Meagher escorted them to the police station. The blacklister was fined ten dollars, while his friend was taxed $5.75.

The latter admitted he wasn't working, but his mother, he said, would pay his fine.

"Well, if you have a mother who will pay for your misdemeanours," remarked the Magistrate, "I think you ought to have a little regard for her and behave yourself."

NEARLY $1,000 RECEIVED ON TAG DAY BY ZEALOUS LADIES

Saturday's Tag Day total for the Children's Aid Society was $986.05. The officers of the Society are pleased that the citizens' donations were so close to the sums of former years of peace and plenty. Last year's total was in the neighbourhood of $1,400. But $1,000 is regarded as splendid work for this year of grace and it is largely due to the ladies, young and younger, that this sum was rolled up. The weather was anything but cheerful and other conditions were, not the best, but the $986.05 or $1,000, as it practically means, is a testimony to their enthusiasm and efforts.

Following is the list of returns:

2, $15.29; 3, $23.88; 4, $17.83; 5, $14.98; 6, $7.16; 9, $22.81; 10, $8.16; 11, $21.19; 12, $20.21; 18, $24.61; 13, $22.22; 17, $20.35; 21, $16.02; 23, $18.14; 24, $15.89; 30, $55.38; 31, $75 ..; 32, $15.66; 34, $14.73; 35, $13.95; 39, $13.09; 40, $25.06; 41, $18.32; 42, $17.15; 43, $17.85; 44, $11.65; 45, $10.51; 46, $14.73; 47, $21.53; 48, $15.27; 49, $58.34; 50, $7.53; 52, $1.60; 33 and 53, $33.17; 54, $5.71; 57, $8.06; 58, $7.59; 59, $10.94; 61, $11.71; 63, $5.14; 64, $11.55; 65, $27.50; 66, $15.35; 67, $5.38; 68, $6.66, 69, $5.46; 70, $2.76; 71, $2.57; 72, $17.83; 73, 70c.; sundry, $2.25; schools, $63.88; G.T.R. Choir Assisted At Lakefield

The choir of the Mark Street Methodist Church journeyed to Lakefield last night where they took part in an entertainment in the Lakefield Methodist Church. The entertainment was successful and their services were very valuable.

Envoy Brown At S. A. Temple

The great week-end service at the Temple, conducted by Envoy Brewer Brown drew very large crowds indeed. His addresses were very much enjoyed by everybody and a pressing invitation was given for the Envoy to repeat a service given here not long ago, entitled, "The Drunkard Home."

Staff Capt. White, late of Vancouver, B.C., came on Sunday to visit Adjt. and Mrs. McElhiney before taking up his position as Chancellor at London, Ont.

The Staff Captain's singing was very much enjoyed indeed, as well as his addresses.

THANKSGIVING DECORATIONS IN ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

The effective and appropriate decorations in St. Paul's Church in celebration of Thanksgiving season, were much admired by the congregation on Sabbath. Behind the pulpit, and across the organ case, a large Union Jack was displayed, on each side of which were wreaths of autumn leaves, flowers, foliage and large lily leaves. The pulpit decorations consisted of cream balsam bouquets, and a pretty combination of sylvia and autumn leaves. Behind the organist were bouquets of glaiolus and large white and cream asters, with wreathings of sylvia, autumn leaves and wheat sheaves. Around the choir railing were clusters of wheat sheaves and leaves intertwined in graceful festoons. The front of the gallery was also appropriately decorated with sylvia and oak leaves. And the pillars and window sills of the church were all dressed with variegated leaves, wild grapes and sheaves of wheat. The effect was very pleasing and appropriate for the occasion, and gave evidence not only of patient study and good taste but must have required much time and labour to accomplish such a generous floral decoration.

The Morning Sermon.

The preacher took for his text, the words in James 1. 17, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above." After reviewing the many blessings of everyday life that come to all as the spontaneous gifts "that cometh down from the Fatner," the preacher pointing out the necessity for gratitude and thanksgiving. "But what of sickness, disease, bereavement, death and war? Were these good gifts from the Father—were these calculated to evoke thanksgiving?" The speaker affirmed that they were. And, contrary to the usual pulpit utterances on this subject, he declared that sickness was not of God—was not sent by God—but affirmed that it was "permitted of God."

This is not of an uncommon expression by many good living people, who claim that it is good scriptural teaching. There are some earnest seekers after the truth, however, who decline to accept such doctrine. This much seems clear—that permitting is consenting. If the King of Great Britain permits me to throw a bomb into my neighbour's house, he is a consenting party; and it would not be consistent for him to punish me. "God is Love." Imagine Love consenting or permitting sickness, disease, bereavement, war! Evil is the generic term for all that is unlike God; and includes that category—sin, sickness, disease, death, war, before whom enlightened humanity shrinks with dismay. If one believes that the God to whom we pray in cases of sickness, disease, bereavement, or war, is capable of permitting, or in any way acquiesces in the evil that is in the world, then one approaches Him always with a certain amount of doubt, and such a prayer cannot be answered. Prayer may be associated with the erroneous thought or belief that good sometimes comes out of evil; and therefore, that sickness, etc., may be sent to carry out Gods designs. This is the genesis of a line of reasoning that can only end in disaster. If we come to God as one who takes cognizance of evil, and therefore, believes in it, or acquiesces in it, we cannot rise above our own sense of evil or be delivered from the fear of it. Misled by false teaching, some pray to God as virtually a participant in evil. If we accept the teaching and works of Christ, we should know there is no such God as this; and that prayer offered on such a basis would be as vain as if offered to a wooden image. If there could be evil in the divine consciousness it would establish God's imperfections— a position which is manifestly unthinkable.

The Music.

St. Paul's choir gave a splendid demonstration of its musical talent and training, and the choirmaster must have good reason for thankfulness when he saw his work productive of such excellent results. Miss Dorothy Allan's, "Fear Ye Not, O Israel," showed her resourcefulness in the difficult and varied characteristics of this strengthening hymn. The choir was at its best, and every member was in excellent voice.

Sunday At St. James' Church

Evangelist Crossley Spoke at Three Services

Last Sunday was a great day in St. James' Methodist church, when Rev. H. T. Crossley spoke three times. At the morning service his theme was, "Three Inestimable Treasures," viz.: The Rest of Faith, the Rest of Service and the Rest of Heaven. In the Sunday school session the hundreds were interested and impressed, as he dilated on some new things named in the Bible and posible for each. At night the church was thronged with persons from all parts of the City, who were delighted, edified and inspired as Mr. Crossley sang two of his favourite solos, told the story of Sir John A. McDonald's conversion in their meetings in Ottawa twenty-seven years ago, and then spoke on the subject of conversion for each. One of the things which profoundly impressed the audience was when he said that out of one hundred persons who are converted, only 2 are converted after 40 years of age, 5 between 30 and 40; 13 between 20 and 30; and 80 out of the hundred who are converted, turn to the Lord before they are 20 years old. Twenty-five at the close of the sermon avowed decision to begin the new life.

Monday night Mr. Crossley spoke on "A Great Man's Ideals" to a good house. Rev. R. E. Spence of Neepawa, was present, and told of his conversion at nine years of age.

The theme to-night will be "Heaven," in song sermon. The services are now on the home stretch, as they

THE "HANDY MAN" CHAFES UNDER ENFORCED IDLENESS

LONDON, Oct. 8 — Sailors with the British fleet are chafing at the bit, judging by letters they are sending home to their relatives. Following are three samples of the letters that are being received very day from the sailor lads:

"We are having a rather trying time up here, closed up around our guns all day long and on the alert for emergencies. Whether the Germans will tackle us or not it is a matter of indifference to us as I do not believe any of the ships would be blown away under the fire from German ships. I don't believe they could hit us if we were all clustered together, but at the same time we are all of one wish and that is to have a bump at 'em. Let 'em come is what we say."

Another reads:

"We are still dancing on the ocean wave on the look-out for the enemy but we begin to fear he is not going to show up. It is sickening to think of our fine fleet going to waste for want of something to fight. The Germans appear to be in a blue funk. We have seen one or two of their cruisers and scouting vessels, but they are always off in a hurry when they see us. We have given them every encouragement to come out and fight, but they positively won't. I suppose they are waiting for someone to come along and buy their fleet second hand so they will have the claim of a moral victory in not having it captured."

A third follows:

"After a period of serving as escorts for transports we are now to have a change but I can't say it is a change for the better. Germans who will fight are as scarce as sixpences in a sailor's pocket after two days ashore. They are a cowardly lot, after all their bragging to go hiding behind their forts and never give us a chance to knock holes in them. Can you imagine a British fleet acting like that?"

The wool exhibit has attracted the attention of large crowds at the Exhibitions where it has been displayed and contains much useful information regarding the care, uses and manufacture of this important product of the farm.

The egg exhibit, particularly the candling demonstration, is of special interest to consumers and producers, and all are cordially invited to attend.

DISCOVERED A COMET

October 12th, 1914.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Sir,—I want to let you know that I discovered a comet last night in the northern hemisphere, about half way between the outside star of the handle of the dipper, and the horizon, travelling in a westerly direction. The comet can be seen with naked eye with good vision. It might be interesting to the other members of the Royal Astronomical Society.

Yours truly,

THE MODERN CRY FOR PEACE

Interesting Topic Discussed by Elder Johnston

A very timely theme was delivered Sunday night in "Woodmen Hall" by Elder Johnston, entitled, "The Modern Cry for Peace and What the Bible Says Concerning It." Taking for his text Ezekiel, 13: 10, where it says: "Because even because they have seduced my people, saying, peace; and there was no peace," he opened up his remrks by saying that we are living in a time when a great deal is said about eliminating war and the prospects of universal peace and prosperity, and when many are declaring that men shall sit beneath vines and fig trees and never learn war any more. But such an anticipation is rather doubtful, said Mr. Johnston, considering the enormous preparations for war and the greedy disposition of unregenerated human nature for gain. There never was a time of such gigantic preparations for war, and yet in the face of all this a great many are deceived, yes, deluded with a false, a counterfeit hope, that a time of peace and safety is about about to dawn upon us. Many are preaching it and people are believing it and many have even scoffed at the idea of war. They have said that the pen is much mightier than the sword, and that international differences could be settled by arbitration and that universal war was an utter impossibility. Suppose the British Empire had given need to those peace prophets and had not been prepared for the present great war. What then? Why Britain would be down and Germany would be boss.

But right in the midst of their peace and safety cry behold sudden destruction comes as the word of God predicted it in 1 Thess. 5: 3. Yes, in Isaiah, 2: 2, 3, 4, the Lord specifically declares that "It shall come to pass in the last days . . . Many people (not the Lord) would be for beating their implements of war into farming machines and never learn war any more. But what are the facts as the Lord has predicted Himself concerning the nations. By turning to Joel, 3: 9, 10, we find the Lord says that in the last days they would prepare for war and that they would even beat their ploughs into swords and pruning hooks into spears, and that a great and mighty conflict would occur. This doesn't have very much of an air of peace, so Mr. Johnston said, nor will there ever be peace till sin and sinners are totally destroyed by the fires of the last day. Christ will then come to rescue His saints and eventually place them in the earth made new, 2 Pet., 3: 13, where the Prince of Peace will reign, and even the animal, the lion and the lamb, will feed and lie down together, and a little child be able to lead them. Isa., 11: 6-9. Not until then, so Mr. Johnston said, will there ever be such a thing as universal peace and safety.

A large crowd was present and listened very attentively. The hall is nicely fitted up, well lighted and comfortably seated and during the winter Elder Johnston intends to deal with many other important and interesting themes.

Have You Seen The Comet?

A gentleman in the north end of the City, Mr. Wm. Weatherstone, of 120 Hilliard Street, has been watching a comet in the sky for the past few nights. He states that it may be easily seen with the naked eye in the north-western corner of the sky, with a long feathery tail, pointing due north. Mr. Weatherstone says he has heard nothing about this comet in the newspapers and presumes he was the first in Peterborough to see it.

Keen Competition In All Four Contests of The City Championship Sports

Dr. Frank, A. Huycke, J. Green and S. Galbraith the Winners in Yesterday's Sports.

GOOD ATTENDANCE

Spirited competition that kept the several hundred spectators interest from the first event to the last marked the City Championship sports that were held yesterday afternoon at Riverside Park. For every trophy there was a good contest, the number of entries being very large and the showing, on the whole, unusually good. The proceeds of the sports go to the patriotic fund, and as there was a good attendance the sum netted is likely to be a substantial one.

The Winners.

In the Howden Trophy, open to all City athletes, Dr. Frank came home with the bacon. Although he did not enter in the mile run he managed to lead when the final reckoning was made, by 39 points over Jimmy McMartin, who was second. The Eastwood trophy for youths between 16 and 18 was carried off by Arthur Huycke. The competition in this contest was very close, A. Austen being second with 257 points and Mulhern, third, with 249. H. Lewis was a close fourth with 240 points.

Jack Green lead the field competing for the Huycke trophy (for athletes between 14 and 16) with 344 points. Hugh Austen was second and Eagle was third. The Huycke Trophy goes to Galbraith, who after a very close contest, succeeded in winning the Cup by 18 points, with A. McLeod, second.

The Tug-of-War.

The International Tug-of-War created a good deal of interest and excitement. The Chemong Indians, in two spectacular events, emerged from this engagement with flying colours, after defeating an Irish and a French team. A Scotch team had been entered, but owing to the death of P. C. Wm. Patterson, their entry was withdrawn and the contest was left to the Indians, the Irish and the French, in neither "tug" did the Indians have it all their own way, but in both they were up against good teams. Both their opponents were made finally to relinquish their claim to honours in the tug-of-war, after two "tugs," which raised the interest of the spectators to the highest degree.

The result of the events was as follows:

The school relay race was won by the Central School, whose ten runners defeated the Queen Mary, King Edward and South Central Schools. Through a mistake the Queen Alexandra School did not start in this event.

The results in all departments were:

ANCIENT ART OF ANTWERP IS WONDERFUL

Priceless Works Are Endangered by German Assault Upon the City

Antwerp Has Blood-curdling History as the Victim of Many Wars

The City of Antwerp, or Anvers, as the French and Belgian French have it, the German name being Antwerpen. It is more than 1,300 years since the founding of Antwerp and it rapidly grew to be one of the most important seaports of Europe, with merchant princes revaling those of Venice and Genoa. For hundreds of years, with occasional checks by reason of wars, it has been the principal seaport of all that region of Europe, thousands of vessels arriving and departing every year. It suffered greatly in the old days of Spain's dominance. It was devastated by the Duke of Parma and the desolation was more pronounced when Belgium was invaded by the Duke of Alva, the fiend of the Inquisition, and who boasted that his executions numbered more than the soldiers killed in battle. The whole history of the city is blood curdling up to the time of Napoleon, and it is a curious fact that Napoleon recognizing the splendid possibilities of the wonderful harbour, restored docks and quays and did much to revive the old glory of Antwerp. Again in 1874 the city had differences with the Belgian government which almost amounted to war, and the citadel, 300 years old, was blown up in the presence of King Leopold II.

If, however, the great city of the present, more than 300,000 in population, the capital of the Province of Antwerp, with a population of around 1,000,000, is to have the fate of Liege, Louvain and other cities, the commercial paralysis will concern the world less than the sentimental contemplation of the loss of grand religious and other edifices, of priceless the unique Musee Plantin-Moretus, the unique Museeg Plantin-Moretus, an ancient printing house, the most notable in Europe in its day, producing wonderful works of art from the types.

Examples of these, impossible to reproduce, are preserved by the hundreds in this museum, which is in the original house where Plantin amazed the then civilized world with his productions. Not only these, but some of the most precious paintings of the Flemish and Dutch masters, such as Rubens, Rembrandt, Van der Weyden, Steen, Hals, Matsys, Teniers, Van Dyck and Jordeans, are on the walls of the house, which in itself is one of the most interesting memorials of Europe. Rubens, Teniers and Van Dyck lived in Antwerp and have monuments there, and Jordeaens, Mateys and other of teh famed Flemish artists had their homes in Antwerp.

The Gothic cathedral, begun in 1352 and not finished until 1592, one of the towers unfinished in this day, as had supplied on many of the ancient religious edifices, is one of the finest in Europe, its finished tower being more than 400 feet in height and holding a chime of bells incomparable for their sweet music: qualities. Every American tourist who ever visited Antwerp holds as one of he most precious of memories the sound of the marvellous chimes of that cathedral. On the walls of the cathedral is the masterpiece of Rubens, "The Descent from the Cross," a notable departure from the often coarse productions of this artist, as for example the several great pictures in the Louvre at Paris painted at the request of Marie de Medici, and representing the "apotheosis" of that unfortunate queen, who was exiled by her own son and whose heart is buried under one of the stone slabs in the cathedral at Cologne.

In nearly all of the notable buildings are fine examples of those great painters of Belgium and Holland, some of whom were almost cotemporaneous with Raphael and Michael Angelo, and all of whom were inspired to a degree by the masters who had gone before the golden age of the Dutch and Flemish masters of the sixteenth century. Rubens, for instance, went to Spain and he and Velasquez painted together for nearly a year, each influencing the other.

Not only are these these priceless works of art, for other examples of which foreign galleries and European and American millionaires have paid unknown millions of dollars, but in Antwerp there is a municipal museum in which there are some of the best illustrations of the genius of the immortal artists who have been named, and not only in the cathedral, but also in the beautiful churches of St. James, St. Andrew and St. Paul.

Nobody in all the world, who has architecture, created in the days when there were great art and great architects, but will fervently hope that if the Germans destroy things will be spared that, if destroyed, can never be reproduced. All of the machinery of trade and commerce can be recreated, but art treasures once destroyed are destroyed forever.

GOING MAD FROM THE TERRIFIC PAIN

Prominent Merchant Thinks His Life Was Saved By "Fruit-a-tives".

DRYDALE, ONT., JUNE 15th, 1913.

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives", and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

BOSTON BRAVES MAKE IT THREE STRAIGHT GAMES FROM MACKMEN

Won Yesterday After Twelve Innings of Sensational Baseball—Gowdy's Terrific Batting Was the Greatest Single Factor in the Result.

ATHLETICS FOUGHT HARD

BOSTON, Oct. 12.—The fur flew this afternoon at Fenway Park in a thrashing game, twelve innings in length, the third of the series between the Braves and Athletics, and won by the Braves by a score of 5 to 4. The game, the most desperately fought of any world series contest, was streaked with the dramatic, worked up to a dramatic finale, and was finished in the fading light of evening. Once, twice, three times the unyielding Braves with the stoutness of heart which won the National League pennant for them, tied the score. They tied it in the second, the fourth and the tenth innings, and in the twelfth Leslie Mann, running for Gowdy, danced over the goal with the winning run.

Mann became base runner for Gowdy just after Gowdy had poled a towering two-bagger into the left field bleachers in the twelfth, and in doing so he became pedal understudy for the man who through the prowess of his bat, has been the outstanding figure of the series so far, in the second inning the strapping catcher batted a run in with a two-bagger across the plain into the temporary stand; in the tenth with the Braves two runs behind and near to defeat, he whaled a home run through right centre, and on the bound over the fence, putting fresh heart into his mates; in the twelfth he boomed a two-bagger into the seats which started his team on the road to the run that captured the third consecutive victory. A raging force with the cudgel, Mr. Gowdy.

The Athletics to-day fought the Braves harder than in either of the two preceding games, but the harder they fought, and they battled courageously, the harder the Braves, never at the end of their resources or their strength, fought back. The 35,000 fans present never had a moment's relaxation. The two teams were on top of each other all the way plugging and striking for runs.

Braves in Deep Water.

From the eighth inning on the Braves were in deep water nearly all the time. The ninth, tenth and twelfth were especially perilous for them, and the tenth, in which each side made two runs, was so surcharged with action as to bring a vortex of excitement. Bad judgment by Tyler in throwing a ball to second base instead of first, started the Boston distress and it was added to by a still worse case of mental erring.

The offender in the latter case was John Evers, who stood still on the second base line holding the ball while Eddie Murphy, quick to take advantage of an opening, raced home from third. This big slip on Evers' part was a case of "jove nodding," and the fact that it was Evers who was the culprit made it the more notable, or once the fox was caught asleep. The play, passive on Evers' part, came in the thick of a bristling sequence of events, which included a scratch hit by Bakers to Evers, which sent in a run; and it may be that Evers was momentarily upset by the vivid happenings which had just put his team at a serious disadvantage. But the plucky John redeemed himself in the second half of the throbbing tenth. He rammed a splitting single to right, which went far toward producing Boston's tying run. This hit was one of the three singles for him, and in addition he was the prime mover in sharp fielding which kept down the hostile tally output.

Lefty Tyler and Butler Bush were hit with asperity here and there, and likewise did a good deal of effective pitching. The young Philadelphia moundman again showed his quality a as world's series workman. He was so slow in the early innings as to stretch them out to annoying length, but he was cool and self-contained. He had speed in abundance. He did not field as well as he pitched, for it was on a wild, hurried throw of his that Mann tore off the last lap of the journey in the twelfth inning. However, Bush had to hurry that throw, and the probabilities are that had it gone true to third base, toward which point it was directed, it would have done no more than postponed for a brief time the winning run.

Tyler Pitched Good Game.

Tyler pitched a creditable game, too. It did not have the airtight qualities of the serving done by Rudolph and James last week, but made trouble for the Athletics. Tyler' change of pace was good and his control, not perfect by any means, was best with men on bases or when he was in a hole as to the batter, which was fairly often. Bush also steadied well and put the ball over when it licked as if a walk was about to take place. Tyler was benched to make way for a pinch hitter and "Bill" James had speed in the last two innings with the dwindling light which the Athletics could not touch. He was a trifle wild, however, and sent three men to bases, one, Baker, intentionally.

In the last two innings the lighted matches of smokers looked like bonfires in the cavernous depths of the big stand, and the play could not have gone beyond the twelfth round

SMOKE BEAT THORPE IN THE ROAD RACE

Old Rivals of the Road Meet Once More and Indian Won by Over a Fifth of a Mile After a Hard Battle—Taylor of Chemong Was the Other Starter.

The two old rivals of Examiner Road Race days, Albert Smoke of Chemong, and Charlie Thorpe, were the principal contestants in the ten-mile road race, which was one of the features of the Athletic Meet yesterday, and once more the wonderful Indian runner showed his class by breezing home a winner. Taylor, another Chemong Indian, was also a starter, but was never in the hunt. Smoke covered the distance to Nassau and back and a mile on the Riverside Park track in 53 minutes, beating Thorpe by a little over a fifth of a mile.

The course was a lap around the track, to Hunter street, north on George Street to Smith Street, then to Water and north to Nassau, crossing the river there and returning by the River Road to Concession Street, to Douro, west on Douro street to Rogers, south to Hunter Street and along Hunter Street to the Park, where the runners ran four laps on the track.

Leaving the Park Smoke shot into the lead with a spurt that looked as if he wanted to settle the contest in the first few thundred yards. He soon fell back, however, and the three runners ran up George Street in a bunch. As Smith Street was reached Taylor dropped to the rear and was never a factor afterwards. Smoke and Thorpe ran side by side for nearly two miles. At the Pumping Station they were together and Smoke looked to be in distress, running with his hand over his stomach for nearly half a mile. On the hill above the waterworks plant, however, he cut loose with a spurt that showed that he was in good shape and Thorpe at the same time showed signs of trouble. The result was that the Indian quickly set up a lead of 200 yards, and when Nassau was reached he was easily that much to the good with Taylor even further behind Thorpe. The latter grew stronger after he crossed the bridge, and coming down the River Road he held his own and, if anything, gained on the flying Indian. From the judges' car the two runners were nearly always in sight at the same time. Near the Oval Smoke let out another link and increased his lead. When Smoke swung around on to Hunter Street Thorpe was turning the corner from Douro Street into Rogers street. Smoke got a big hand from the crowd as he entered the Park. He was starting on his second lap when Thorpe came on the track. Both men seemed to have plenty in reserve and finished with a strong sprint. Taylor did not finish and was picked up by an automobile.

Thorpe has not run the distance for several years and his showing was a good one, probably the best he has made against the Chemong lad, who looks as good as ever.

SENSATIONAL WRESTLING BOUT BETWEEN ALF. HARDIE AND FORBES

Gene Hurtubise Had Little Trouble in Throwing Charlie Fraser But Featherweights Went an Hour Without a Fall, Both Boys Showing Speed and Cleverness.

When Alf. Hardie, late of Yorkshire, England, and Jack Forbes, the champion Scottish featherweight, booked up at Brock Street Rink on Saturday night, the fair-sized crowd in attendance saw one of the fastest, prettiest and cleverest exhibitions of wrestling ever staged in Peterborough It was a handicap bout, with Forbes undertaking to throw Hardie twice in an hour, but the "Scottie" found the programme a little more than he anticipated. At the end of the sixty minutes not only was Hardie unthrown, but he looked the stronger and the hour wound up with him on the aggressive and with the crowd cheering him wildly.

Two more evenly matched mat artists have never been seen here. Clever to the last degree, speedy and in splendid condition, the two lads from across the pond provided a battle that will long be remembered. Unlike the usual handicap bout in which one man is generally on the defensive, this was a series of narrow escapes for both. Athough Hardie had only to remain unthrown to win, he declined to merely defend himself; on the other hand he carried the war to Forbes and the result was a slam-bang, hammer-and-tongs go, which kept the crowd on its feet throughout. Head spins, lightning-like rolls, a speedy reversal from the defence to attack, made the clash a spectacular one.

Forbes was supremely confident at the go-in, but as minute after minute passed without Hardie's defence being solved it could be seen that he was worried.

"Hurry up, Jack; your time is going," advised an admirer from the crowd.

"Don't mind me. I'm all right," snapped Forbes, as he sawed away at Hardie's neck with a "half-Nelson."

"You're not the only one," retorted the Yorkshire lad, as he squirmed out of the hold and took the aggressive.

Hardie's coolness won the crowd. He had an unusual sitting posture, which proved a puzzling defence to Forbes. The latter worked away with all the skill and science at his command, but could not get Hardie's shoulders to the mat. Several times he had him in hot water with a scissors' hold, but Hardie twisted Forbes' toe so vigorously that he had to forgo the advance. Again Forbes had his rival in trouble with a "half Nelson," but could not turn him over and Hardie eventually broke the hold and got clear. So it went on without a let-up for the entire sixty minutes.

Forbes was decidedly peeved at the end of the hour. In the dressing-room he intimated that he considered Hardie was over 130 pounds, and expressed his opinion that he could beat the Yorkshire lad in a finish bout. Hardie was willing to go ahead right there and wrestle to a finish, but the question of weight could not be settled. Forbes admitted it was the hardest bout he had ever been in. Quite a bit of hard feeling was shown and if the two come together in a finish bout the match should be the finest thing in the wrestling line ever dished up for the approval of local fans. It is safe to say that no one who was on hand Saturday night will be missing if the two get together again.

On Saturday's showing it would be hard to say which is the better boy of the two. Each knows every point of the game, each is lightning fast, and each is game. Forbes, wrestling with a pair of very sore ears, while Hardie had a boil on his arm, the bandage of which was torn off early the bout, leaving the "Job's comforter" entirely unprotected.

EASY FOR HURTUBISE.

Peterborough's heavyweight wrestler, Gene Hurtubise, had little trouble in disposing of Charlie Fraser, the Western wrestler. Fraser gave away many pounds and was no match for Hurtubise, who, after being on the aggressive most of the way, and punishing Fraser with "scissors" holds. Suddenly Hurtubise grabbed the visitor and slammed his shoulders to the mat. Fraser had a couple of injured ribs and he was hurt so much in the fall that he was unable to continue. Hurtubise is heavier than ever and handled himself nicely, showing skill in his leg work. Fraser tired gamely, but the local boy was too big to give him a chance.

Joe Dwyer refereed both bouts satisfactorily.

Being confronted with the fact that they were face to face with a win or tie, then and there the Braves preferring a win, plotted and hammered their way to a triumph in quick time.

A cloud-streaked sky did not furnish the best light in the world at any time. The weather conditions were not as good as in Philadelphia. It was cooler and a brisk wind cut across the field to harry fielders when trailing fly balls.

The Athletics made a promising start, which indicated a strong determination to stop the onward march of the Braves. They were in deadly earnest and more like themselves, though dstined once more to fall back beaten from the Boston rock.

Fire in a Pennsylvania coal mine was extinguished by exploding dynamite in the airway, the concussions blowing out the flames.

FORBES IS AFTER HARDIE

Jack Forbes, whose match with Alf Hardie at Brock Street Rink last Saturday is the talk of the sporting portion of Peterborough, is not satisfied. He thinks that Hardie outweighed him and that if the Yorkshire lad makes 130 pounds he can beat him in a finish match. Accordingly Forbes has asked permission to challegenge Hardie, through the Examiner, to a match, best two out of three falls, for a side bet, each party to post a $25 forfeit with the Sporting Editor of The Examiner, that he will make 130 pounds at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the bout. If Hardie accepts this challenge the bout will have to be held this week, probably Friday night, as Hardie is leaving at the end of the week for Boston, where he has several bouts arrangd.

LONDON, Oct. 10—An attractive list of games was set for decision to-day in the three principal soccer leagues, resulting in some interesting changes in the tables. The Manchester City players have set a splendid example by giving up 5 per cent. of their wages for the benefit of the war fund, while every club in the country has now erected a rifle range on its ground which is taken full advantage of by all the members.

The leaders of the first division of the English Association League, Manchester City, the remarkable form so far of which has caused such a sensation, entertained Newcastle United, and, drawing at one goal, all retain their positions at the top of the table and still remain the only undefeated club in this division.

Chelsea's team cost $80,000 to build, up and its supporters are disappointed with the team form so far. Blackburn Rovers journeyed to Nottingham to tackle the County Club, but found them a difficult nut to crack and returned with only one point, drawing the game at 1 to 1. The standing to date:

The Trousers-like Fit.

"The women are appropriating our privileges," said Hobson sourly. "I hope they'll find attached some of our troubles."

"They will," Jimpson assured him. "My wife was complaining today that her skirt was getting baggy at the knees."—Puck.

Ancient Theatricals.

The "Agamemnon" of Aeschylus was first produced at Athens in 458 B.C. with the other plays of the great Oresteas tetralogy. The official record of the year, which has been discovered, runs— "Tragedy: Choregus Xenocles of Aphidna; Poet, Aeschylus." So we see that the modern order of precedence—"So-and-so presents a new play by A. N. Other"—is ancient enough, for the choregus was merely a wealthy citizen who provided and paid for the chorus and a room for rehearsals, and nobody remembers Xenocles of Aphidna to-day. But there was one difference in ancient Athens. The leading actor's name did not appear in the record.—London Chronicle.

Some English!

From a Japanese guide book for English tourists comes this alluring description:

"In Hakone draft of pure air suspends no poisonous mixture and always cleannes the defilement of our spirit. During the winter the coldness robs up all pleasure from our hands, but at the summer month they are set free. Moonlight on the sky shivers quartzy luster over ripples of the lake. The cuckoo singing near by plays on a harp, and the far viewing of light shaded mountains may be joyfully looked at through wide unobstructed space of the sea."

Churchill Criticised.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The Morning Post, in an editorial yesterday, severely criticizes Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, for what it describes as a costly blunder in sending a small force of marines to Antwerp. The newspaper expresses the belief that the British losses are greater than admitted and contends that if it was impossible to send a large military force to Antwerp, none at all should have been sent, and the Belgians should have been permitted to surrender without bombardment, as they would have done but for British advice, which only resulted in loss of life and hampering the retirement of the British army.

Admiral Storey Goes To Coast.

GUELPH, Oct. 14.—Rear Admiral Storey of this city has received word from the Dominion Government accepting his proffer of service and has been appointed superintendent of naval service at Vancouver Island under the Dominion Government, and is ordered to take charge of his position at once. The possibility of German cruisers appearing off the Pacific coast has created some alarm in that section of the Dominion, and it is probable that the services of Admiral Storey have been accepted with a view to the adequate defence of that part of the country.

Big Guns at Cattaro.

ROME, Oct. 14.—It is announced by the French ambassador stationed here that on Sept. 22 heavy French guns of long range were landed at Antivari and have now been put in position on Mount Lovchen. They are trained on the Austrian port of Cattaro, in Dalmatia.

BATTLE IS IMPENDING IN THE EAST

Russians Have Chosen Ground on Which to Meet Enemy.

PRREMYSL SIEGE GOES ON

Russians Say Their Guns Are Destroying Forts of Galician City—Vigorous German Resistance Has Halted Advance Into East Prussia—Germany Still Suspended Precautions From Service.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—It is officially announced at Petrograd that the siege of Przemysl is progressing, according to a despatch to a local news agency from the Roumian capital. The Czar's artillery is rapidly destroying the forts, which, however, continue an energetic resistance. The Przemysl garrison, it is announced, does not exceed 30,000 men.

Of fighting in Galicia the official reports from Petrograd and Vienna are so directly at variance that there is no reconciling them. Vienna says that the relief of Przemysl is complete, while Petrograd declares that the Russian artillery is achieving great success.

The general opinion gathered from the various reports is that the Russians have withdrawn to a line starting from Sambor, in Galicia, and passing through Przemysl, Sandomir and Ivangorod, and thence to the west of Warsaw, roughly, along the San and Vistula rivers, where they are waiting to meet the advancing Austro-German armies on ground of the Russians own choosing.

The biggest forces are between Sandomir and Ivangorod, which is the centre of the German advance. The fighting thus far is only of advance guard character, or probably, where the Russians are withdrawing, in the nature of rear guard actions.

The Germans seemingly are completely cut of the Suwalki and Lomza districts, but the Russian advance into East Prussia is making little if any progress. Probably both are willing to wait where they are until the bigger battle to the south has been decided. The Germans, it is said, have been surprised by the early setting in of winter, and not being provided with heavy clothing, such as the Russians have, are suffering severely.

In the sinking of the cruiser Pallada by a German submarine the Russian navy has suffered quite a heavy loss. Russia has too few ships as it is, and the loss of a cruiser of the Pallada class is of serious consequence.

A statement given out by the Russian Government says:

"The German losses have forced the German Government to revoke all exemptions to the military service.

"The German army, being short of equipment, an order has been issued to buy the dead soldiers' military uniforms and shoes."

Prince Oleg, a son of Grand Duke Constantine, has died of wounds received in action. An official despatch from Petrograd, on Oct. 11, said that Prince Oleg had been wounded during a cavalry engagement.

Warsaw In Peril?

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14. — News from the war in the east is contained in a despatch from the American consul in Warsaw, which says that the capital of Russian Poland is threatened by the Germans, and its fall is expected at any moment. The motive for conveying this information is the consul's expressed request for instructions as to the care of foreign interests during the expected period of German occupation.

To Recruit New Battery.

KINGSTON, Ont., Oct. 14. — Recruiting will commence to-day for a new battery of field and horse artillery, authorized by the military authorities. There will be 150 of all ranks. International work for home and active service will be the object of the new battery.

Health First

In buying food articles we must consider several things—economy, results, convenience, reliability; but the most important is Health.

Health means everything. If one gets cheated in buying dresses, shoes or bonnets it is provoking, but the harm is chiefly loss of money. In buying food articles, if imitations or poor stuffs are supplied, there is a loss of money and probably an injury to health also; and good health is beyond price.

Remember these facts when buying baking powder.

HAS A SMALL FOLLOWING

Irreconcilable, Who Went Into German Territory After the South African War, Has Declared War on the Union and Wants to Set Up Republic—Martial Law Declared—Arrest Ordered.

CAPE TOWN, Union of South Africa, Oct. 14—It is officially announced here that a commando, under Col. Maritz, has rebelled in the northwest of the Cape provinces.

Martial law has been proclaimed throughout the union.

The proclamation imposing martial law says that "the Government of the Protectorate of German Southwest Africa, has through a widespread, secret propaganda persistently endeavored to seduce citizens of the Union and officers and members of the defence forces of the union from their allegiance and to cause rebellion and civil war within the union."

The rebellion among the forces of the Northwest Cape Province has been brewing since the resignation of Gen. Beyers as commander-in-chief of the Union forces.

As soon as the Government realized this situation it sent Col. Brits to relieve Maritz of his command. Col. Brits then discovered that Maritz was commanding German troops as well as his own, and that he had German guns in his possession. Maritz, who had been given the German rank of general, had arrested those of his officers and men who were unwilling to join the Germans and had sent them as prisoners of war to German Southwest Africa.

According to an official statement an agreement was drawn up between Maritz and the governor of German Southwest Africa, guaranteeing the independence of the Union as a republic, ceding Walfish Bay and other parts of the Union to the Germans, and undertaking that the Germans should invade the Union only if Maritz asked them to do so.

In itself the rebellion of Col. Maritz and his commando in Cape Colony is not regarded as of serious importance. His following is small, and it is situated in that part of the colony where it can be of least value to the Germans in Southwest Africa. Col. Maritz always has been known as irreconcilable and certain to seize any opportunity of making trouble. It is assumed that Gen. Botha will lose no time in having him arrested.

While it is known that Col. Maritz, the leader of the rebels in South Africa, has only a small following, the affair is considered unfortunate at this moment. Maritz is a Transvaaler, who fought in the Boer War, but at its conclusion was one of the irreconcilables who crossed over into German territory, where he fought with the Germans against the natives. Later he returned to British South Africa, got an appointment in the police and worked his way to the command of which he has just been relieved.

Getting Out of the Rut.

The merchant who conducts his business according to the method of the last century is not giving his customers the service they are entitled to. The spirit of the new century is to do more than to merely turn goods over at a profit. It is to really earn that profit by giving real service, accommodation and reliable advice. The modern merchant must know his goods thoroughly and what is best adapted to every household requirement.

That class of merchant invariably advertises. That is the one sure test of his being abreast of the times.

JAPAN'S WAR OVER?

Tsing-Tau Is To Be Given Up Says Tokio Report.

TOKIO, Oct. 14.—The Kaiser has sent word to allow the surrender of Tsing-Tau.

An earlier despatch said: As the result of the communication to him of the Japanese Emperor's desire to spare the lives of non-combatants and neutrals in Tsing-Tau, Meyer Waldeck, Governor of Kiao-Chau, has sent German officers to meet Japanese officers to arrange the details for their departure before the inauguration of the final attack upon the German fortress by the Japanese and British forces.

During an armistice Sunday on the battlefront of Tsing-Tau twenty-two German defenders of the fortress were buried.

The fortress fires 1,500 shells daily.

The German garrison in Kiao-Chau consists of 92 officers, 2,374 German non-commissioned officers and men, and one battalion of the East Asiatic Garrison Brigade. It was agreed that within a zone of 31 miles from all points of the leased territory the Chinese Government should no longer, for the space of 99 years, be entitled to take any steps without previous authorization from the German Government.

LEAVING OSTEND.

Thousands of Citizens Are Crossing Over To England.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—As early as 8 o'clock yesterday morning the harbor station at Ostend was besieged by thousands of people anxious to get aboard the mail boats, according to a despatch from the Ostend correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co.

Members of the Belgian Government, the diplomatic corps and other officials left for Havre on the first two steamers. The later boats were literally stormed by a crowd of fugitives, many even getting on board by way of the luggage chute.

Among yesterday's arrivals at Folkestone and Dover were several hundred wounded Belgian soldiers. It is likely that their number will be considerably increased in the course of the next few days. They are being looked after by the relief committees for wounded allies, and are being sent in small bodies to different provincial cities and towns, where arrangements have been made to provide them with hospital accommodation.

It is estimated that already nearly 200,000 Belgian refugees have landed on these shores. It is feared that the stream of refugees will increase in volume as the German occupation of Belgium becomes more complete.

The War Refugees Committee is at present unable to find accommodations for them. Herbert Samuel, President of the Local Government Board, yesterday issued an appeal asking that committees be formed in various parts of the country to assist in obtaining food and shelter for the strangers, and to help find homes in which they may be placed.

Paris Now Guarded.

PARIS, Oct. 14. — Two French aerial vedettes patrolled the sky above Paris yesterday watching for German raiders. Other French aircraft were in readiness at the aviation posts to take the air if an enemy was sighted. Crowds gathered in the squares and open spaces of the city to watch the manoeuvring of the French aeroplanes.

VON KLUK NOW RETREATING

Military Observers Believe That Germany's Movement to the North Is For the Purpose of Saving German Right Wing From Destruction—Allies Win Five Battles Along Battle Line.

LONDON, Oct. 14. — German Uhlans have occupied the town of Ghent which is undefended, without resistance. This is confirmed by despatches from both Rotterdam and Amsterdam. All communication between Ghent and Holland has been severed.

German aeroplanes yesterday appeared over Ostend and one of the machines dropped two bombs, which fell in the sand dunes near the city and failed to explode. British aeroplanes drove the invaders off without inflicting any damage on the German craft.

Along the entire allied line in France and southern Belgium, there was severe fighting yesterday. From Paris it is reported that the Germans were signally defeated in five battles, in all of which the allies assumed the offensive, save in the region of Apremont where a counter German attack was repulsed with loss of men and ground to the enemy. The severest fighting took place between Arras and Albert, where the Franco-British forces made a tremendous effort to cut off the retreat of Von Kluk, now stated to be under way. Lille, however, has fallen into the hands of the Kaiser, French territorial troops being compelled to retreat before a full army corps.

News from the front is fragmentary. Nearly all of the reports tell in glowing terms of victories by the allies, excepting at Lille. But some of them are sufficiently circumstantial to warrant full credence. Early yesterday, in the neighborhood of Hazebrouck and Bethune, British and French cavalry made a sudden raid on a German cavalry detachment which had seized an advanced position and who were trying to hold their advantage until infantry arrived. They were completely routed.

The most important victory of the day took place at Verdun. This fortress, which has stood out for eight weeks against severe bombardment, is the apex of the French centre and the special object of German operations. As a result of yesterday's fighting the French command all of the roads leading eastward to Metz, the base of supplies for the German left and centre.

French bayonet assaults at Souain and Berry-au-Bac drove the Germans from their advanced trenches. This was only accomplished after desperate fighting. The French came up again and again under a withering fire and ultimately the defenders fled before the line of glittering steel.

Having failed to penetrate the French lines on the Aisne it is said on good authority that Germany will try a flanking movement in the east. For this purpose guns and men are believed to be en route from Antwerp for the stronghold on the south of the present lines. Belfort has been more or less of a storm centre of the fighting in the Vosges and Alsace. Its fall would tend to throw the French right into distress. The French general staff, it is reported, will profit by the lesson of Antwerp and depend more on field forces to stem the German advance in that direction, rather than on the fortress itself.

The position of the allied armies in southern Belgium are a trifle uncertain. But with the Germans at Ghent the French and British cannot be far away, certainly between them and Ostend. However, German cavalry in force is reported at Hazebrouck, 32 miles northwest of Lille, and at Orchies, 16 miles south of Lille. At Ypres cavalry and infantry is reported. Judging from this movement it would appear that the Kaiser means to drive forward directly to Ostend, Dunkirk and Calais, the two latter towns just over the French border from Belgium and both important ports, within easy striking distance of England. That such an advance will be bitterly contested without saying. On the other hand, the weakness of the German defence at other points yesterday gives rise to the belief that the movement toward the coast is intended to cover the retreat of Von Kluk to new lines in Belgium. In fact, it is actually stated by some correspondents that his retreat is progressing at this moment.

The official communication issued by the French War Department last night says:

"With the exception of an advance of some importance in the vicinity of Berry-au-Bac (on the centre) there is nothing to report."

The communique issued at three o'clock says:

"On our left wing our forces have resumed the offensive in the regions of Hazebrouck and of Bethune against detachments of the enemy composed in large part of cavalry coming from the front along Bailleul, Estaires and La Bassee.

"The town of Lille, held by a territorial detachment, has been attacked and occupied by a German army corps.

"Between Arras and Albert we have made notable progress.

"On the centre also we have made progress in the region of Berry-au-Bac and we have advanced toward Souain in the west of the Argonne and north of Malancourt.

"Between the Argonne and the Meuse, on the right bank of the Meuse, our troops who hold the heights of the Meuse to the east of Verdun have advanced.

"To the south of the road from Verdun to Metz, in the region of Apremont, we have gained a little territory on our right, and repulsed a German attack on our left.

"On our right wing, Vosges and Alsace, there has been no change.

"To sum up, yesterday was marked by perceptible progress on the part of our forces at various points on the field of battle.

"In Galicia the Austrian corps defeated in Galicia are endeavoring to reform at a point four kilometres west of Przemysl."

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The Star's Copenhagen correspondent says The Vossiche Zeitung of Berlin reports the Crown Prince Alexander of Servia has been slightly wounded and that his brother, Prince George of Servia, has been mortally wounded in the fighting against the Austrians.

Hostile Ships Sighted.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—A strong German squadron, flying the flag of Prince Henry of Prussia, is cruising around the Aland Islands in the Baltic, according to a message from Helsingfors, transmitted to the Havas Agency from Petrograd.

How To Banish Wrinkles Quickly

If the average woman only knew it, it is not at all difficult to preserve the youthful contour and velvety smoothness of complexion. Every woman hates to see her face wrinkled or haggy, and practically every one has experimented with some sort of patent remedy in the effort either to remove such condition or ward it off.

As a matter of fact, the most effective remedy in the world is one that any woman can easily make up herself at home, in a moment's time. Let her take one ounce of pure powdered saxolite, which she can purchase at any drug store, and dissolve it in a half pint of witch hazel. Apply this harmless and refreshing solution to the face every day. The results are surprising—and instantaneous. Even after the very first application a marked improvement is apparent. The wrinkles are less in evidence and the face has a comfortable, young feeling of firmness that is most delightful.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Cas. Allen England

With an emprecation of unutterable hate and rage, yet impotent to stay the ravishment of Hope Villa, Stern brought the ma chine round in a long spiral.

For a moment the wild, suicidal idea possessed him to land on the beach, after all, and charge the little slate-blue devils who had evidently piled all the furnishings together in the bungalow and were now burning them.

He longed for slaughter now: he lusted blood—the blood of the Anthropoid pack which from the beginning had hung upon his flank and been as a thorn unto his flesh.

He seemed to feel the joy of rushing them, an automatic in each hand spitting death, just as he had mown down the Lanskaarn in the Battle of the Wall, down below in the Abyss. Stern though he knew the inevitable end — a poisoned spear-thrust, a wound with one of those terribly envenomed arrows—he felt no fear.

Révenge! If he could only feel its sweetness, death had no terrors.

Common sense instantly sobered him and dispelled these vain ideas. The bungalow, after all, was not vital to his future or the girl's. Barring the set of encyclopedias on metal plates, everything else could be replaced with sufficient labour. Only a madman would risk a fight with such a Horde in company with a woman.

Not now were he and Beatrice entrenched in a strong tower, with terrible explosives. Now they were in the open, armed only with revolvers. For the present there was no redress.

"Beta," cried he, "we're up against it this time for fair—and we can't hit back!"

"Our bungalow! Our precious home!"

"I know." He saw that she fas crying: "It's a rotten shame and all that, but it isn't fatal."

He brought the Pauillac down-wind again, coasting high over the bungalow, whence smoke now issued ever more and more thickly.

"We're simply hamstrung this time, that's all. Where those devils have come from and haw many there may be God knows. Thousands, perhaps; the woods may be full of em. It's lucky for us they didn't attack while we were there!

"Now—well, the only thing to do is let 'em have their way for the present. Eventually—"

"Oh, can't we ever get rid of the horrid little beasts for good?"

"We can and will!" He spoke very grimly, soaring the machine still higher over the river and once more coming round above the upper end of the beach. "One of these days there's got to be a final reckoning, but not yet!"

"So it's good-by to Hope Villa, Allan? There's no way?"

"It's good-by. Humanly speaking, none."

"Couldn't we land, blockade ourselves in the boat-house, and—"

Her eyes sparkled with the boldness of the plan—its peril, its possibilities. But Allan shook his head.

"And expose the Pauillac on the beach?" he asked. "One good swing with a war-club into the motor and then a week's siege and slow starvation, with a final rush—interesting, but not practical, little girl. No, no; the better part of valor is to recognize force majeure and wait! Remember what we've said already? Je recule pour mieux sauter?" Wait till we get a fresh start on these hell-hounds; we'll jump 'em far enough!"

The bungalow now lay behind. The whole clearing seemed alive with the little blue demons, like vermin crawling everywhere. Thicker and thicker now the smoke was pouring upward. The scene was one of utter desolation.

Then suddenly it faded. The plane had borne its riders onward and away from the range of vision. Again only dense forest lay below, while to eastward sparkled the broad reach where, in the first days of their happiness at Hope Villa, the girl and Allan had fished and bathed.

Her tears were unrestrained at last; but Allan, steadying the wheel with one hand, drew an arm about her and kissed and comforted her.

"There, there, little girl! The world's not ended yet, even if they have burned up our home-made mission furniture! Come, Beatrice, no tears—we've other things to think of now!"

"Where away, since our home's gone?" she queried pitifully.

"Where away? Why, Storm King, of course! And the cathedral and the records, and—and—"

CHAPTER IV.

"To-morrow Is Our Wedding-Day."

Purple and gold the light of that dying day still glowed across the western sky when the stanch old Pauillac, heated yet throbbing with power, skimmed the last league and swung the last great end of the river that hid old Storm King from the wanderers' eager sight.

Stern's eyes brightened at vision of that vast, rugged headland, forest clad and superb in the approaching twilight. Beatrice, weary now and spent—for the long journeys, the excitements and griefs of the day had worn her down despite her strength—paled a little and grew pensive as the massive structure of the cathedral loomed against the sky-line.

What thoughts were hers now that the goal lay near—what longings, fears and hopes, what exultation and what pain? She shivered slightly; but perhaps the evening coolness at that height had pierced her cloak. Her hands clasped tightly, she tried to smile but could not.

Allan could notice nothing of all this. His gaze was anxiously bent on the earth below, to find a landing for the great machine. He skimmed the broad brow of the mountain, hardly a hundred feet above the spires of the massive concrete pile that still reared itself steadfastly upon the height facing the east.

All about it the dense unbroken forest spread impenetrable to the eye. Below the bold breast of the cliff a narrow strip of beach appeared.

"Hard job to land, that's one sure thing!" exclaimed the man, peering at the inhospitable contours of the land. "No show to make it on top of the mountain, and if we take the beach it means a most tremendous climb up the cliff of through the forest on the flank. Here is a situation, Beatrice! Now—ah—see there? Look! that barren ridge to westward!"

Half a mile back from the river on the western slope of the highlands, a spur of Storm King stretched water-worn and bare, a sandy spit dotted only sparsely with scrub-pine.

"It's that, or nothing!" cried the man, banking in a wide sweep.

"Can you make it? Even the clearest space at this end is terribly short!"

Allan laughed and cut off power. In the old days not for ten thousand dollars would he have tried so ticklish a descent, but now his mettle was of sterner stuff and his skill with the machine developed to a point where man and biplane seemed almost one organism.

With a swift rush the Pauillac coasted down. He checked her at precisely the right moment, as the sand seemed whirling up to meet them, swerved to dodge a fire-blasted trunk, and with a shout took the earth.

The plane bounced, creaked, skidded on the long runners he had fitted to her, and with a lurch came to rest not ten yards from an ugly stump dead ahead.

"Made it, by Heaven!" he exulted. "But a few feet more and it wouldn't have been—well, no matter. We're here, anyhow. Now, supper and a good sleep. And to-morrow, the cathedral!"

He helped the girl alight, for she was cramped and stiff. Presently their camp-fire cheered the down-drawing gloom, as so many other times in such strange places. And before long their evening meal was in course of preparation, close by a great glacial boulder at the edge of the sand-barren.

In good comradeship they ate, then wheeled the biplane over to the rock, and under the shelter of its wide-spreading wings made their camp for the night. An hour or so they sat talking of many things—their escape from the Abyss, the patriarch's death, their trip east again, the loss of their little home, their plans, their hopes, their work.

Beatrice seemed to grieve more than Stern over the destruction of the bungalow. So much of her woman's heart had gone into the making of that nest, so many thoughts had centred on a return to it once more, that now when it lay in ruins through the spiteful mischief of the Horde, she found sorrow knocking insistently at the gates of her soul. But Allan comforted her as best he might.

"Never you mind, little girl!" said he bravely. "It's only an incident, after all. A year from now another and a still more beautiful home will shelter us in some more secure location. And there'll be human companionship, too, about us. In a year many of the Folk will have been brought from the depths. In a year miracles may happen—even the greatest one of all!"

Her eyes met his a moment by the ruddy fire-glow and held true.

"Yes," answered she, "even the greatest in the world!"

A sudden tenderness swept over him at thought of all that had been and was still to be, at sight of this woman's well-loved face irradiated by the leaping blaze—her face now just a little wan with long fatigues and sad as though with realization, with some compelling inner sense of vast, impending responsibilities.

He gathered her in his strong arms, he drew her yielding body close, and kissed her very gently.

"To-morrow!" he whispered. "Do you realize it?"

"To-morrow," she made answer, her breath mingling with his. "To-morrow, Allan—one page of life forever closed, another opened. Or, may it be for good—may we be very strong and very wise!"

Neither spoke for the space of a few heart-beats, while the wind made a vague, melancholy music in the sentinel tree-tops and the snapping sparks danced upward by the rock.

"Life, all life—just dancing sparks—then gone!" said Beatrice slowly. "And yet—yet it is good to have lived, Allan. Good to have lighted the black mystery of the universe, formless and endless and inscrutable, by even so brief a flicker!"

"Is it my little pessimist to-night?" he asked. "Too tired, that's all. In the morning things will look different. You must smile, then, Beta, and not think of formless mystery or—or anything sad at all. For to-morrow is our wedding-day."

He felt her catch her breath and tremble just a bit.

"Yes, I know. Our wedding-day. Allan. Surely thg strangest since time began. No friends, no gifts, no witnesses, no minister, no—"

"There, there!" he interrupted, smiling. "How can my little girl be so wrong-headed? Friends? Why, everything's our friend! All nature is our friend—the whole life-process is our friend and ally! Gifts? What need have we of gifts? Aren't you my gift, surely the best gift that a man ever had since the beginning of all things? And I not yours?

"Minister? Priest? We need none! The world-to-be shall have got far away from such, far beyond its fairy-tale stage, its weaknesses and fears of the Unknown, which alone explain their existence. Here on Storm King, under the arches of the old cathedral our clasped hands, our mutual words of love and trust and honour—these shall suffice. The river and the winds and forest, the sunlight and the sky, the whole infinite expanse of Nature herself shall be our priest and witnesses. And never has a wedding been so true, so solemn and so holy as yours and mine shall be. For you are mine, my Beatrice, and I am yours—for ever!

A little silence, while the flames leaped higher and the shadows deepened in the dim aisles of the fir-forest all about them. In the vast canopy of evening sky clustering star-points had begun to shimmer.

TO WHAT CLASS ? DO YOU BELONG ?

IN Canada are hundreds of business firms striving with all their might to make better times for themselves and their communities. To them all honor.

BUT there are other firms—Manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers—who are "standing pat," "playing safe," doing absolutely nothing to build up business. They are are mere lookers on, not participants in the valorous struggle of their brethern to maintain and establish good times.

LOOK about you and you will find in the advertising columns of The EXAMINER messages from firms with a sturdy confidence in the future.

Lifter or Leaner—which are you ?

Buttonholed.

If a merchant could call at the home of every one of his customers and talk with each for five minutes, he could materially increase his business; but figure out the time it would take!

Exactly the same result may be obtained by an advertisement in this paper. It will go into the homes and be read at a very favorable moment, when the mind of the customer is not distracted by other things. Tell your business news in the advertising columns. If your announcements are truthful and convincing, they will bring results.

W.G.MORROW
MANAGING DIRECTOR

BELGIUM'S KITCHENER

Little Kingdom Has a Strong and Capable Military Leader

Belgium, too, has its Lord Kitchener. He is General Baron Wahis, a warrior who attained his fame in the few chances Belgium had to fight before the present war—the subjection of the negro tribes in the Belgian Congo, the very heart of Africa.

General Wahis, supreme commander of the army of the little kingdom, won his way into the hearts of his country men by his daring feats during such warfare and his elevation to chief rank and his decorations have been well earned.

He is a man of force and aggressiveness, much the same as his worthy aid, Lieutenant-General Leman, whom he lost by capture when the Germans took Liege. He is sixty years of age and is now on the field directing the operations of the Belgian forces.

No Kaiser Moustaches

Londoners who have been wearing the upturned moustache have had this adornment closely shorn. One of those who followed the Kaiser's style is a well known Parliamentary journalist. His moustache has now nearly disappeared. Indeed, to have anything but a close-cropped military moustache in London nowadays is to be suspected, if not, at least, doubtful origin.

Soldier's Talks Little

A story from Paris shows a rather amusing instance of the discretion of the military authorities. A young woman received a letter, on the envelope of which she recognized the handwriting of her husband who was serving at the front. She eagerly tore open the envelope, only to find that it was empty, but in the corner of the envelope, in a hand quite unfamiliar to her, was written the laconic message, "Madame, your husband is quite well, but he is too communicative."

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Nobody Can Tell When You Darken Grey, Faded Hair With Sage Tea

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural colour and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the grey hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural colour and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

FRENCH PAPER SHOWS KAISER SOUGHT WAR

Clearly Proves That Germany Planned Aggressive Action Against France at First Opportunity

Apologists for the German and Austrian Governments have striven to fasten the responsibility for the war upon other powers. Certain technical details which were published by the French newspaper "Le Temps" go to prove that Germany meant war from the beginning. The course of events was briefly as follows:

July 23, 6 p.m.—The Austrian ultimatum was presented to Servia.

July 25, 6 p.m.—The Servian reply was given and the Austrian Minister quitted Belgrade.

July 28 or 29—Russia ordered a partial mobilization.

August 1—Germany declared war on Russia.

"Le Temps" showed that while these events were in progress and during the course of negotiations represented as showing Germany earnest in the cause of peace, active military preparations were in full swing in Germany.

On July 25—before the reply of Servia to the Austrian ultimatum was due—all leave was stopped for garrisons on the French frontier.

On the evening of the same day all bridges, viaducts and similar works near the Franco-German frontier were placed under military guard.

On the same day all the measures concerning the preparation of fortresses for war were put in application. Undergrowth was removed, wire entanglements set up, advanced batteries set in position, ammunition distributed, and telegraphic communications established. These measures were steadily continued from that date.

On the morning of July 26 orders were given to the railway companies to distribute their engines, rolling stock, etc., with a view to mobilization and to clear the mobilization platforms.

In the evening of July 26 all men on leave were recalled and all troops engaged at the instruction camps or manœuvre grounds returned to barracks.

On July 27 the work of local mobilization and commandeering began. The principal supplies establishments, in particular the most important flour mills, were occupied by troops.

On this same day, in advance of Austria's declaration of war, the German "covering troops" began to take up their position and all frontier roads were barred. "Covering troops" are special corps stationed on the frontier, which are kept unusually strong in peace time, their duty being to repel any early attacks which might break up the railway system and otherwise hinder the concentration of the main body.

On the same day the telegraphic censorship came into force and the German fleet was prepared for service.

On July 28, 29, 30, the "covering troops" were brought up to their full effectiveness by the calling up of reservists, at least 125,000 men being so called up. Horses and motor cars were commandeered, and all along the French frontier, particularly in the neighborhood of Metz, the corps usually stationed at some distance were brought up into close proximity with the frontier.

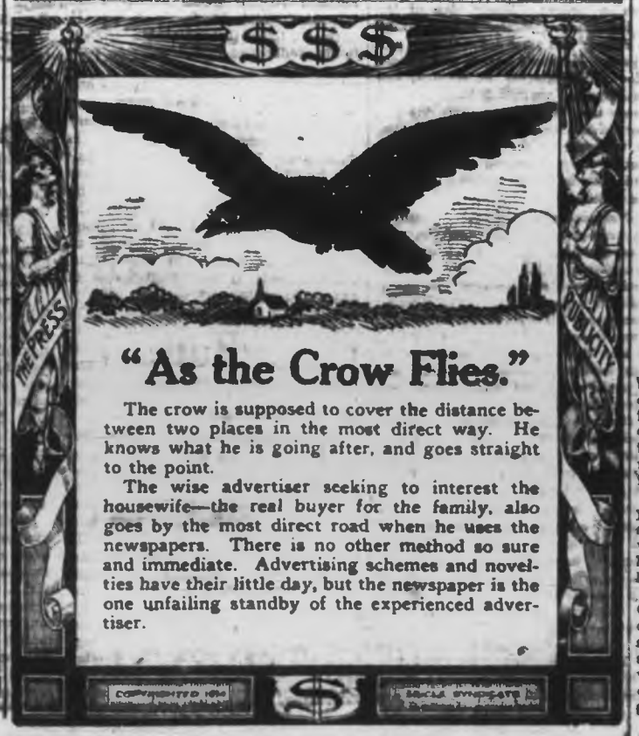
The preparations for the war of the German Government thus date from a very early period in the negotiations which preceded the outbreak of hostilities.

France Guards Field Gun Secret

There is a popular impression that the French army is equipped with field guns of the type made familiar by the Servians and the Boers. This is erroneous. The French Government gun is manufactured at the Government arsenals and under no circumstances can it be purchased. The greatest secrecy surrounds the manufacture of this weapon, and it is a rule to keep the guns well covered with tarpaulins when on parade.

Colonial Nurses Volunteered

Two of the nurses serving with the British Red Cross corps in Belgium are New Zealand ladies who were in London on holiday, and loyally offered their services to the Motherland. Another nurse had unique experience in a plague hospital in India.



"As the Crow Flies."

The crow is supposed to cover the distance between two places in the most direct way. He knows what he is going after, and goes straight to the point.

The wise advertiser seeking to interest the housewife—the real buyer for the family, also goes by the most direct road when he uses the newspapers. There is no other method so sure and immediate. Advertising schemes and novelties have their little day, but the newspaper is the one unfailing standby of the experienced advertiser.

WOMAN'S BEST MEDICINE

Mrs. Kelly Advises all Women to Take "Fruit-a-Tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th. 1913.

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" because they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago, I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollar's worth, but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, that I found only pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the results will be the same as in my own case".

Mrs. W. N. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

THE PRESS BUREAU AND HOW IT WORKS

An Insight into the Difficulty Britain's Official Censors Have to Contend With

With the idea of obviating the necessity of continually worrying the authorities for confirmation or denial of news, and for ensuring a constant stream of official information, the British Government set up a Press Bureau, under the direction of Mr. F. E. Smith, who was later succeeded by Sir Stanley O. Buckmaster, the Solicitor-General.

At this Press Bureau there is accommodation for representatives of the leading newspapers and news agencies of London, the provinces, and foreign countries. Should any journal wish to get any telegram censored before publication, their representative is notified from their office, and the message is immediately taken "upstairs," were there is a staff of naval and military officers engaged in this task.

Directly any news is received at the Admiralty or War Office, this news is duplicated on a machine and brought down to the eager knot of waiting representatives.

Having satisfied himself that everybody is supplied with a copy, and, so as to avoid any possibility of preference, the official gives the signal to "Go," and there is a rush for the telephones, one being allotted to each journal.

This news is taken down in the editorial departments, and, in the case of evening papers, is in the street ten minutes later.

It seems a strange fact to record, but more time is spent in editorial offices in killing news than in making it, and it is remarkable with what persistence rumors crop up and circulate. Sometimes hours are spent in trying to get confirmation of news, and in many cases almost everything but official confirmation can be got, and it is eventually found to be untrue.

In one case a man saw some soldiers carrying wounded men on stretchers from a Red Cross motor to a hospital at one of the great naval centres. He told a friend, who, to make it a bit brighter, thought he might stretch it, as is customary with rumors.

This friend also related what he had heard to somebody else, and eventually the story was told that there had been a big naval engagement, in which British ships had taken part, and that the wounded had been brought home, and that a friend of a friend of his had seen them being carried into a certain hospital. On investigation being made, it was found that they were merely soldiers receiving lessons in and practising first aid.

the first official censor

In another instance, a terrific report was heard in London. The gossippers' tongues got wagging, and very soon a substantial tale was knocked into shape by somebody who had more imagination than brains.

There were hidden allusions to German airships and bombs. Later on somebody related that he had seen a German airship over the West End, and that it had dropped a bomb. It was eventually found to have been an explosion caused by the fusing of some electric cables!

GERMAN SPY SYSTEM LIKE VAST NETWORK

France Dotted With Kaiser's Secret Advisers and Canada Undoubtedly Has Her Share of Them

In view of the reported cases of German espionage in Canada, and of the excitement produced in various centres throughout the Dominion by the movements of supposed spies, it is interesting to know something of the scale upon which the German system of espionage is known to be organized in the theatre of war of Europe.

After the conclusion of the 1866 campaign against Austria, Stieber, Minister of Police in Prussia, was sent on a secret mission to France. His aim and object was the organization within the bounderies of France of a spy system preparatory to the pending war. Stieber, in all, between 1866 and 1869 made four journeys through France, by the end of which time he accomplished far-reaching results.

He strewed France with 20,000 paid German spies, and organized a complete espionage system in France. A peculiar feature of the system instituted by Stieber at that time, and still maintained, were the "fixed posts." The ordinary idea of a spy is one who is sent to travel in a foreign country in some disguise, and who returns to his own country with information thus acquired. But this travelling spy suffers very great disadvantages. He is closely watched, and directly he begins making enquiries as to this, that and the other, the previous suspicions become certainties, and his mission results in failure.

But the spy in the "fixed post" is on an entirely different footing. He attracts no attention, since he lives as an inhabitant of the place, and moreover, plies some trade, which gives him a very good reason for being there. The German spies in France, were, and still doubtless are, of all grades and profession, and of both sexes.

Among other duties assigned to the director of the German Spy Service during the war of 1870 were the following:

(a) Information in regard to the situation, strength and movements of each group of the hostile army.

(b) In regard to the age, character and reputation of all hostile commanders.

(c) In regard to what was going on, and the state of public feeling in the districts the German Army was about to traverse and the resources of those districts.

(d) To procure in each of these regions persons capable of furnishing useful information.

It is known that in spite of French vigilance the Germans have maintained and perhaps elaborated the espionage system established in 1870; that Stieber, still at that date Minister of Police in Germany, was sent through France and subsequently established a branch of the German Secret Police to deal with "political actions." This term it was explained included the destruction of the strategical railways in France on the outbreak of war, so that the French mobilization might be retarded. But this part of the scheme miscarried, thanks to the vigilance of the French Intelligence Agents.

German espionage in France interests itself in everything and everybody possessing in any capacity a particle of authority or celebrity. A specialty is made of the characters, habits, capacities, etc., of individual officers of the French army; but every species of information that can be of any use in a military or political sense comes under the notice of the German spies.

Information as to telegraphs, telephones, railways, highways, bridges, culverts, forges, forage, provision and supplies, shipping, hospitals, barracks accommodation, water supplies, discontented people and citizens susceptible of monetary temptation is particularly sought. According to a French authority, there are at present some 15,000 spies in "fixed posts" in France.

How perfect a spy system has been introduced by the Germans into Canada is not stated, but it is known that there have been German spies in Canada within the past five years, and that some of them have been identified and tracked by the military and police authorities.

For obvious reasons the Canadian military and civil authorities are silent as to what is known officially about German espionage in Canada; but that there are agents of the hostile powers in Canada ready to forward every scrap of important news bearing upon Canada's participation in the present war is admitted.

Owing to the military censorship imposed upon the cable and wireless telegraph services, it is difficult for the German agents in Canada to get their reports across the Atlantic Ocean promptly; but in the absence of a censorship over the land wires and mails, communication of a sort is open through the mails, to neutral countries.

Marching Records

Until a few months ago when a company of the London Rifle Brigade marched to Brighton at a pace averaging slightly over four miles an hour all the way—the world's military marching record was held by the French Foreign Legion, with a march of 50 miles in 15¼ hours. The Rifle Brigade covered 52 miles in 14 hours 23 minutes. Any march of a whole regiment over 30 miles in one day is regarded as remarkable, but the Royal Scots have done 23½ miles in 12 hours and this feat was all the finer through having been accomplished in India. The Potsdam Battalion of Guards once did over 100 miles in three days on grand manœuvres.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lansdowne Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

HOTEL LIFE IN NEW YORK.

Some Rich Folks Pay $45,000 a Year Just For Rooms Alone.

"The number of people who rent apartments in hotels by the year is growing," said a hotel man. "Ordinarily this is rather more expensive than having an apartment in an apartment house, for the rentals run up to big figures.

"The man who paid the biggest rent ever put down for hotel rooms was probably the late John W. Gates. He had sixteen or eighteen rooms on the third floor of the Plaza, and he paid for rent somewhere between $65,000 and $75,000. The biggest rent payer in a New York hotel now, with the possible exception of Mrs. John W. Gates, is Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who is said to pay something like $45,000 for his big apartment in the Vanderbilt hotel. George Gould had a suit at the Plaza for which he paid $38,000, and one of the Guggenheims is said to have paid $45,000 a year for his suit at the St. Regis.

"The Princess Lwoff Parlaghy, who keeps her seven rooms and three baths at the Plaza and occupies them only for six to eight months at a time, pays a rental of $18,000 a year. Cases are numerous where a man or a family rent two or three rooms by the year, and I know of a western mining man who pays $13,000 for a suit at a first-class way hotel which he doesn't occupy more than three months all told out of the twelve. That's his lookout, of course. It is an advantage for a man in business to have a permanent New York address, of course. Living in a hotel gives a family a chance to get away from the servant problem, and that is why it is getting more popular."—New York Times.

He Balked.

"Now that you have agreed to marry me, dearest, I presume I had better ask your father's consent."

"You may if you like, but it isn't at all necessary. I am in the habit of doing exactly as I please."

"Oh, in that case perhaps I'd better consult your father about the advisability of not marrying you then."

USE DIFFERENT RIFLES

British Weapon Much the Shortest—Austrian the Lightest

It is not generally known that each belligerent nation in the field is armed with a different make of rifle. Naturally, experts are not agreed as to which is actually the best, though British experts are inclined to favor the British short Lee-Enfield.

The points of advantage of the British gun are its simple but reliable mechanism, its great strength, lightness, and the fact that its magazine carries ten shots against five in all the other rifles. It is sighted up to 2,000 yards, farther than any existing rifle, the German and Belgian Mauser coming next with 2,187 yards. It fires a bullet weighing 215 grains at a muzzle velocity of 2,060 feet per second, and it is only here that it is beaten by the German weapon, whose lighter bullet of 154 grains leaves the barrel with a velocity of 2,882 feet per second. Whereas the British arm weighs, without bayonet, 8 pounds 10 ounces, the German rifle turns the scale at 9 pounds 1 ounce, the French Lebel of 9 pounds 4 ounces being the heaviest of all rifles. Curiously enough, the Austrian arm, the Mannlicher, is the lightest of military rifles, weighing, without the bayonet, 8 pounds 5 ounces. The Russians favor the Three Line or Nagant rifle, a very old pattern, firing a bullet of 314 grains at the low muzzle velocity of 1,925 feet per second.

The British rifle is shortest of these weapons, measuring, without the bayonet—which, by the way, is 17 inches long—3 feet 8½ inches, whereas those of the other Powers range from 4 feet to 4 feet 4 inches.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Asking Time

A Case of Perseverance

By ELIZABETH GAINES WILCOXSON

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Valor McGehee, the boss of the lighterage business, a tenth owner in the Crown mine and owner of the little sawmill up the creek, was a stalwart person of easy manners and the scars of fair fights.

Every day at the same hour he came sauntering in and straddled the bench not far from the sandwich board where Mrs. Taylor was always busy slicing bread and butter.

Her long, oddly slanting, light gray, wise eyes gave him a look of impersonal friendliness as she nodded good morning and briskly lifted two thick sandwiches to a crockery plate and without losing a motion poured a cup of coffee. These she placed before him.

He breakfasted leisurely. As he ate he talked with the cook.

"D'you know what day this is?" he asked one morning.

She flicked an inquiring glance at him, drove her knife through the loaf and repeated:

"Do I know what day it is? Sure. It's Friday." And she smiled. She had a baffling, secretive smile.

The man smiled, too, watching her face.

"D'you know why I call you Mona Lisa?" he drawled banteringly.

"Friend of yours I remind you of?" she offered, another smile lurking in the corners of her mouth.

"You've guessed it. She had a smile like yours. It was a ticklish proposition, that smile of Mona's. You could never tell whether it was with you or on you. But what particular Friday is this?"

"The day of the month? The 10th."

"Correct," said the man. "Which 10th?"

She caught up a big wooden bowl and began piling up the sandwiches into it with the automatic speed of machinery.

"Two months ago today you arrived to open up this haven for the hungry. That's what happened to turn the 10th into a special red letter day," he explained.

"So I did."

"And I was your first customer," he reminded.

"So you were."

"And I've never learned what your name is," he pursued.

"No!" She favored him with a tail eye glance, her hands flying with the motion of closing two slices of bread and butter over one slice of meat. "After my saying it to you so often—'Mrs. Harry Lane Taylor'—just like that!"

She threw out her hands in a jaunty, spread eagle gesture and whisked around to the stove to replenish the fire and readjust the jars of baking beans.

The man smiled after her. He had said the same thing sixty times—once every day for sixty days.

In a minute she was back at the sandwich board, her naturally pale face fire flushed.

"And I am going to ask you something else."

"Something new?" she queried and laughed. She had a frank, clear laugh at variance with her veiled expression and secretive smile.

"Are you a widow?"

"Seems to me I remember you asked me that once."

"Thirty times," he corrected. "I've a reason for wanting to know."

Her long, slanting gray eyes rested upon him for a moment while she answered with mock seriousness:

"Have you? Well, I'll tell you how to get out of telling if anybody asks you if I'm a widow. You just say you don't know."

He grinned.

"All right for you! I'm going to keep on asking till you answer. I'm coming once an hour and ask till you answer."

"Now, I call that downright persecution," she protested, turning to hang up the sandwich board.

McGehee slipped a coin, the price of his breakfast, under his cup, swung his feet over the bench and stood up.

"I'll be back in an hour," he promised.

More than half an hour after he was gone a stranger entered, letting the door blow backward and charging the room with an icy wind.

He was ragged and dirty and gave evidence not only of poverty, but of dissipation. His hair was mixed with gray, and he wore a sandy mustache and a stubble beard. If ever there was a disreputable character it was he. And yet there was about him something that gave evidence of a better past.

He seemed rigid with cold and stopped a minute as if he needed to relax to breathe, then slipped over the bench, hugging his hands together.

Turning with her customary alertness, Mrs. Taylor mechanically picked up a cup. As her eyes fell upon the newcomer her face whitened, and she went taut from head to foot. She automatically put down the cup. A mirthless smile twisted the man's mouth.

"I've got the money to pay for it," he said.

His voice was a mixture of groveling, pleading and sullen defiance.

"Did you come here on purpose?" she asked savagely, stepping toward him.

"Don't be hard on me, Joyce," he begged conciliatingly. "I own I hadn't ought to have left you when I did, but what else could I do? Under the circumstances I thought folks would do more for you if I was gone than"—

"Under the circumstances I accepted charity until I was able to work. The child was buried by charity. I afterward repaid the money, but it was none the less taking charity."

He picked at the edge of the board in front of him.

"I'm going to turn over a new leaf, Joyce," he whined.

"Not in this shack," she retorted decisively. She was gathering composure after her shaken moment. "I wish lightning had struck you before you found out where I was. I was a fool not to get a legal separation at the time, but I learned you'd been sent to prison, and I knew you were out of the way, and I came off up here without doing it. You were given a ten year term, I heard. What you're doing out in four years I don't know."

He stared at her, and she read his cowering fear with hard eyes.

"This country's big, and I want you to move on. This is my place. It's not big enough for us both. You understand? If you'll keep in mind we're perfect strangers and get out of here on the next boat"—

The fear oozed out of his face. A sort of whimpering hope took its place.

"You are hard, Joyce," he sniveled. "God knows, I've always loved you! I never thought of anybody but you."

"Leave God out of it," ordered the woman contemptuously. "You never thought of anybody but yourself in your life."

"I knew you'd be mad at me, Joyce, as soon as I came in. I'm going right up to the mine and get a job. I'll show you I can work. I won't ever leave you again."

"Oh, yes, you will," she said grimly, "and that right away. Just look at my hands!" she cried suddenly, throwing them out before her with a fierce gesture. They were calloused and rough and stiff. "I suppose you remember what they looked like once!"

The man blinked and licked his lips.

"I remember, Joyce," he said humbly. "I thought maybe you'd teach music. You could play right well."

"I tried it for a year and starved."

"If you'll just give me one more chance"—

"You can have all the chance in the world—away from this place. I shall not molest you, though I suspect you've got no right to your freedom. But you just get this once for all: You are to move on at once. And meanwhile we are strangers. I don't now you. You are"—

McGehee entered, and she turned abruptly and poured a cup of coffee, which with food she placed before the man already seated, naming as she did so the price of the meal.

As he passed, McGehee bestowed upon the presence a glance of curiosity and dislike, then sauntered on to his accustomed place. With deliberation that savored of malice Mrs. Taylor filled a cup and plate and set them before him.

He looked at the food with mingled amusement and protest.

"Do I have to eat every hour?"

"Folks don't come in here except to eat," she pointed out.

"Oh, very well," drawled McGehee and began to stir in his cup.

He stirred slowly and sipped the coffee and nibbled the sandwich, but he did not attempt conversation until the presence at the far end of the room was gone.

As the man went out Valor gave him another scrutiny and looked inquiringly at Mrs. Taylor. It struck him when he came in that she and the man were having words, and the thought came back to him.

But the morning was now growing late, and she was getting ready for the noon rush, and somehow, though he could not have told why, the atmosphere seemed unfit against any more half earnest jesting.

So he woodily formed a big interrogation point in the center of his plate with breadcrumbs, put a coin, the price of the meal, under his cup, swung his legs over the bench and went out.

He did not come back the next hour, nor the next, as he had promised. The camp was suddenly in a turmoil over the disaster at the Crown mine. McGehee, with others, gave the rest of the day to caring for the five men wounded by the explosion and burying the three who were killed.

"He claimed he was an expert powder man, just what they were looking for. He lied. He hadn't been there twenty minutes before—oh, well, he got his too. But that didn't make it any easier for the rest of 'em. It was that fellow who was eating here yesterday morning when I came in for my second breakfast. You remember him?"

He had entirely forgotten his impression of the day before.

"I remember him. It's those he left wounded I pity the most. The others are dead."

"You aren't sick, are you?" he asked, with sudden perplexity.

She shook her head.

"No. Thinking of the mine accident kept me awake. That's all," she said.

Valor McGehee took occasion to observe:

"Since I wasted so much time yesterday I guess I'll just stay right here till you tell me your name and if you are a widow."

Her eyes met his, and never had her smile been so enigmatic.

"There's a time to ask and a time to answer. My name is Joyce, and—I am a widow," she said.

Radway's Ready Relief

Chas. H. Billings, of 344 E. 17th St., writes: "For years I have been suffering from asthma and bronchitis. A week ago I purchased a bottle of Radway's Ready Relief and have taken a teaspoonful in water before retiring each night. The relief I have experienced is marvellous. I most heartily indorse R. R. R."

CURES ASTHMA

The specifics for this disease are the Ready Relief, the Resolvent and Radway's Pills. The Relief must be rubbed on the chest and throat until a burning sensation is produced, and the Pills must be taken frequently, to keep the bowels thoroughly open. The Resolvent must be given at short intervals, in small doses, say, as dessertspoonful on retiring to rest. Give a teaspoonful of the Resolvent whenever a paroxysm occurs. RADWAY & CO.

WHO ARE THE TURCOS?

The use of the word "Turcos" in the war despatches seems to have puzzled not a few people, who apparently think they are an Oriental corps which in some mysterious way was mobilized to assist the allies. The confusion arises from the fact that "Turcos" is a slang name for the Tirailleurs, one of the best of the French Colonial forces. The Tirailleurs, indeed, are a corps of sharpshooters, who have been practically trained from boyhood to fight. The greater proportion of the Turcos are Arabs of pure blood, though the officers and non-commissioned officers are mostly French. Excluding the French element, all the Turcos are Mohammedan, and death has no terrors for them. To die in war is for them to enter the Mussulman Paradise.

In years gone by they fought amongst themselves, tribe against tribe, and at one time used their swords against the French. Ultimately they became French subjects, and are now only too glad to fight the enemies of France. The Turcos are born fighters, possessing extraordinary powers of endurance, for they have been brought up to "rough it" from infancy. Furthermore they are accustomed to living on next to nothing.

Few soldiers carry such a weight on their shoulders as the Turcos. Their knapsacks weigh from 80 pounds to 100 pounds, for, in addition to his own kit, each man carries some portion of the camp equipment. Then there is, of course, the rifle.

With their black, straight hair, surmounted by a red fez, and their black beards, and wearing a sort of blouse or loose tunic with baggy Moorish trousers, strong boots of a greyish leather, and cloth ankle-bands, they make one of the most picturesque corps at present engaged in the war.

HOW LANCERS FIGHT

One Experience With Them Enough—Like Devils, Says German Dragoon

A wounded German dragoon gave a picturesque description at the Waterloo Station in London of the British cavalry charge by which he was unhorsed. His language showed that he was still vividly impressed by what happened when the Scots greys charged his regiment.

"Mein Gott, it is hell let loose when your English lancers charge," he said, "and I will never face them again, never again!

"We were in open country with a clump of hills before us, and it was as we neared them that a troop of howling, yelling devils with lances, but no jackets or hats, came racing round a hill and then straight for us like what you call a blood typhoon!

"Never before have I seen anything like them in our army or in my sleep. Your artillery and your infantry, yes; they are like ourselves, and we can fight them; but these lancers—ach Himmel!

"We were four to one of them, but in a flash, puff, they were on us and through us. And there were not more than fifty! Every one of them speared a man—I got this in the shoulder—and some of our horses went over.

"Before we could reform or get ready they came dashing back, yelling like furies, and they were through us again. Ach; it awful, horrible; and then, by Gott, they turn about and do it again. This time they stayed with us longer, and then indeed we thought that all the devils of hell were let loose. Every man of us was now unhorsed, and yet I doubt if these lancers lost more than ten. I will never meet them again, please you!"

Two Narrow Escapes.

Not since a baby fell out of a New York city elevated car window and landed uninjured in an astonished citizen's arms has a more curious accident happened than one that occurred recently on a Ninth avenue elevated train. A violent lurch at a curve pitched a trainman from the car to the street below, but he alighted on an upholstered couch that happened to be on the sidewalk. The man's life was saved by the remarkable coincidence.

Simeon the Second.

King Ferdinand is said to be making not only a change of religion, but a change of name to Simeon II., when finally he assumes the title of emperor of Bulgaria. The first Simeon is still the national hero, and his reign, which began in 893, was Bulgaria's "golden age," when, as Gibbon states, she took a place among the great powers of Europe.—Chicago News.

One Result of The War Is Certain

CANADA must Manufacture for part of the World now involved in War.

Europe can no longer supply the Export Markets.

If you are proud of Canada, you want to see our Factories hum, our Stores alive with Business, and our Offices plied with Orders.

Let Peterborough enlist in this movement to boom Canadian Made Goods.

Let Peterborough Manufacturers get on the job, and let us read, mark and hear more of "Made in Peterborough" Goods.

How many good-going factories in Peterborough never tell our own Citizens what they manufacture.

Much of the European trade that was exported into Canada should now become our own. Who but our own Manufacturers should now make the Foodstuffs, the Hosiery, the Underwear, the Toys, and much of the Chemicals, Dye-stuffs, and other things Germany has supplied us?

Advertising will soon reveal which of our industrial enterprises are most worthy and best prepared to profit by Europe's need. The Firms first to advertise for this business will be the first to profit.

IRON HEEL IN ANTWERP.

Civic Employes Have To Swear Allegiance To Kaiser.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—"The municipal employes of Antwerp have had to swear allegiance to the German Empire," says The Evening News correspondent at Bergen-op-Zoom, Holland, in a despatch dated Monday. The message continues:

"The policemen were allowed to retain their arms. The police have been ordered to remove the Belgian flag from all houses. The usual regulations enforced at Liege, Verviers and other Belgian towns are being introduced in Antwerp. These rules include the obligation to light the houses at night and to leave the doors open. The imperial standard must be saluted when the army is passing through the streets and soldiers have been seen to strike off with their sabres the hats of persons who did not give such a salute.

Already thousands of fugitives are returning to Antwerp, and shops are very slowly reopening. Many more thousands, however, are hesitating, apprehensive that the Germans' present friendly conduct might change later on.

"Up to this time no war contribution has been exacted, but the town is to supply all requisitioned wares free. For instance, two tons of potatoes were to be provided yesterday. All bakers, butchers, grocery and provision dealers not reopening their shops within five days are threatened with stringent measures.

"The Germans say that there are 125,000 of their men in Antwerp, but this figure seems to be exaggerated. Several thousand of the Landwehr troops and marines will probably remain as a garrison.

"Negotiations for the surrender of the city last Friday threatened to collapse because the Germans insisted upon having the signature of the Belgian commander. They eventually accepted that of another officer, M. Weerbrouck.."

TO RESPECT NEUTRALITY.

Germany Will Not Ignore Status of the River Scheldt.

BERLIN, Oct. 13. — (Via The Hague and London.) — The Government of the Netherlands has again been officially notified by the German Government that the status of the River Scheldt, the waterway which leads to Antwerp, will be regarded by Germany as heretofore. There will be no question of forcing the Scheldt or using it for purposes not sanctioned in treaties with the Netherlands.

The notification to this effect was sent yesterday morning.

One check for $250 was given by the duke, another for the same amount by the duchess, and one for $100 by Princess Patricia. Maurice Goor, the Belgian consul-general, was also a guest at the luncheon.

Italy Lodges Protest.

MALTA, Oct. 14.—(Via London.)—The Austro-German efforts to cause trouble for Italy in Tripoli have met with failure. In Eritrea, where an active anti-Italian propaganda has been fomented among the natives by notorious Austrian agent Schwimmer Abyssinia has been induced to buy arms and ammunition in considerable quantities. It is understood that Abyssinia encouraged an attack on an Italian colony.

The Italian Government has sent troops to Massowah and lodged a formal protest with Vienna.

MOTHER! IF CHILD'S TONGUE IS COATED

A laxative to-day saves a sick child to-morrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is oftimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

DRASTIC STEP PLANNED.

Order To Austrian Police May Decide Italy's Stand.

ROME, Oct. 14. — (Via Paris.)— The Messagero yesterday published what it claims is a private circular sent by Prince Von Hohenlohe-Schillingfurst, Governor of Trieste, to all the heads of the police in the Italian provinces under Austria. The circular says that in case of war with Italy all male Italian subjects between the ages of eighteen and forty years shall be arrested and sent under close escort to fortresses; that those above forty, and also women and children, shall be ordered to leave the country within 12 hours, and that those suspected of espionage or of carrying on anti-Austrian propaganda shall be summarily tried and, if found guilty, shot. Italians subjects of Austria are also included in the list of proscribed persons. They will be arrested immediately and sent to fortresses. Those from eighteen to forty years of age will be enlisted and sent to the regiments serving in Bohemia.

British Air Raid Costly.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—A letter received in Amsterdam from Dusseldorf, says The Daily Chronicle's Amsterdam correspondent, declares that in the recent British aeroplane raid on Dusseldorf, besides a Zeppelin airship being destroyed, four persons were killed and many wounded.

Two Views of the Self Made Man.

A pathologist of standing inveighs against the "self made man" in terms that will be surprising to many. "The self made man," he says, "is often in the process of degeneration, and the first evidence of degeneracy in a family is the selfishness and meanness of the cunning, avarice and moral guile by which the self made man succeeds in amassing a fortune for his still more degenerate children to spend in gratifying their selfish desires."

There is another side to the matter, and Thoreau saw it when he said that the man who had acquired wealth would insist on having his sons educated, and then he would become the real founder of a family.—Springfield Republican.

Windsor Castle Kitchens.

The kitchens at Windsor castle are perfect in all their arrangements. The chief kitchen is a fine lofty room lined with white tiles. It contains a marvelous collection of copper saucepans that vary in size from the dimensions of a tub down to that of a tiny breakfast cup. Another feature is the huge steel table used for serving. It is brilliantly polished and has hollow legs through which steam passes upward, heating the whole table. Another apartment is called the "green room," and is set apart for fruit used at dessert, and there is also a room assigned to the "table deckers," whose sole duty it is to attend to the floral decorations of the royal dinner table.—London Express.

Where Dr. Johnson Worked.

Dr. Johnson's house in Gough square, London, is a noble old piece of Queen Anne architecture, and in stripping the walls of their surfeit of paper and canvas and stuff the restorers came across several quaint old cupboards, and these have all been preserved with their original handles and mountings and add enormously to the domestic verisimilitude of the place. At the top may be seen the spacious garret, where the doctor kept his six clerks slaving away at the dictionary which first brought him fame; and alongside the house and the caretaker's lodge is the tiny garden which Carlyle in his essay on Johnson describes as rather larger than a bedquilt.

Saint Simon's Poverty.

St. Simon, the celebrated French author who wrote "The Reorganization of European Society," was twice driven by want to attempt his own life, and, although he died a natural death in the end, it was among the most lamentable surroundings. "For fifteen days," he says, writing to a friend just before the end came, "I have lived upon bread and water, without a fire. I have even sold my clothes."

Feminine Courage.

"Don't you think women are naturally more courageous than men?" challenged the champion of her sex.

"Of course," said the horrid cynic. "No man would ever dare to get off a car the way the average woman does."—New York Globe.

Worse Yet.

"There's nothing so hard to ride as a young broncho," said the westerner.

"Oh, I don't know!" replied the man from back east. "Did you ever try the water wagon?"—Toledo Blade.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Consumption.

Consumption is taken from other people who have it and is not simply "caused by a cold," although a cold may make it easier to take the disease. The matter coughed up and sneezed out by people who have the disease is full of living germs of consumption. Many tiny droplets of this matter float around in the air for awhile and if breathed into the lungs of others may start the disease, or this matter coughed up and spit out may become dried and stirred up as dust. Such dust breathed into the lungs may start another case of consumption. Delicate, weakened and debilitated people are more likely to catch the disease than strong, healthy people.

Avoid breathing dusty air. It may contain particles of dried tubercular spit. Avoid careless coughers and spitters. They may have consumption and not know it. Avoid close, foul air at all times. Such air in a crowded room is likely to contain germs of consumption. Avoid flies. They eat tubercular spit and may deposit it on your food. Above all things, avoid getting "run down." Keep well, keep healthy, keep stout.

Russian Spies Work Well.

Referring to the recent unfavorable news from the East Prussian frontier, a German officer talking with a war correspondent, said:

"Now we know how the Russians were able to escape our movements. The espionage service which they have organized is enormous. The Russians are informed of everything that is happening in the day time by spies who light fires that produce smoke of various colors as suits their purpose. At night they signal with lights. Mirrors are also used for signalling when the sun permits.

"Once we saw a procession of Russians carrying a sacred picture, which picture proved to be painted on a mirror. The Russians always escaped when we had succeeded in getting them on dangerous ground."

THIN FOLKS WHO WOULD BE FAT

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

"I'd certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds and stay that way," declares every excessively thin man or woman. Such result is not impossible, despite past failures. Thin people are victims of mal-nutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, all the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal amount of fat the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can best be accomplished by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a scientific combination of six of the best strength-giving, fat-producing elements known to the medical profession. Taken with meals, it mixes with the food and turns the sugars and starches into rich, ripe nourishment for the tissues and blood and its rapid effect is remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by good druggists every where and every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in the treatment of nervous indigestion and general stomach disorders, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh producing effect, be used by those who are not willing to increase their weight ten pounds or more.

The Rabbit's Danger Signal.

So long as it sits still the ordinary rabbit is almost indistinguishable in a field of bracken, stubble or dry grass, but as soon as it begins to run toward its burrow the white patch on its tail betrays it. This white patch, which at first seems like a failure of adaptation, has its special function—it acts as a danger signal to the young rabbits and shows them the way by which they can escape from the threatened danger.—London Mail.

It Is Rmoured in London That Portugal Has Already Declared War on Germany

A Big Battle Is Imminent For The Possession Of Channel Ports

THE PRTUGUESE CABINET TO VOTE FOR A COMPLETE MOBILIZATION

Reported at German Residents Are Fleeing Country Throu Expectation of Alignment With the Allies --Offal Paris Statement Shows Advancement of the AlliesNow Occupy Ypres.

ALLIES ARE NOW IN OSTEND

Special Ca to The Examiner:

PAS, October 14. — Success of the French wing opposeto the German encircling movement in Belgium is stated in this afternoon's three o'clock communio.

Thown of Ypres has been occupied by the Franco-Britiforces.

T communique was as follows,—"As far as the Oise our left, the situation is without change. In the ntre we are progressing in the region of Berry-au-E."

n the Belgium field of operations around Ghent, the have been several engagements, particularly on Ocber 12 and 13, at night, and on the last named date thBritish and French troops occupied Ypres."

PORTUGAL MAY STRIP FOR ACTION

LONDON, October 14. — Portugal's entry into the ropean war is believed imminent. Special news gency despatches to-day stated that the Portuguese abinet had decided to summon the congress to meet n Friday with the purpose of voting for complete mobilization. It was reported that the German minister at Lisbon had already left for Madrid, and that the German residents anticipating Portugal's alignment with the allies, were fleeing from the country.

RUSSIANS OUT OF LEMBERG?

THE HAGUE, October 14.—The Austrian legation announce this afternoon the receipt of advices from Vienna stating that the Russian forces had evacuated the stronghold of Lemberg, following heavy losses in battle.

NONE OF ALLIES NOW IN OSTEND

LONDON, October 14. — The Daily Sketch's Ostend correspondent says,—"Only a small Belgian force and almost no English troops remain in Ostend. Five refugee boats left here yesterday. A number of transports which were in the harbour, have also put to sea."

WAS NARROW ESCAPE FOR PARISIANS

LONDON, October 14.—Referring to Sunday's bomb dropping, a coresponden writes,—

"Not only would there have been a frightful loss of life among non-combatants, but one of the most noted structures in France would have been destroyed had any of these bombs exploded upon the roof of Notre Dame. No structure in Europe is better known to Americans than this Cathedral, which dates from an early period in the history of France as a nation, and which has figured conspicuously in its annals.

"Paris is certain the Germans had arranged to destroy this church while it was filled with innocent worshippers. The airmen selected the hour when the mass which draws the greatest attendance was in progress, a service which is attended usually by notable men and women of Paris. Always at this service the building is filled to its capacity.

"Most of the foreigners in Paris, and particularly the American Catholics who may be temporarily in the city, try to attend the last high mass in the Cathedral. Undoubtedly many Americans were in the building when the raid was made upon it.

"It is not believed that the explosive used in the bombs dropped on Sunday were as powerful as that in the bombs of two weeks ago. Those bombs did much greater damage where they fell, and each one of them exploded. Had that explosive been used to-day the feeling is general that Notre Dame would now be in ruins, with thousands of innocent worshippers buried in the debris."

ATTACK ON CHURCHILL

WOULD REMOVE HIM

LONDON, Oct. 14—There has been further evidence of growing dissatisfaction with the British Navy's inability to do more in the war. Richard Jebb, the author, who is a military critic, and well-known in Canada, calls for the removal of Winston Churchill, declaring he has in his succession of offices displayed unvarying incapacity in handling large affairs, accusing him of responsibility for the failure to implement the naval agreement of 1909. Jebb particularly denounces as "stupid bombast," his remark about "rats in the hole," disquieting to every Briton who can take a sober view of the moral and material strength of the enemy. "In his present position, Churchill is giving more anxiety to his own countrymen than to the enemy. He ought to be replaced at once either by a professional officer, corresponding to Kitchener, or else by a politician who would know how to keep his place and leave the strategical conduct of the war to professionals."

Waiting For Word From Col. Sam Hughes

Orders For Recruiting of Second Contingent Not Yet Issued

OTTAWA, Oct. 13.— Orders for the recruiting of the second expeditionary force will not likely be issued until Col. Hughes, Minister of Militia, has arrived in England and has consulted with the British War Office as to the character of the force. This accounts for the fact that no word has been received from the British authorities as to the nature of the force desired.

Has Accepted the Offer.

The War Office, though, has accepted the offer of the Government of a second army of 22,000 men. All that remains now is to decide upon the character of the force. It is understood that one of the chief objects of Col. Hughes' visit to the Old Land was to consult the British War Office as to the details of the second army. He sailed last Wednesday, and it is expected he will land in England to-morrow or Thursday.

Could Get Army in West.

It will be, in that case, the end of the week at least before any definite word can be received from England and before the call to arms can be issued. From the offers which are pouring into headquarters, it will be easy enough to raise the second contingent. Westerners are particularly anxious to get to the front ,and there would be no trouble recruiting the whole of the second Army in the West. As it is expected there will be a large proportion of cavalry the Western rough-riders and frontiersmen will get their chance.

Many Difficulties Eliminated.

In the meantime the Department of Militia is not idle, and the thousand and one details necessary to the raising, equipping and mobilizing of a force are being attended to so that when orders are issued the whole machinery of the Department can start smoothly. As this force will be recruited by divisional centres some of the difficulties connected with the first army will be eliminated.

Wind shields to be worn on the shoulders of ocupants of automobiles that lack such devices have been patented.

GOODS IN ENG. NOW AS CHEAP AS BEFORE WAR

Arthur Hutchings Writes to Friend Saying Country Is Calm and Real Recruiting Has Just Begun

GOV'T AFTER "PRICE HOGS"

Arthur Hutchings, a former employee of the C.G.E., writing to his friend, Jos. Thomas, from Bedford, England, refers to war conditions at home as follows:

"I think England will pull through all right; we seem to be holding them. They have all their men in the field now, and we haven't got many there yet. My eldest brother is in France, and he tells us that it will be a long war. I suppose you have heard of those towns being burned in Belgium. They don't care for anything. We have no fear of them ever getting across here. Everything is quite calm. In fact you wouldn't know we were at war, if it were not for so many papers about. Just outside Bedford there are 10,000 soldiers from Leeds with all the big guns, and we have over 20,000 Scotchmen here. England has not hardly started yet. Everyone seems to want to go to the front. All day yesterday there were trains full of German prisoners going through this town. They are sending them over to France. We shall win all right, as Britain means it. The war office asked for 500,000 men, and they have got more than they wanted. They wouldn't have me, as I have a diseased bone in my right leg. I don't feel anything wrong, but they are so strict. When the war first started, all the stores put up the prices of food, but the government made them pull them down, so everything is as cheap now as before the war. I will send you some more papers in a little while. Remember me to all you know out there. Hoping this finds you all well. We shall pull through all right.

Faithfully yours,
Arthur Hutchings.

A Bouquet For Miss Telgmann

Talented Local Violinist's Work Receives High Praise From the Kingston Daily Whig

That Miss Mignon Telgmann's talent on the violin is appreciated by audiences and critics in other cities as well as in Peterborough, is shown by the report in the Kingston Daily Whig of a concert given in that city by the Ladies' Musical Club. In referring to Miss Telgmann's violin solo the Kingston newspaper says:

"The violin sola, the Joachim-Liszt Hungarian Rhapsodie, No. 2, was played by Miss Mignon Telgmann. The talented young artist covered herself with glory in this extremely difficult composition. She is unquestionably a very brilliant technical performer and full mistress in all the details of manipulating the queen of instruments. Her tone is full and round, her bowing broad and free, and she herself appears transformed as she plays. At times she produced from her beautiful Lupot violin tones resembling in quality and mellowness, those of a cella, a viola, and a flute, even in her highest notes being sure and flawless She was greeted, and deservingly so, with a storm of applause, to which she gracefully responded by giving with a velvet tone a beautiful lullaby entitled, "Seven O'clock."

Miss Telgmann was accompanied by the talented young pianiste, Miss Ruth Walker, and it is not saying too much that this young lady, judging from her work last evening, has a brilliant future before her.

German Spy Jumps From Moving Train

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 14—An unknown German spy arrested near the government wireless station at Pt. Burwell, with many photos and plans of the harbour and district in his pockets, escaped from his guard while being taken to Woodstock jail by jumping from the train when it was going full speed and has not been seen since.

FOODSTUFFS IN AUSTRIA HIGHER THAN ELSEWHERE

Bread Loaves Only Two-thirds Ordinary Size and Quality Has Deteriorated

CATTLE PRICES HIGH

LONDON Oct. 13.— Advices from Vienna state that although the import duties on foodstuffs have been suspended by the Austrian Government, prices thus far have shown no sign of decreasing. On the contrary, in some instances prices are still advancing. The cost of food in Austria is much higher than it is in Germany.

The newspapers openly accuse the Austrian landed proprietors of endeavouring to make the utmost of the war situation, regardless of the needs of the public. Much irritation is exhibited toward the authorities because they did not earlier take measures to prevent an utterly unjustifiable increase in the prices for cattle.

It is now declared that the setting of maximum prices, coupled with measures compelling the farmers to bring their grain to market instead of hoarding it, is the only awy to prevent a further advance in the already exorbitant food prices. The women of Vienna are protesting azainst the practice adopted by the bakers of making bread loaves of only two-thirds the ordinary size. It is also charged that the quality of white bread has deteriorated greatly, evidently because of the admixture of barley meal.

The manufacturers of Austria are beginning to complain of the shortage of raw material and are demanding that the government suspend the import duties on raw iron, machinery and tools and also demand the maximum prices set for timber, petroleum and wool and a reduction made in the tax on industrial enterprises.

The papers of Vienna publish laudatory obituaries of King Charles of Roumania. They express the conviction that Roumania will not be induced by Russian intrigues to engage in a policy of adventure, which they assert not only would compromise her vital interests, but lead eventually to her destruction.

THE ANGEL FLOWER IS AGAIN IN BLOOM

The angel's trumpet, or angel flower, in the grounds of St. John's Rectory, is sharing in the vegetative exuberance of the prolongation of summer into October. The angel's trumpet, or angel flower, (the scientific name is not known to the Examiner) is in this case, a sort of herbaceous shrub, with thick foliage, and bears a flower of large size, ecru white, and shaped like a trumpet. The flower is about eight inches in length, and the diameter of the bell, five to seven inches. Although the plant in Canon Davidson's grounds has blodfined once this season it is now again in almost full bloom. Some of the trumpet-shaped flowers are fully expanded and upon the whole plant are fifty or more blossoms ready to "blow" their trumpet. It is a beautiful plant and somewhat of a rarity, though it does not seem to be difficult of successful growth.

ALLIES HAVE CHOSEN GROUND FOR BATTLE

But Censorship Shuts Out Least Detail of the Important Movements of the Armies in Neighbourhood of the Channel Ports---Germans Continue to Advance.

MAY BE FOUGHT ON FLAT LAND

Special Cable to The Examiner:

DUNKIRK, France, October 14.—The German advance continues. Bicycle and cavalry skirmishers have been encountered less than a score of miles from the Channel seaports. The hurried massing of the allies' forces indicates the near approach of a titantic conflict. The lines of the allies and the Germans have already tentatively felt out each other, but as yet no general engagement has been fought. The casualties will be terrible in this impending battle. The country is monotonously flat, mostly without cover. The censorship prohibits the transmission of even approximate location of battle ground chosen by the allies, at which they will attempt to force back the invaders. But it can be stated that entrenchments have already been made ready for this conflict. Realizing the immense importance of cavalry in a battle of this character, special reinforcements of a large detachment of this branch have been received.

JAPANESE BOMBARDMENT SATURDAY

TOKIO, Japan, October 14.—It is understood that the bombardment of Tsing-Tau by the Japanese, will begin on Saturday, October 17th.

MAETERLINCK PRAISES BRITAIN

LONDON, October 13.—At Lord Haldane's meeting at Newcastle yesterday, great enthusiasm was aroused by the presence of Maurice Maeterlinck, the great Belgian dramatist, who in the course of a speech said,—

"It is a pitiful story I have to relate—the story of a little kingdom which kept its pledge and has nearly died for it". This was interrupted by shouts of 'Never! Never!' Continuing, Mr. Maeterlinck said,—"Belgium was established as a buffer state against two great contending powers to prevent the passage of one army into the territory of another. Its neutrality was guaranteed by the greatest power in the world—England. We have kept our pledge loyally. Belgium has been called England's foster-child, and England has certainly been a good foster mother. My countrymen realize that England's word is her bond and that England will preserve Belgian independence."

RUMOUR SAYS PORTUGAL IS IN IT

LONDON, Octoben 14.—A news agency despatch, from Madrid, which is without official confirmation, says it is reported from Lisbon that Portugal has already declared war on Germany.

APPROACHING COLD MAY CAUSE LULL IN THE WAR

LONDON, Oct. 12—The opening of the eleventh week of the war finds Germany more than holding all the advantages she has gained in both the western and eastern theatres of war. The German still hold the strong positions to which they retired along the Aisne, and the capture of Antwerp has greatly strengthened their lines in both Belgium and France.

If the Germans are able to transport their heavy guns to Verdun and reduce the works there and to take Ostend the completion of both these objective enterprises would probably find winter prevailing. Then there would undoubtedly be a lull until spring. There seems to be a strong belief, however, that with the possession of a coast city, such as Ostend, Germany would try to launch an immediate attack against England, but such reports are not causing any alarm on this side of the channel.

Antwerp does not give Germany the sea outlet she desires. In orde; to reach the North Sea the Scheldt river must be used and the transportation of warships through that sea would be a violation of Dutch neutrality.

NOT DOWN-HEARTED.

They are not down-hearted in Merrie England, though the war game is strenuous. We have been reading that in Great Britain they are taking things coolly, calmly and with self-confidence, and doing business "as usual.". The drapery business anyway is not "down-hearted." Women and men and children must dress and the trade is determined that they shall have the means. The "Drapers' Record," of London, said to have the greatest circulation of any trade paper in the world, has issued a special autumn number consisting of 226 pages, of which 80 are special. The fact that such a splendid special issue of the "Drapers' Record" is printed in the time of the greatest war in history, by a nation up to the eyes in war, is a proof not only of enterprise but of the fact that the British trade is carrying on business as energetically as in the piping times of peace and stands ready, as heretofore, to supply the needs of the world, promptly and efficiently. Canada can well, as it is doing to a large degree, take a leaf out of John Bull's book. We should continue doing business "as usual," and even aim to do more. We should take courage from the attitude of our British brethren and join with heart and mind in their answer to the query, "Are we down-hearted?"—"No."

BUY CANADIAN GOODS.

It seems inevitable that for a considerable time at least, a great many foreign goods, such as could be made in Canada, will be bought in Canada. This, however, should not be done in any case where Canadian productions or good made in Canada, are available. It is stated by the Dominion Department of Trade and Commerce, that some companies and municipalities send orders abroad for goods that could be got at home. Even our own School Board, sent abroad for heating boilers for our new schools. This is a double sin — against the principle of patriotic patronage of home industry, and a sin against our working men, who by home purchase would be given employment, and helped to pay the taxes increased by money spent abroad that should have been kept at home. The excuse may be given that the goods or articles ordered are a little cheaper, if not a little better. There may be something in this; but this condition will always obtain if the patriotism of Canadians does not come to the rescue by providing that Canadian industries got the whole of Canada's orders and thus be helped to better production. While a little more might be paid in rare instances, this would be offset by the general advantage the whole country would get from expansion of our industrial operations, the incidental increase of employment and the enlarged purchasing power of the people. We can't, however, force people to do the right thing. If we can't induce everybody to patronize the business establishments of their home city, and thus help their neighbours whom they meet every day, how can we expect such persons to prefer the patriotic way of refusing to purchase foreign goods made by foreigners they do not know. We can only urge every Canadian to be a good citizen, to be a patriot by helping his country at large; to be a good neighbour by patronizing his neighbour; to be a good Christian by doing to others as he would that others do to him. This course would not only be right, but it would pay. A well-known business man said the other day that if the people of Canada in their business and private purchasing would give preference to goods made in Canada, when there was opportunity for choice between them and foreign goods, so great an impulse and stimulus would be given to Canadian industries of all kinds that with a few months unemployment would be greatly decreased and the idle man would be a rarity.

BRITAIN AND BELGIUM.

Some United States journals are inclined to blame Great Britain for the loss of Antwerp and for her failure to come to the rescue of Belgium. They claim also that Britain's contribution to the war has been trivial compared with what others have done. Great Britain went in the war to vindicate the neutrality of Belgium, and to see that her territory was not outraged by Germany with impunity. To do this effectively and permanently the plans of Germany had to be frustrated. Britain's plans had to be laid to meet the eventualities of a long war, against a power that has been preparing for forty years for a struggle like the present. Britain's first step was to bottle up the German fleet, to leave the sea paths free for the movement of troops by Britain and France. But for this command of the sea Britain could not have landed troops in France as she has done with such good results. Great Britain's first expeditionary force, though small in number, saved the situation. But for its plucky work in holding back the German army of invasion, Paris would have fallen and France overrun by the Germans and even Britain threatened more gravely than she is now. A relieving force sent to Belgium to relieve Antwerp would have invited the loss of all that has been gained by a two-months' hard fighting. The lines of the Allied forces would have been so weakened then that any relief that might be given Belgium would only have been temporary. Great Britain has sent as many troops as she had ready. While she entered the war with her great navy in the most perfect state of preparation, she was not so fortunate with her army. What she had was good—of the best—witness Mons and Charleroi. More troops might have been put in the field, but Kitchener was too wise to send absolutely raw troops to be slaughtered. He might have done this if he had had the German indifference to the slaughter of men, the sacrifice of human life. Great Britain is in this war to avenge the wrongs of Belgium. She is straining every nerve to this end. She must be the judge of the best way to accomplish this end. Kitchener is not the man to seek a temporary advantage, at the risk of permanent success. He sees, as every one who thinks can see, that this war will last a long time. Germany which has made a business of military preparation, has an immense strength in fighting men, and munitions of war. To overcome this will require time and patient preparation. The resources which Britain has been amassing in the arts of peace, while Germany was working for war, will in the end enable her to strike the last of a long series of blows against the military system of Germany. Germany must be first driven out of France and Belgium, and defeated on its own soil. This will take time and Britain is doing her full share. She is fighting solely in Belgium's interest and in the cause of humanity. Meantime Britain is doing her best to alleviate Belgium's sufferings. She is welcoming Belgian refugees to her hospitable shores in thousands. Belgium's sufferings are incidental; individually the Belgians are suffering no more than the French who are in the cursed area of actual hostilities.

THE RIGHT KIND OF COUNTRY.

The war gifts of Canada and its provinces to great Britain prove it to be the right kind of a country, either to live in or be associated with.

Its gifts were as follows:

Dominion—1,000,000 bags of flour.
Ontario—250,000 bags of flour.
Quebec—4,000,000 pounds of cheese.
Nova Scotia—500,000 tons of coal.
Prince Edward Island—100,000 bushels of oats.
New Brunswick—100,000 bushels of potatoes.
Manitoba—50,00 bags of flour.
British Columbia—1,200,000 cans of salmon.
Saskatchewan—1,500 horses.

What could be more useful at any time either in time of war or peace than flour, cheese, coal, oats, potatoes, salmon or horses? A country that produces these in abundance is a good country to live in, and at a time of stress like the present it is well that the surplus is available for Great Britain. That surplus would not have been available but for Great Britain's navy, and the necessity for it were never more apparent than now.—London Advertiser.

COMMERCIAL COMMANDMENTS.

Many of us can remember, when we were struggling with the humanities at school being struck with the aptness of saying, "fas est et ab hoste doceri"—it is permissible to learn something from an enemy. We can in these latter days learn something even from our bitterest and most relentless enemy—Germany. There has recently been published, what purports to be the German commercial ten commandments, and we, especially in Canada, can adapt them advantageously to our Canadian conditions; and this decalogue, is as follows:

"Your money should profit no one but Germans.
"Never allow foreign eatables to be served at your table.
"Never profane German factories by using foreign machinery.
"Use only German clothes for your dress and German hats for your head.
"In all expenses keep in mind the interests of your own compatriots.
"If you do not like German malt coffee, drink coffee from German colonies.
"Write on German paper with a German pen and use German blotting paper.
"Never forget that when you buy a foreign article your own country is the poorer.
"German flour, German fruit and German beer alone give your body the true German energy.
"Let not foreign flattery distract you from these precepts; and be firmly convinced, whatever others say, that German products are the only worthy of citizens of the German fatherland."

Substitute "Canadian" for "German" and you here habe the spirit of the duty of Canadians, especially at this time.

WORLD'S WHEAT SUPPLY AND THE OPPORTUNITY OF CANADIAN FARMERS

Public officials have been exhorting the Canadian farmer to sow more wheat this year. But it is doubtful if, even yet, the North American wheat-producer realizes fully what an opportunity confronts him. The farmer, of all men, should not share the exaggerated idea of the importance of Canada and the United States as contributors to the world's food supply, which leads many persons to feel that there can be little pinch or shortage as long as the production of these countries continues unhampered. It is rather the actual predominance of Europe as a food producer that renders the situation serious, and places a premium on American supplies. The following facts are significant.

Europe leads the continents in annual wheat production and, normally, raises twice as much as North America, her nearest competitor. She grew over one-half of the record-breaking world's wheat crop of 1913, doubling the combined contribution of Canada, United States and Mexico. European nations now in arms alone grew 42 per cent. of the total yield, while the whole of North America produced only slightly over 25 per cent.

On the reasonable supposition that shortage of labour, poor tillage, decreased acreage and other adverse conditions will reduce the 1914 wheat crops of European combatants by one third, over half of North America's entire yield would be required to meet the deficiency.

Europe probably carried over into 1914 a fair surplus from her banner wheat crop of 1913. But what of this year's production? Russia's rosiest prospects before the war never promised within 150,000,000 bushels of last year's total, and the war must have caused further huge decreases. Hungary and Italy, great wheat nations, will show a combined shortage of 75,000,000 bushels, while India and Canada fell behind by 50,000,000 and 70,000,000 bushels respectively, as compared with the 1913 harvest. How will the deficiency be met? Canada's exportable surplus has been cut in two. The bumper crop of the United States will hardly offset the shortage of Russia alone. Consumption must decrease somewhat, but can hardly parallel the sudden shrinkage in production in Canada, United States, India, Australia and Argentine will find every bushel of their 1914 crop required in Europe next year to meet the shortage of Russia, France, Germany, Italy and Austria-Hungary. If war is prolonged for six months, hindering seeding operations in 1915, the demand will be even more insistent in the spring and summer of 1916.

The moral to the Canadian farmer is simple. Grow wheat. Sow every available acre to a crop of which the world will stand badly in need in the coming months.

The following table shows the respective contributions of the ten leading wheat-producing nations to the record crop of 1913. The countries marked with an asterisk are either directly or indirectly engaged in the war.

United States	763,380,000 bush.
*India	364,000,000 bush.
*France	319,373,000 bush.
*Canada	231,717,000 bush.
*Austria-Hungary	226,311,000 bush.
Italy	214,407,000 bush.
*Russia in Asia	188,864,000 bush.
*Germany	171,077,000 bush.
Argentine	144,000,000 bush.

Heroism of Coldstream Guards

A graphic story of the narrow escape from annihilation of a battalion of Coldstream Guards, who, by their brave resistance, saved a division of British troops, was told at Middlesbro' yesterday by Corporal Scholes, Private White, and Private Shaw, of the Third Battalion Coldstream Guards. The three men, having been wounded, reached Hemington Hospital, near Middlesbro' on Wednesday night.

It was during the allies long retreat from the north against overwhelming forces of the enemy that the action took place. The Third Coldstreamers, stranded in the town of Landrecies, were told off to guard the rear of a British division, which was attempting to escape from a German enveloping movement. It was a position of grave importance.

Private White explained that word was received from a French officer that a body of French troops might be expected during the night. "True enough," said White, "troops did come, but they were not French. They were German. The British troop was resting when we first perceived them in the distance, but anticipating French, we were not duly alarmed.

"A reconnoitering party went forward, and the officer in command issued a challenge to the advancing men, who were dressed in French uniforms. An answer was returned in French, but the interpreter with the British did not like the accent, and asked the officer to give the challenge once more. This the officer did. He was immediately knocked off his feet by the foremost 'Frenchman' into a pond.

A Memorable Engagement.

"It was now evident that a trap had been prepared for the British, and the order was given for three rounds of rapid firing. The Germans at once replied with big guns, which they had placed in position, and the engagement was now in full swing. The British stretched themselves across the road which lay in the path of the oncoming forces, and, supported by four machine guns, with rows of infantry lying, kneeling and standing behind, poured a deadly fire into the enemy.

"The Germans," continued White, 'were in tremendous numbers, easily sufficient to swamp us. We had chosen the position very carefully, and our flanks were protected by barbed wire defences. The enemy suffered fearful losses along that narrow strip of road, but they never relaxed their efforts to take the place by storm. So fierce was the fighting that the Germans did manage to capture one of our machine guns, but they did not keep it long—we soon had it back.

"Rush after rush came during the night, but our lads held fast. The German big guns were very troublesome. One of them was a particular dancer, and the order came to one of the machine gunners to try to scrap it. 'Yes, sir, what range?' 'Four hundred yards,' came the reply.

"The gunner adapted his machine, and let drive. One shot was sufficient. It got the German gun right in the breech, and it did not bark again that night."

The engagement proceeded all night. A huge German force was held up by a comparative handful of British soldiers, while the latter's main body was able to extricate itself from a most precarious position.

"We saved a whole division that night," proudly remarked White. "As it was, the battalion lost the very small number of 150 men during the terrible fight, while the Germans were piled in heaps before them. A Medical Corps man said that the German losses were about 1,500."—London Daily News.

CAIN

"Cain," a poem on the war, by Betty D. Thornley, daughter of Mrs. May R. Thornley, of this city, appears in The Canada Monthly for October. In the few days since the publication of the magazine it has come to be regarded as one of the most remarkable poems published since the war. Its gripping force has caused it to be compared to "The Day," probably the most inspiring production since the war.—London Advertiser.

The poem follows:

There's many a man in flaring hell
For a single twist o' the knife;
There's many a rotting prison-corpse
That keeps his cell for life;
But there's none will stand
By the man who planned
With a Pit-perverted skill
To mint the world with a German die—
At the price of a million-kill!

It isn't the Uhlan battle-thirst,
It isn't the Belgian rage,
It isn't the English greed for land
That mires the reeking stage.
But the monstrous plan of a Single Man
With a world-engulfing will,
Who calls to the vultures out o' north
To feast on a million-kill.

The Kaiser sits in an armoured train,
Far back from the battle-grip.
It's the Leipzig boy and the Paris boy
Who crouch where the bullets nip.
It's the Antwerp man
Who is ending his span
With a blood-choked prayer, if he will,
As he lies by the side of the Liverpool lad
In the Kaiser's million-kill.

The Kaiser's mother—rest her soul!
She hides her face in heaven.
She prays that she were the Yorkshire maid,
Or the widowed wife in Devon.
They mourn their dead
With proud-held head,
Whose souls are in God's will;
She mourns for the thrice-damned soul of him
Who planned the million-kill!

SOMETHING AKIN TO THE NATIVE PROPHET

Mr. J. E. Philops, of Chicago, was in town this week on a short visit. OLIVER TWIST.

The H. Webb Chamberlain Company gave a splendid interpretation of the dramatization of Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist," at the Grand Opera House last night. There was a large audience and the company won fresh laurels for itself. Mr. Chamberlain was splendidly cast as "Fagin," while Miss Millen's presentation of the difficult role of "Nancy" left nothing to be desired. The offering tonight will be "The Death Chant."

RED UNSIGHTLY PIMPLES ON FACE

Itching and Burning. Scratching Irritated. Disfigured for a Time. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Pimples Disappeared.

1750 Winnipeg St., Regina, Sask.—"I was troubled with itching pimples on my face for over three years. They were red and unsightly. They caused itching and burning and I used to scratch and irritate them. The breaking out disfigured me for a time.

"I tried many well-advertised treatments, such as ——— Prescription, ———, ———, etc., but without success. A short time ago I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in a local paper and after I had tried a free sample I could see a remarkable improvement. I washed my face with the Soap and then applied the Ointment two or three times a day. After using more Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment all the pimples completely disappeared." A generation of mothers has found no soap so well suited for cleansing and purifying the skin and hair of infants and children as Cuticura Soap. Its absolute purity and refreshing fragrance alone are enough to recommend it above ordinary skin soaps, but there are added to these qualities delicate yet effective emollient properties, derived from Cuticura Ointment, which render it most valuable in overcoming a tendency to distressing eruptions and promoting a normal condition of skin and hair health. Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. For liberal free sample of each, with 32-p. book, send post-card to "Cuticura, Dept. D, Boston, U. S. A."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

England In Flood Tide of War Fever, One Vast Drill Ground

Steady Enlistment Swells the New Army Now Under Training in All Parts of the Country---Britain Short of Uniforms, Blankets and Other Supplies.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—(By letter to the New York Herald.)—How difficult it is to write of the war without dealing in superlatives The greatest war the world has ever known! The vastest armies ever assembled! The most terrific battles ever fought! The most shocking atrocities ever committed on a battlefield! The most splendid valour known since the days of Thermopylae!

It is common to record operations along a battle front extending a hundred miles. It astonishes no one to read of an Austrian army of 600,000 opposing a Russian army of 800,000. The declaration of war on July 28 by Austria against Servia has set the sowing of the dragon's teeth until today the sun never sets on the sound of guns. This is literally true. The British boast for years has been that the sun never sets on the British emblem. So, too, the sun never sets on British strife.

They have been at it in South Africa, in East Africa, in West Africa, on the land. They have been at it in Zanibar, the Bay of Bengal, in New Guinea, and in countless places in the Pacific. 'Way over in Tsingtao Briton's allies, the Japanese, are closing in on the German colonies, and on the fighting line in France before this reaches for publication will be the regular troops from India, supplemented by the native troops, a gallant, swarthy array, 70,000 in all.

Battles are raging along the Adriatic and in the Western Balkans, where the Servian and Montenegrins are forcing the fighting on Austria, doing their best to tear to pieces what Mr. Lloyd George the other day described as a "ramshackle empire." In Galicia a great Russian army is preparing to give what the Russian General Staff declares will be the finishing stroke to Austrian military strength. Further north along the easternmost shores of the Baltic another great Russian arm is at work in sufficient force to occupy the attention of eight or ten German army corps. Nearer home little Belgium, devastated but not prostrate, is the scene of a dozen battles a day. Nearer home still the great English fleet waits night and day in the North Sea eager to give battle and test the Kaiser's naval strength.

London Lives in War Atmosphere.

The most extravagant imagination never depicted such a world wide war. July as one turns sick from the horrors of the battlefield one is prone to even dismissed from consideration of the problem of bringing about peace [illegible] come the end.

The greatest of wars has made the gayest and proudest of capitals the busiest and dullest of cities. Berlin has felt the shock hardest and Paris next. Here in London it has been felt hard enough. Trains bearing the wounded arrive daily. The hospitals of England, Scotland and Ireland are crowded with the maimed in battle. Memorial services are held almost daily for some gallant officer who went smiling to the front only a few weeks ago. London is living in an atmosphere of war.

The Mississippi expands as the waters of the Platte, the Illinois, the Missouri, the Ohio and the Red rivers are emptied into its rushing waters. England, so far as war preparations are concerned, is now the Mississippi in flood time. England is bank full and overflowing toward this common goal.

The enlistments during the last week have been unprecedented in number. More young men have offered their services to the King than the machinery of the War Office can take care of. England since the war has raised one army of 500,000 men, and already has another army of 500,000 men in process of digestion, so to speak. Caught unprepared for war she did not have blankets enough for the men it was necessary to put in the field. A million blankets is rather a large order, and yet that is the order which had been given England to fill. Most of this order will be filled by English mills. Part of it will be filled by the English people, tens of thousands of whom in two days this week have taken the blankets from their own beds and sent them forward for the soldiers.

Need One Million Uniforms.

Uniforms are needed for a million men. These uniforms are being turned out now at the rate of more than 20,000 a day. Shoes are needed, and heavy, well constructed shoes at that. The government is about to place an order for 1,000,000 pairs.

All the resources of the empire are being taxed to get for the soldiers warm underclothing and other heavy garments, because the fighting is going to continue all winter long, possibly in the upland country of France, Germany, Austria and Russia. These men have also got to be armed. They must not only have rifles, but horses, artillery, automobile transports, motorcycle machine guns, aeroplanes and the thousand and one things that go to make up a complete army must be provided for each brigade before it is ready to go to the front.

England has never before made a complete automobile engine. Most of the parts heretofore came from Germany. But England has got to make them now. England is one great armury and drill ground.

I shall conclude this letter with an account of an interview I had with a member of the Cabinet to-day. I was introduced to him by an English barrister well known in America. I found him a tall, stalwart young man with a clear cut face. His whole appearance suggested a young English clergyman of the athletic school, a man who could play a good bat at cricket or ride in the front at the hunt.

Can Learn From America.

"We have much to learn from America," he said. "I have been reading what you had to go through in the civil war. I have been reading how you had to create a great industry before you could even clothe your soldiers. I have been reading how both North and South had to create enormous armies and then go on creating more enormous armies, and how they had to arm, train, clothes and sustain them, each part of the country within its own borders.

"As you say, a million men were lost in that conflict. You had several millions of men under arms at one time. It may be that what we have to go through is a much greater task than that. We are straining every effort to put a million men in the field. It is certainly the idea of the government that we should have that force operating as one command in Europe. We shall keep that million of men in the field, when once the first million goes forward to fight. Our losses have been very heavy. But, don't you see, no matter how heavy the losses, no matter how great the sacrifice, no matter what the backset, all Englishmen feel that this is a fight for national existence and national security, and it must go forward until that national existence is secure and national peace is made certain beyond a doubt."

I had come to ask this Cabinet Minister about the possibility of peace proposals being considered, but I left without asking the question.

Col. Hughes May Lose Auto.

OTTAWA, Oct. 14.—Before sailing for England, it is said, Col. Sam Hughes had his automobile shipped to Ostend, so as to facilitate his movements in France when he went over to see war at close range. In view of recent happenings his friends say that it will be a matter of interest to see who enjoys the use of the automobile, the Canadian Minister of Militia, or some of Kaiser William's officers.

The Annual Meeting of The Protestant Home Closes Splendid Year

Establishment Free From Debt—Thirty-eight Inmates During the Year—Applicants for the Winter — Secretary's Detailed Report.

OFFICERS ELECTED

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Protestant Home was held on Tuesday afternoon, October 13th, in the Board Room of the Home, with the President, Mrs. Roger in the chair. In addition to the Directors were present, His Worship the Mayor, Rev. Canon Davidson, who conducted the devotional exercises, Mrs. Wm. Kemp, Miss Martha Dickson, Miss Flora Davidson and Miss Drummond.

Most encouraging reports of the year's work were presented by the secretary and treasurer, also by the superintendent, Miss Lancaster, and by Mr Downing, janitor and gardener.

The treasurer's report showed the financial standing of the Home to be in a satisfactory condition as the Board had been able to close their year free from debt.

His Worship the Mayor, on behalf of the City, moved a hearty vote of thanks to the Directors for the efficient manner in which their work had been carried on. This was seconded by Rev. Canon Davidson, in a few very kind remarks.

Directors Elected.

The following directors were elected for a term of three years.

Mrs. Birdsall, Mrs. Suckling, Mr. J A. Aylmer, Mr. E. F. Mason.

Officers For Year.

At the close of the general meeting the officers for the ensuing year were appointed

President—Mrs. Walter Roger.
1st Vice-Pres.—Miss Nicholls.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Birdsall
3rd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Hazlett.
Secretary—Miss Flora Davidson.
Assistant—Miss Jean A. Neill.
Treasurer—Miss Sarah G. Robinson
Assistant Treasurer — Mrs. Robt. Neill.

Secretary's Report.

The secretary's report was as follows:

The year 1913-14 has been a peaceful and successful one for the Home and its inmates, for during it much has been done by the Directors, the Lady Superintendent, and kind friends to make it in every sense a haven of rest for the old people.

The number of inmates for the year have been thirty-eight. Of these four have died and eight have been discharged for various reasons, leaving twenty-seven still in the Home, fifteen men and twelve women. Judging from the number of new applicants the Home will be fully occupied during the winter.

Owing to the untiring efforts of Miss Lancaster and her assistants the work of the Home itself has gone on smoothly.

Twenty-five meetings of the Board of Directors have been held, and one general meeting of the Board called when the needed changes in the rules and regulations were discussed.

Services have been held every Sunday by the clergy of the city, which have been helpful to and appreciated by the inmates as very few of them are able to go to the services in the churches. We wish to express our thanks to Dr. F. L. Robinson for providing conveyances for the clergy.

Talents Appreciated.

In October 1913 the Young People' Societies of the city were asked to provide some form of entertainment for the inmates during the long winter months. We expected that our suggestion would be accepted, but the enthusiasm and efficiency with which they met it, and the resulting enjoyable evenings have reached far beyond our expectations. The piano donated to the Home by them in December has been a source of great pleasure to the old people and will be a lasting tribute of their kindness and good wishes.

A jam and linen shower was held in November, which proved a great success. Owing to the generosity of the friends who attended 160 bottles of jam and pickles found their way to the preserve cupboard, and the linen room was also helpfully replenished.

To the ladies of St. John's church we are indebted for the pleasure they gave the old people by their invitation to attend their production of the Land of Golden Dreams, and the carriages sent to convey those who were able to accept their kind invitation

Dr. Helen McMurchy paid a visit of inspection to the Home, which was followed by a most favourable report from the inspector, Dr. Bruce Smith. He suggested that in addition to the precautions already taken in case of fire by the directors, fire escapes be added to the Home. His suggestion has been acted upon and the fire escapes are now in the course of erection.

Christmas Day, in spite of the memories of bereavements and losses it awakened in the thoughts of the old people, was made bright by the kindness and generous donations of their friends. On Christmas eve they were given a Christmas tree during the evening Mr. Devey and his boys made the Home ring with Christmas cheer and good fellowship, that went straight to the hearts of all those present.

Auto Society Helped.

In the early summer the Automobile Society of Peterborough gave the old people a most enjoyable outing; so many of them it was an initial experience and was doubly appreciated. They were driven around for an hour or so, then given ice cream and taken home tired but very happy.

Miss Lancaster has proved herself worth to the directors and inmates of the Home by another year of faithful service. Her garden was again a source of great pleasure to every one in connection with the Home. In the early spring we joined the Horticultural Society and the bulbs sent by them have helped to make the garden more beautiful than ever.

Owing to the interest taken in the Home by Mr. Downing the manager, trees have been planted and a root-house built in which vegetables for winter use have already been stored. His kindness to the sick is noteworthy and is very much appreciated.

The Board of Directors wish to take this opportunity to thank all those who have taken an active interest in the work of the Home. To the Misses Nicholls for taking charge of the Home while Miss Lancaster was absent on her vacation; to Mr. Fowler for so kindly offering to keep in repair the eyeglasses of the inmates, to the doctors for their courteous attention at all times; to the thoughtful friends who have acted as auditors; and to the press of the city, who have published all necessary matter in the running of the Home, and donated copies of their papers.

All of which is respectfully submitted

Improvements Being Made

Many Stoney Lake Cottagers Having Work Done on Their Homes This Fall

The water in Stoney Lake is very low at present, but we have been so accustomed to low water of late that water at the normal height would be a surprise. Rocks are showing up where their presence was never suspected. Now is the time for "Bessie Butler" to get busy with her buoys.

The present would be an opportune time for cottagers to build permanent wharves. The islands of Stoney Lake are lacking in that very necessary convenience, a convenience to the boats as well as to the cottagers themselves, but many people are thoughtless in that respect, and expect the boat hands to land against any odd thing.

A number of improvements have been made this fall. At Juniper Island a permanent walk of stone, capped with cement, has been made from the lower end of the pavilion along the shore to connect with one of the floating wharves.

Mr. W. H. Hamilton has constructed an ice-house on his island.

Mr. R. G. Sturgeon has added another storey to the rear of his cottage.

Mr. Harvey has built a permanent wharf at his cottage in Bryson's Bay.

Mr. Robert Neil has built a garage at Bryson's Landing.

Contractor Avotte has built a cottage at Hiawatha Park for Mr. Nobbs of Toronto.

Mr. H. G. Fitzgerald's cottage at Sandy Point has been reshingled.

A new steel bridge, with cement piers, has been placed over Indian River at Gilchrist Bay on the road to Crowe's Landing.

Mr. Wilson of Rochester has built a new cottage on the Dummer shore, just south of McCracken's Landing.

Mr. H. P. Lindsay has had a stone wall constructed on his island, to the rear of Controller McCarthy, in preparation for the erection of a cottage next spring.

Mr. Ellis has had a railing added to the verandah of his cottage.

Interest is Increasing

Large Attendance at Last Night's Revival Meeting

There was a splendid attendance at the revival services at St. James' Methodist church last night. The singing was of an unusually good character, and the interest in the meetings continues to increase. Last night Evangelist Crossley spoke on the relation of the Gospel to Heaven. Tonight his subject will be "The unpardonable sin." Rev. R. J. Peever was present last evening, as was also Mr. H. Dafoe of Manilla, and Mr. R. Hargreaves of Actinolite.

Death of An Old Pioneer

FRASERVILLE, Oct. 13 — This week we record the death of Mr. John Smyth, who passed away on Sunday, Oct. 4th, at the age of 76 at the home of Mrs. David Smyth, in the Township of Cavan, of which the deceased was a long and highly respected resident. As a citizen he lived a quiet life and performed his daily duty as becometh a true patriot, and endeavoured to "do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with his God."

In religion, he was a Methodist; in fact a pioneer layman in this community, he being one of the oldest Trustees of the Fraserville Methodist church, in which he always gave evidence of love and devotion to God and the Church of his choice, until about two years ago, when he found it necessary, owing to the loss of an arm, to sell his farm, and go to live with his brother, Rev. Wm. Smyth of Bridgeburg, who is the only surviving member of the old Smyth family.

Mr. Smyth, as was his custom, was visiting his many friends in this community, when he contracted a severe cold, and after an illness of about a week, he quietly and peacefully entered into the rest that remaineth to the people of God."

The service was held on Tuesday, Oct. 6th, at the home of Mrs. David Smyth, Cavan, and was conducted by Rev. G. W. Wickett, assisted by Rev. W. Buchanan of Millbrook, an old friend of years standing, Rev. J. N. Clarry, B.A., and Rev. H. P. Crossley, Evangelist of St. James' Church, Peterborough.

The funeral was largely attended, and gave evidence of the esteem and worth the people placed on the life and character of a good man.

The remains were interred in the family plot in the cemetery at Fraserville to "await the resurrection of the just."

No Difference To This Firm

Mr. F. A. Sharpe, the representative of the Russell Motor Car Co., West Toronto, was in the City today and, speaking of the concern, he said they were building and delivering cars as per schedule as before the war was thought of. From early inquiry and sales, the management feels that this Canadian car will meet with fair and impartial consideration from the buyers.

The Company have put out three very instructive books this year, one under the title "Why?" explaining their reasons for building the celebrated Knight Motor; another under the title of "The Material, The Works and the Car," explains in detail the building of an automobile as in the Russell plant, taking you through the different departments from the foundry and machine shop to the final finishing department, where the car, after receiving every assembly, becomes a finished automobile. It also contains pictures of parts and departments. The other book, entitled "The Pride of Ownership," has the reproduction of hundreds of letters from Russell owners, from Coast to Coast, telling of their satisfaction with this Canadian car, and the service back of the Russell.

All the prospective automobile buyers should read these three books, all being very instructive and complete.

Dispersion of Belgians Like Migration of The Israelites and Tartans

London, Oct. 13—During the past months I have grown accustomed to the sight of streams of refugees trailing over all the roads of Belgium, until the queer illusion has grown up that they are always the same refugees, they look pitiably alike," says the Rotterdam correspondent of the Times in a dispatch to his paper. He continues:

"But all the scenes on all the roads of Belgium for weeks past must be melted together and multiplied twenty-fold to resemble the spectacle on the roads to Holland during the last two days. Hardly any migration in the history of the Israelites, Kalmucks or Tartars can have equalled it. The two relieving features were the extreme kindness shown to refugees by people at the frontier, and the beautiful weather. These things reduced the mortality to a minimum.

"Besides the Ghent exodus by the roads to Holland I saw a crowd estimated at 150,000 blocking the ferry and pontoon at Antwerp on their way to get train to Saint Nicholas and Ghent.

"The German guns were so placed that their shells reached every portion of the city during during the last stage of the bombardment, the chief characteristic of which was the haphazard way in which the fire was aimed in all directions. No less wonderful than the scene on the roads was the scene on the river, where all day Thursday craft of every description were slipping down stream, loaded with human freight. At dusk, by the light of burning oil tanks the civic guard sank six lighters so as to block the entrance to the inner basin of the docks. In the city the Belgians started many fires purposely, burning materials likely to be serviceable to the enemy.

"Some of the heaviest firing I heard during the entire bombardment of Antwerp occurred on Thursday night. Equally terrible was that on Friday morning. The Belgians continued blowing up forts and build ings likely to be serviceable to the enemy. A heavy pall of smoke obscured the sky. I left Antwerp on Friday. The report that the City has been burned is untrue.

"The German entry into Antwerp was quite profitless as no stores or munitions of any importance were left there. The Belgian forces, whose movements it is not permitted to disclose, are still full of fight. In fact, the German entry into Antwerp may prove disadvantageous to the Germans.

City's Machine Has Arrived

Hoist Which Had Been Under Construction in Belleville and is to be Used in Outfall Sewer Construction

The hoist, which is the main part of the ditching machine that is to be used in the construction of the long heralded outfall sewer, arrived in Peterborough this morning. During the past several weeks it has been under construction in Belleville, but it has been completed and is now in the city at the disposal of the City Engineer. The arrival of the machine ensures an early commencement of the outfall sewer and the fulfillment of a promise that the industrial depression will be still further relieved in this city.

To-morrow, or very soon after, the work of assembling the whole machine will be commenced, and things are shaping up in a way that would indicate that the work of digging the sewer into Monaghan will be commenced in a very few days, possibly about the middle of next week.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

IT should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many good watches are allowed to go without cleaning and oiling, and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become cut and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to put it in proper condition again. The old saying "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

UNIQUE MEETING HELD BY MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

Regular Monthly Assembly on Thanksgiving Day Was Transferred to Rev. Jas. Rollins' Summer Cottage on the Shore of Sturgeon Lake Address by Rev. F. J. Sawers.

The Ministerial Association holds its monthly meeting on the second Monday of each month. Monday is the one day in seven on which the ministers try to take some rest. This month the second Monday came on Thanksgiving day and the ministers decided to hold their conference at the summer home of the president, Rev. James Rollins. Between six and seven o'clock on Monday morning several autos left the city with loads of Anglican, Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist ministers. About ten o'clock they drew up on the wooded bank of Sturgeon Lake, where among the pines, the modest but beautiful cottage, "Rolson Lodge" was opened to them. During the day a lengthy meeting of the Association was held around the crackling fire in the great stone fireplace. The essayist of the day was Rev. F. J. Sawers of St. Luke's church, who for over an hour delighted his hearers as he told of his summer spent in the old land, and particularly of the special course he had taken at Oxford University. The entire meeting was conducted exactly as the usual gathering in the Y.M.C.A. parlours, but after the business of the day the company lingered together. The meals were prepared by certain of the members who had education along other than theological lines. Five bedrooms were fully occupied by the party, and altogether the day and evening was one long to be remembered.

One, who is not a clergyman, was privileged to be present at the evening hour during "family worship" after tea. The main light of the room was shed by the huge fire. The Bible was in the hands of a Presbyterian, while the prayer for "those at home," for "our churches," for "the nation and her army" and for "all who feel their need of God, and those who feel no need," was led by a Methodist, while the ministers of four denominations joined in the Lord's prayer reminded one of the lines of Hugh Stowell's beautiful hymn:

"Heaven comes down our souls to greet,
And glory crowns the mercy seat."

Men who meet each other as these brethren did, far away from the scenes of their usual duties—out in the autumn wood and "near to Nature's heart," cannot be vitally separated.

No member of any Peterborough congregation could be otherwise than glad that such a gathering was possible at any time and especially on the day set apart for national thanksgiving.

The party returned to the city on Tuesday.

Big Contract Has Started

Fifty Italian labourers from Montreal invaded Belleville this morning to reinforce the number already in that City. All of them were scheduled to start this morning on the work of laying 80-pound rails from Belleville to Lindsay.

It is understood that during the coming winter the whole G. T. R. line between Belleville and Lindsay will be re-tracked and the work of laying the steel commenced this morning. This will result in great improvement in that section of the Grand Trunk Railway's System, and will be very good news to Peterborough people who will use the new line extensively. The distance to be covered by the construction gang this winter, if the programme is completed, will be approximately 100 miles.

Took Names For Second Contingent

The regular weekly drill of the 57th Regiment took place per schedule last night, and several companies were given throrough instruction in the handling of the rifles, and the performing of rifle drills. The others were put through the usual army formations and all made a good showing.

Major Walker, Adjutant, announced that in a very short time a second contingent would in all probability be organized, and authorized the captains of companies to take the names of all in their respective companies who wished to volunteer for service abroad in the second Canadian contingent.

Sound lumber, 25 years old, has been proved by a German government test to be materially stronger than new stock.

WILL ASK THE FIRE CHIEFS TO HOLD NEXT CONVENTION HERE

Chief Howard and Ald. Green, Chairman of Fire, Water and Light Committee Are In Stratford

CHIEF HOWARD'S ADDRESS

Alderman Green and Fire Chief Howard left for Stratford this morning to attend the Annual Convention of the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs which is to be held in that city during the next three days.

There is some talk of changing the convention to one with Dominion-wide scope, and whether or not that is the case Chief Howard and Ald. Green will extend the convention an invitation to meet in Peterborough next year.

Chief Howard will give a paper on "The Advisability of Asking Legislation Requiring that all Municipalities Conform to One Standard of Hose Thread," at to-morrow's session of the convention. His paper will be as follows:

Gentlemen,—The topic allotted to me by your Board of Directors for consideration at this meeting, namely, "The advisability of asking legislation requiring that all municipalities conform to one standard of hose thread," is a subject for much thought and consideration. I am free to confess that until quite lately I was somewhat opposed to seeking legislation for this purpose, and it seems strange that this particular topic that I have been so opposed to should be assigned to me for this meeting. It is fortunate, however, that you have coupled with me so able a gentleman to deal with the subject as Mr. Norman E. Wilson, Inspector, Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association, Toronto, and knowing Mr. Wilson as I do, I am quite satisfied he will deal with the subject in every detail, and therefore I shall spare your time and patience by complying with the request, that my paper be very short, as suggested by the President and Secretary.

I have gathered all the available data upon the subject that was procurable, and after reading the opinions of very eminent engineers, who have given some time and thought to this question, I am personally converted to the scheme and suggestion of applying to the Government for legislation to help us out of the confused predicament the numerous municipalities find themselves placed in with regard to their adoption of bastard threads for fire hose couplings and fire hydrants.

The American Waterworks Association, in the year 1912, undertook what might be termed "taking a census" of all the threads in use in every city and town in the United States and the Dominion of Canada. There were 3,133 cities and towns of importance heard from. This matter was placed in the hands of a committee, comprised of the most eminent and skilful engineers on the Continent of America and after labouring with the subject for about a year and a half, spending enormous sums of money and considerable valuable time, their report was presented, and I am happy to say adopted by that association, setting the standard at 7½ threads to the inch. In reading the report of that committee and the lengthy discussions that preceded the adoption of the report, we learn that 7½ threads to the inch is the most practicable thread that could be adopted. It will be interesting to you to know why 7½ threads to the inch is better than any other size of thread. One very good argument in favour of its adoption is that a 60 degree V-shaped thread 7½ to the inch can be very easily interchanged with either a 7 or 8 thread to the inch. Thus it will be observed that should legislation be enacted requiring all municipalities to adopt a standard thread fewer municipalities would be inconvenienced by the adoption of such legislation as the cities or towns having either a 7 or 8 thread to the inch would not be compelled to change the threads already in service, but would simply adopt the standard thread in purchasing new hydrants and fire hose couplings.

Another argument in favour of the adoption of this particular type of thread is that in case careless or incompetent workmen should be employed in cutting threads for fire department appliances, such carelessness or incompetency, unless too brazen, would not interfere with the quick or perfect connection to any serious degree.

Arguments are brought to bear condemning the 7½ threads to the inch by persons like myself, who had not taken the time to investigate the benefits to be derived by the adoption of a standard thread. One argument put forth against its adoption is that 7½ is too many, and consequently too slow and couplings cannot be made fast enough for efficient fire service. When the real facts of the matter are brought forward it is found that the 7½ thread is just as quick as the 4 thread, as in the case of 4 threads to the inch there is sometimes a delay in starting to make the connections, and, strange to say, quite contrary to what might seem common-sense, the coarser thread is more likely to get crossed than the thread we propose to adopt. This is a point that is likely to bring out a heated discussion from members of the association who are in a position to contradict this statement. However, if I am wrong in this assertion I will cheerfully submit to stand corrected.

Another argument brought to bear against the adoption of a standard thread is the cost of making the change from a bastard thread to that of the standard adopted, and it was just here that I was so bitterly opposed to the adoption of a standard thread. I considered at one time, before going into details, that the cost and inconvenience to municipalities that would be compelled to make the change was altogether too great and consequently would inflict a terrible hardship, more especially to the smaller municipalities. But we learn from studying this matter more fully that the cost is not as great as at first would seem. For instance, a small municipality having 300 fire hydrants and 5,000 feet of fire hose, the change can be made for a few hundred dollars, instead of several thousands of dollars as at first would seem from a glance. I am in possession of facts and figures relating to this particular part of the subject, which I do not purpose wearying you with, but will be pleased to furnish any member of this association with any available data on my return home.

Another argument that has been used against the adoption of a standard thread is that it would be a dangerous practise and that the fire department would be crippled for a considerable length of time while the necessary changes were being made. Now, gentlemen, all these objections have been overcome, and the necessary provision is made to eliminate the possibility of any risk or danger from this particular source.

Some people may question the advisability of seeking the proposed legislation from the point of view that there is nothing to be gained in so far as their particular municipality is concerned, and may ask the question why our city or town is inflicted with such useless and nonsensical legislation. I fact I have a letter from one of our brother chiefs who is a member of this association, who bitterly opposes the adoption of the proposed act simply because the municipality he represents is not going to be benefited to any appreciable degree as far as he can see. This thought may linger in the minds of a number of chiefs, but I believe as officials holding the positions of trust and responsibility which we occupy we should be broad enough and have enough of a Christian spirit to submit to some slight sacrifice when the benefits to be derived from the interchanging of fire-fighting appliances is so great and means so much to so many thousands of people in the land we live in. I feel confident that if the members of this association will think wide enough and be broad enough to let their charity in thought extend to the length and breadth of the Dominion of Canada, they will in a short time become married to the proposal. Having the good fortune to be personally and intimately acquainted with every Fire Chief in the Province of Ontario, I am free to admit that each and every one of you are equally as charitable as I am. Then looking at the question from a different standpoint, and when we consider that the fire losses in the Dominion of Canada for the past ten years have been greater than any other country in the world, is behooves us, as advisers and officials of responsibility, to use our utmost endeavour in every conceivable manner to lessen this terrible and abominable fire waste which is impoverishing our land from year to year.

In conclusion I wish to most earnestly and very respectfully urge the members of this association to be exceptionally cautious in presenting our claims in this matter to the Government. It would be well at this time to take a leaf from the book of the railway employees, who, a number of years ago, sought to obtain legislation for the adoption of safety appliances in connection with the operation of steam railways. It is quite fresh in the memory of all of us the introduction of the air brake that has been the means of saving many thousands of lives and long after the safety car coupling and air brake was past the experimental stage, a committee of railway employees asking for Government legislation for the adoption of these wonderful safety appliances requested only that the Act become operative in ten years from the date of their petition. I merely throw this out as a hint so that in the event of a committee being appointed to wait upon Parliament that committee will have in mind that the petitioning of hasty legislation might be detrimental to the interests we represent.

CARE FOR YOUR SCREENS.

Don't take out the window screens too early. The flies will be with us for awhile longer; but when you do take them down be sure and brush them and dust them and put them away so that they will be good for another season.

"After the dust is removed, with a thin flat brush apply turpentine all over the wire netting both sides, and the frame as well. Apply this sparingly so as not to clog the meshes.

The screens can be stored away anywhere in this condition and in the spring need only to be wiped free of accumulated dust before going back on the windows.

War Prices In Canada

The effects of two months of the world's war on Canadian prices are summed up in a rise of the Labour Department's index number from 136.5 as calculated at the end of July to 140.7 as worked out at the end of September. These numbers are percentages of the general level of prices in the decade 1890-1899, and are based on quotations from 272 articles scattered over the whole field of production and consumption.

Most of the rise took place during the three weeks following the declaration of war, in fact the last half of September saw general steadiness and even a tendency to decline in important articles like grains and cattle.

Though a rise of 5 points in the departmental index number is very marked it is not without precedent. Canadian prices during the trade boom of 1912 went up at intervals with almost equal rapidity, and the readjustment of prices after the close of 1911 sent the index number up 4 points in a single month.

It has also to be remembered that several articles which have contributed very materially to sending the index number up during the last month are not of first importance in consumption. For example, cream of tartar, antimony and quicksilver have all more than doubled, while a number of other secondary commodities such as cobalt, solder, sulphur, etc., went up by 20, 30 and 40 per cent. Tin and rubber went up very rapidly in August, but declined drastically just as fast in September. Flour is perhaps the most important food stuff that has shown a tendency to decline. A full analysis of the prices movement by groups of commodities is appearing in the current issue of the Labour Gazette.

Retail prices, of which the Department is receiving quotations for over 50 articles in every town of 10,000 and upwards in Canada, have been on the whole steady in September after the first upward movement following the war. In flour and sugar further advances occurred in most of the cities, but in other commodities prices were quiet. Rents were downward in some fifteen localities throughout the Dominion.

It is interesting to note that in England the Economist's index number went up 10 per cent. during August, the rise being greatest in food-stuffs and least in materials, while the Statist's index number went up from 82 at the end of July to 90 at the end of August. Bradstreet's index number for the United States went up 2 per cent. in August, but has ceased to rise slightly since. The crest of the high prices wave seems to have come about two or three weeks after the declaration of war.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BOSTON BRAVES HAVE SET A NEW RECORD

Only Four Games to Settle the World's Series---Rudolph Won His Second Game Against the Athletics Yesterday and Stallings' Men Are World's Champions.

BOSTON, Oct. 13 — To-day the Braves finished the contract. The briefest of all world's series, for the baseball championship came to an end at Fenway Park this afternoon. It was only four games long and the Braves won them all. They beat the Athletics this afternoon 3 to 1. By that score they finished the contract of hauling the Athletics from their pedestal. Here they are, the lords of baseball creation, after carrying out the most remarkable campaign the sport has ever known. So far down along the common herd even after the season was well advanced as to be in last place, they wind up the year by wearing the diadem. Under the superior playing of the Braves, the Athletics, great team though they have been and are, have passed on to the end of back seats.

The climb of the Braves from the bottom to the pinnacle was the result of only one thing, sheer merit. No chance champions could have surpassed the Athletics as they did in this series. The ability, slow to be recognized thought it has been, was there. To-day's game was close, but once the Braves got going, it was the beginning of the end. A sharp, penetrating rally in the mid-game stage and the victory was theirs. The fourth and fifth innings contained all the batting there was that was productive, and the Braves with their adaptability and trenchant methods, rammed home the winning counts in one short decisive inning.

There were two out in the fifth inning and small prospect of anybody reaching first base when the Bostons got to work and broke up the game. Rudolph, Moran and Evers were in the concentration of the attack which carried the day. A hard, clean hit belched fro mthe bat of each Rudolph started the charge, Evers finished it. The latter's single rushed two runs to the plate and the scoring for the day was done.

Evers was the big force to-day in the home team's success. He batted in two runs and he scored the other one. His "bone" of yesterday, which he, himself, does not deny, is a trifle in the light of the great work he did in the series and particularly to-day. His fielding this afternoon was leger demain, though he was only one of the four Boston infielders who played their positions with skill as comely as it was effective.

Rudolph's Great Work.

Rudolph pitched the Bostons to their final victory. Rudolph is a nervy pitcher, but the suport which the Bostons afforded him would have put heart in the shakiest of pitchers. Deal swooped down on hot grounders and bundled the ball over to first base for put-outs; Maranville collaborated with sparkling stops and Schmidt took all that came his way with hands which were as capacious as a fishnet and sure of seizure. A granite wall the Boston infield.

The contest was, in fact, errorless. There were fumbles here and there but they were on difficult chances, fumbles on drives which were hits. The Athletics infield was effective and steady, but it did not do the washing work of the others. Boston's fielding contained much more of the sensational, several plays which were carried out with speed and accuracy being of marked importance because men were on a base and a slip at such times might be costly.

The Athletics culled one or more hits off Rudolph in each of the first five innings. Rudolph was putting the first ball over often and the Athletics took to hitting the first ball. By this plan they had been on bases in all of the first five innings, but partly from Rudolph being at his best with a run threatening and partly to support which was as firm as adamite only one of the base runners reached home. From the time the Bostons made their two runs the Athletics were dead birds in the Fenway pit. They did not make a hit in the last four innings and in that time only twelve of them faced Rudolph, who again did execution with a curve of varied pace, slow to medium in speed, which pulled batters out of position and made them miss the third strike far.

There was no weak pitching on the Philadelphia side. Quite the contrary. Shawkey did excellent work and the Braves had to make their few hits count. But as Shawkey could not hold the Braves in the fifth, and appeared to be at the end of his rope, Pennock, the southpaw, took the box in the sixth. He was in tiptop form, and shut down entirely on scoring. The Mackmen used six pitchers in the series—Bender, Wyckoff, Plank, Bush, Shawkey and Pennock, and the last-named was the only one on whom the Braves did not score.

An After-the-game Scene.

The moment the game was over the Braves scurried for their bench, back of which is the exit to their dressing rooms, kicking their heels in the air, but hurrying to escape the crowd. They beat it to the privacy of their rooms with all haste, but one, Mann, did not escape. A horde of shouting fans was at his heels, coming from all directions. They caught him, lifted ho mon their shoulders, and mussed him up. His cap was wanted for a souvenir, and his admirers did not let him go until several "cops" came to his aid. The royal hootens meanwhile were marching to the scene and when they joined the waving, cheering crowd there was a swarm of idolizers extending out to the playing field, fans by the hundreds, and with no desire to go home. They could go home any day, but world's championships come seldom.

They yelled for Mayor Curley, for Stallings, for Gaffney, for the players. The Mayor spoke, and was cheered, and spoke again. He spilled language all over the place, telling what great institutions Boston, the Boston fans, and the Boston players were. Stallings and Gaffney and Willie Connor, the only bespectacled mascot in the business, mounted the rostrum at the behest of Mayor Curley and the fans.

Stallings, beaming, made a few well chosen remarks and Gaffney followed with a few more of the well-chosen class. Mascot Connor said nothing, letting his season's record speak for him. It was a very happy, exuberant occasion. The Athletics passed through the exit quietly, but one or two stopped to congratulate the victorious and probably much-to-be-feted Braves.

The Athletics began the game as if somewhat care free—that is, as if the series had reached that stage at which there was little more for them to lose; the Braves began as if they were sure of winning, and determined to end the tussling quickly. Not that the Athletics did not make stiff resistance. The losing fight they made in their last stand was not without spirit. Defensively, they were still the Athletics, but with the bat, on the offensive, they flashed for a while then flickered out. Pitching and support of pitching drew their teeth.

HUNGARY PLAYS DOUBLE.

Pourparlers With Russia Under Way Says Roumanian Diplomat.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 14.—(Via London.)—The Roumanian Minister to Russia, C. Diamandy, to-day gave out a statement concerning the attitude of his country as regards the war. The statement says in part:

"In view of the conflicting reports and general obscurity surrounding Roumania's attitude since the death of the late king, I will say that at present Roumania is prevented from rendering active assistance to the allies by the necessity of keeping troops along the Danube. I know for a fact of the existence of pourparlers between Russia and Hungary regarding the ceding of Transylvania and the guaranteeing to Hungary of national severance from Austria in return for Hungary's withdrawal of her troops from Cracow. Hungary's attempts are not seriously regarded by Roumania, for we feel that so long as the present Russian Foreign Ministry is in office our interests will be safeguarded. Moreover, the Hungarian conversations are not official, but are instigated by Hungarian prisoners in Russia."

SIRES AND SONS.

Senator Weeks of Massachusetts weighs 275 pounds.

The famous French lawyer, Maitre Labori, who became an international figure at the time of the Dreyfus case, is now fifty-five years old.

Dr. Doyen, the French surgeon, is generally considered to be the wealthiest medical man in the world. He is also one of the busiest, and it is proverbial in Paris that no healthy man can ever get a talk with him.

Dr. Hideyo Noguchi, who has been made a member of the Rockefeller Institute, has for the past ten years done important medical research work for the institute. Dr. Noguchi is a Japanese and has spent a large part of his life in this country.

Dr. Emanuel Lasker, the world's chess champion, won the title from W. Steinitz, who had successfully defended it for twenty-eight years. It almost looks as if his successor, like Steinitz, would reign supreme for a long number of years, as he has never been beaten in any match and has won a great number of first prizes in International tournaments.

Paris Pawnshop For Autos.

The Mont de Piete, the great pawnshop of Paris, is taking thought for those of its patrons who may be automobilists or aviators. Its authorities are now negotiating for the acquisition of an immense garage, capable of holding 2,000 cars, so that people who pawn their automobiles may be able to leave them there and thus avoid the present expense of at least 6 francs a day, which pawning an automobile has hitherto meant. Space will also be provided for aeroplanes.—New York Sun

Farmers Are Generous.

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 14. — Mayor Graham's scheme for the distribution among the poor of the city of farm produce being donated by farmers of the district is working out well. The cellar of the City Hall is being used as a receiving station and distributing centre. Farmers and vegetable growers are generous in their contributions. A Lob. Township farmer yesterday offered 1,100 barrels of apples absolutely free of charge.

Troops In Holland.

LONDON, Oct. 14. — A Rotterdam correspondent of the local news agency says that the Dutch Government gives the number of British troops who crossed the Holland border line after the fall of Antwerp at 1,500, and those of the Belgians at 21,500.

Spy With Indian Troops.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—Le Temps says the daring of German spies is again shown by the discovery of one of them disguised who joined the Indian troops when they left India and traveled with them to Marseilles, where he was detected and captured.

PRIZE WINNING FISH CAUGHT IN ONTARIO

The Bristol Steel Rod fishing competition for the largest fish taken in 1914 in Ontario waters, has brought forth many claims for the angler's championship honours. A beautiful fish weighing 28 lbs. won premier place in the grey (lake) trout class. This was taken by Mr. Fred E. Ringwold, of New York, in the south west arm of Lake Timagami. Second place went to Mr. Frank J. Barber, Georgetown, Ont., with a 20 lb. trout, caught in Ragged Lake, Algonquin Provincial (Ontario) Park, while the third prize was secured by Mr. Lawrence Brown with a 17 lb. trout from Buck Lake, Algonquin Park.

The largest entry of small mouth black bass was that of Mr. C. C. Fox, of Kensington, Pa. This fish, weighing 4 lbs. 4 oz., was caught in Rock Lake, Algonquin Park, on Sept. 3rd.

All the prize fish, it will be noted, were taken out of waters in the magnificent sporting districts opened up by the Grand Trunk Railway.

HASTINGS NEWS

Unique Social of Mission Band —Other News

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, Oct. 13—The Mission Band social on Wednesday night, held in the basement of the Methodist Church, was a grand success. The entertainment was provided by the members of the Band and showed that considerable pains had been taken in the preparation of the several numbers. A unique feature of the evening was a "guessing contest" on the number of seeds in a pumpkin shown in the room, but perhaps the feature of the evening, which provoked the most merriment was the "Newspaper," edited by the several groups of contestants, and read aloud by a chosen member of each group. No one in the company was at all surprised if their name was to be found in the new newspaper. Refreshments were served and homes-made candy offered for sale by the children. The success of the entertainment is due to the energetic leaders of the Band, Mrs. C. Jones and Miss C. Dox see.

The members of the W. M. S. held their regular monthly meeting on Thursday afternoon in the Church parlour, when a good programme was rendered by the members, taken from the first chapter of the new study book "The Child in the Midst."

A large number from this district attended the exhibition at Keene on Wednesday last, and the one expressed opinion was that it was the best of the season.

Some of our people have been picking October raspberries which are of good average size and quite up to the standard of the earlier berry.

A letter has been received from Mr. Bagnall, who left Hastings some time ago for the scene of the war, and reports conditions there just as serious as reported.

Mr. J. O'Reilly of Toronto has been renewing acquaintances in town.

Mr. W. Carey spent the holiday with his parents in Keene.

We are sorry to report that the condition of Mrs. John Preston does not show much sign of improvement.

VON KLUK IN PERIL

Allies Are Now Fighting Desperately in West Flanders—May Cut German Right

THE PRESENT SITUATION

PARIS, Oct. 16. — Although the fall of Ostend appears to have become a certainty, the German sweep of the North Sea coast to the west evidently has been circumvented by the success of the allies in driving a wedge between the army of Gen. Von Beseler and the forces of Generals Von Kluk and Von Boehm, which compose the German right of the main line of the invaders in France.

Definite information from official sources regarding the movements and the strength of the armies engaged is lacking because of the excessive stringency of the censorship inaugurated with the development of the movement in the Department Du Nord in France and in West Flanders in Belgium, where the two big armies are reported to have met in a great pitched battle—the greatest of the war—in which the fighting already is reported severe.

Evidence that the German assaults are being delivered with less force is conveyed in the intimation that between the Somme and the Oise their artillery attacks are not being followed up with infantry charges. It is possible that they have withdrawn some of their troops from this position to strengthen their advance toward the coast, but this, it is considered, would be risky, as it might permit the allies to break through and interrupt the communications of their armies which are fighting north of the Aisne.

In the centre the allies have also advanced, particularly towards Craonne, and to the northeast of the road from Berry-au-Bac to Rheims and to the north of Prunay, in the direction of Beine, which is slightly to the southeast of Rheims, several German trenches have been carried.

An official statement from Berlin received in London is interpreted as giving the information that a French attack is being directed against Metz, for it denies reports that several of the forts there have been captured by the French.

In Paris it is officially reported that an army is marching between the Meuse and Moselle rivers (Metz is on the Moselle), and that Wednesday this army had reached the highway between Verdun and Metz.

The official communique issued at Bordeaux at midnight last night reports, among other gains along the whole front, the capture of Estaires, 13 miles west of Lille and on the north bank of the Lys.

This, taken in connection with the previous reported occupation of Ypres and yesterday's unofficial announcement that the allies have retaken Lille, indicates remarkable advantage gained by the allies during the two days' fighting.

The official communication issued by the French War Office last night says: "The news of the day indicates gains at several points along the front.

"On the left wing, to the north of the Lys, we have taken Estaires. On the centre to the north and east of Rheims, we have made an advance of nearly two kilometres (about a mile and a quarter).

"On the heights of the Meuse, and in the Woevre region, we have made gains to the south of St. Mihiel, and near Marcheville."

The French War Office made public the following communication yesterday afternoon: "In Belgium, German troops coming from Antwerp are marching toward the west, and on the evening of Oct. 14 they reached the region of Bruges and Thielt (15 miles southeast of Bruges).

"On our left wing the enemy has evacuated the left bank of the Lys. Between the Lys and the canal of La Bassee the situation shows no change.

"In the region of Lens and between Arras and Albert our progress has been marked.

"Between the Somme and the Oise there has been no change. The Germans have cannonaded our line without, however, delivering any infantry attacks.

"On the centre, between the Oise and the Meuse, we have advanced in the direction of Craonne. To the northeast of the highway from Berry-au-Bac to Rheims, and to the north of Prunay, in the direction of Beine, several German trenches have been taken.

"Between the Meuse and the Moselle, after having repulsed on the night of Oct. 13-14 certain attacks to the southeast of Verdun, our troops advanced on Oct. 14 to the south of the highway from Verdun to Metz.

"On our right wing the partial offensive movement undertaken by the Germans in the Ban-de-Sapt, to the north of St. Die, has been definitely checked."

CANADIANS ARE NOW AT SALISBURY

Great Enthusiasm Greeted Them at Plymouth—Disembarkation of Cavalry is Slow

GOING INTO CAMP

PLYMOUTH, Oct. 16.—(Via London.)—The Canadians received a debarkation order from the War Office unexpectedly last evening. Despite the rain crowds of people turned out to watch the landing and entraining of the troops, which began with a contingent of Strathcona's Horse.

The various contingents were headed through the streets by their bands and pipes. Owing to the difficulty of berthing the transports, in consequence of the neap tide, the debarkation of the Canadians is expected to be slow.

Extensive preparations have been made for the Canadians on Salisbury Plain. The first contingents are believed to have reached there during last night. The movements of the troops have been conducted during the night time in order to avoid delays to other railway traffic.

Plymouth is agog with excitement over the landing of Canadian troops. Right up in the estuary transports are steadily discharging their cargoes amidst scenes of the keenest enthusiasm. The surprise in this famous port was unbounded when the transports suddenly came into this harbor. From south to north the eye travelled up the Hamoze following what seemed an almost unending line of masts and funnels until it faded away in the dim light of the higher waters before taking a turn for Saltash bridge.

It was an unprecedented sight, one indeed without parallel in the history of the great western port. Never before has there been such an assemblage of this class of ship in these waters, and it was altogether a most inspiring scene. The rigging and decks of the ships were masses of khaki-clad figures and the company of each ship appeared in the happiest of spirits. Little steamboats, dwarfed almost into insignificance beside these great leviathans, passed in every direction, and added to the din of welcome with sirens and hooters.

As the small passenger steamers passed, those on board waved and cheered to the smiling faces high up above them and acknowledged the greeting in true British fashion. One of the ships had on board some of the kiltie regiments, and as each of the ships passed along the skirl of the bagpipes came over the water and was cheered to the echo by the inhabitants of the three towns. Folk only were allowed to see them at a distance, for much to the disappointment of the public, none of the Canadians was allowed freedom ashore.

Military necessities render it impossible to say anything concerning the many matters upon which the Canadian public will be eager for.

The voyage to England was a delightful one, and on every transport there was maintained the same eagerness and fine spirit which were shown on the days before sailing.

It is understood that there is a clean bill of health, but many horses have died on the voyage.

The task of disembarking such immense numbers of men and material is naturally a tremendous one, but the arrangements are working with complete smoothness.

Strathcona's Horse came in for a gratifying reception. They could be distinguished by a special banner displayed on the liner's bridge.

ELEVATORS BOBBED,

Grain, Said To Be In Large Quantities, Stolen at Montreal.

MONTREAL, Oct. 16. — A large quantity of grain, said by some to be more than would fill two of the biggest "tramps" plying out of Montreal, has been stolen from elevators owned by the Montreal Harbor Commissioners. The figure is set by some at 750,000 bushels.

The Harbor Commissioners state, however, that only a few hundred bushels have disappeared.

The first intimation of the thefts was received from England, where a cargo was reported about 10,000 bushels short. An investigation followed and the deeper those conducting it go, the more they are amazed.

Austrians Using Dum-dums.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 16.—The general staff of Kiev has given out a statement alleging that dum-dum bullets are being used by Austrian troops. Eight cases of those bullets have been secured in the theatre of war. The packages in which they are put up bear this inscription: "Uebungspatronen M. T. Weif S. 1914."

According to advices received here many Roumanian deserters are presenting themselves before the Roumanian consul at Odessa and demanding that they be sent home.

Portugal Reinforces Garrisons.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—Two expeditionary forces of Portuguese troops sailed from Lisbon on Sept. 10 to reinforce garrisons in Portuguese possessions in Africa, which adjoin those of Germany. This was made known yesterday by C. Rangel De Sampaio, Portuguese consul-general at New York, and is the first news to reach this country of any actual military preparations by Portugal for the eventuality of that country's participation in the war.

Dutch to Raise $20,000,000.

THE HAGUE, Oct. 16.—(Via London.)—The First Chamber yesterday passed the measure providing for the second war credit of $20,000,000.

Russian Army Achieves Notable Victory Near Warsaw—Ten Thousand Prisoners Taken

THE ENEMY CHECKED

LONDON, Oct. 16. — A despatch from Petrograd to The Evening Courier, says that reports from the Russian field army indicate that the German force which penetrated the Warsaw district has been cut in two and driven back on the Lods-Pietrokow-Kielce line, after two days of desperate fighting. The Russian advance is being pushed forward. It is believed that 10,000 Germans have been taken prisoners in these operations.

The streets of Warsaw are now filled with villagers, who, for protection, have fled into the city from the surrounding districts, bringing with them their horses and cattle.

The sound of distant cannonading is distinctly heard, and it is believed that a general engagement is in progress. If this is the case, it is expected that it will last for days, possibly weeks.

The Germans have been allowed to advance as far as the Polish river Vistula for strategic reasons. They are thus drawn away from, and will be unable to use, the network of railways on the German side of the frontier.

It is hoped that the enemy will be decimated by the blow, and will be compelled to accept defeat.

The military governor of Warsaw has informed the population that they may remain calm and reassured, as the defence of Warsaw is to be carried to the highest degree of tension.

Advices from the Russian indicate that the main German effort in Poland has been directed at Ivangorod the tip of an end of the main fighting line. Several days were spent in repeated assaults on this fortress, but the Russians finally checked the German avalanche. The entire front is said to extend from Warsaw to Przemysl and southward to the Dneister.

German aerial attacks on Warsaw were a feature of the combat around that city. But the German air craft were received by a well directed fire and on Tuesday morning one of the forts brought down a Zeppelin. An airship which dropped several missiles was subsequently captured. Some idea of the fierceness of the conflict raging in this region may be gathered from the announcement of the Russian general staff that for the next "few weeks" the strictest censorship will be manifested.

The announcement from Vienna that the Russian siege of Przemysl, which has been in progress for some time, had been raised, is now passed over hastily by despatches from Berlin. It is believed certain, however, that the advance on Cracow has been withdrawn in order to allow full concentration of forces on the Vistula, where the major operations of the fighting in the east are now transpiring.

The first line of Russian troops who are now under fire is estimated 28 army corps, or about 1,500,000 men; the Austro-Germans approximate 1,000,000 men composed of probably 12 German and 10 Austrian corps.

The purpose of the Russians in giving battle along the Vistula, on their own soil and within easy reach of Warsaw, is believed here to be patterned on the strategy of Gen. Joffre, who made his supreme effort when the Germans were in a hostile country far from their bases of supplies, and when the army was in a more or less disconnected shape because of rapid movements. There can be no question that the Czar's generals are picking their own ground and going about their task leisurely.

Spies as Red Cross Aides.

PARIS, Oct. 16. — Five German spies masquerading as Red Cross aides were captured in Paris yesterday. For some weeks the party had been automobiling in the rear of the French lines furnished with forged papers, but when they attempted to enter Paris they were arrested because unprovided with a pass signed by Gen. Gallieni. Two bombs, several rifles, cartridges, maps and sketches were found hidden in the automobile.

ENVOYS ARE WOUNDED.

British Officials Are Victims of Young Turkish Fanatic.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Bucharest says:

"Noel Buxton (member of the British Parliament for North Norfolk), and his brother, Charles Roden Buxton, sons of Sir Thomas Powell Buxton, former governor of South Australia, who had been in Bulgaria to confer with Bulgarian politicians regarding Bulgarian attitude toward the European war, were both shot yesterday by a young Turk, Pachel Hassan.

"The Buxtons were traveling in an automobile with a son of M. Guechoff, former Bulgarian Premier, to attend the funeral of the King of Roumania when Pachel fired four shots at the party from a revolver. One of the Buxtons was shot through the lung. The other was only slightly wounded.

"The assassin was arrested. It appears that he had just arrived here from Salonika. He had a passport which was vised at Constantinople, Sept. 26."

Noel Buxton has traveled extensively in the near east. He is chairman of the London Balkan committee and has actively interested himself in Macedonia. He served with the Bulgarian staff during the war in the Balkans.

Charles Roden Buxton was private secretary to his father in South Australia. He has been interested for a long time in welfare work. Mr. Buxton lived for a time in Texas, where he studied ranching.

The correspondent says it is believed that the wound of neither man is dangerous. He does not say which one of the brothers was shot through the lung.

Chance For Christmas Gifts.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16. — American railroads may transport free of charge, if they decide to do so, gifts made by the children of the United States for presentation on Christmas Day to the children made orphans by the European war.

This ruling was announced by the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday in connection with the plans of American newspapers to send a "Christmas ship" abroad.

The commission said that the transportation of such articles would fall within the terms of charity and that such transportation was entirely discretionary with the railroads.

BRONCHIAL COUGHS

When the bronchial tubes are affected with that weakening, tickling cough, they need immediate and sensible treatment. The breath seems shorter because of mucous obstructions; usually fever is present and your head jars with every cough. Your chest aches and the inflammation often spreads to the lungs.

The food-tonic that has proven its worth for forty years—is Scott's Emulsion. It drives out the cold, which is the root of the trouble, and checks the cough by aiding the healing process of the enfeebled membranes.

If you are troubled with bronchitis or know an afflicted friend, always remember that Scott's Emulsion builds strength while relieving the trouble.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN".

By Geo. Allan England

"There's been a battle here that's sure," said he. "Look, spear-points—shattered!"

He had already uncovered three obsidian blades. The broken tips proved how forcible they had been driven against the stone in the long ago.

"What? A——"

His fingers closed on a small, hollow shell of gold.

"A molar, so help me! All that is left of some forgotten white man who fell here at the door, a thousand years ago!"

Speechless——the girl took the shell from him and examined it.

"You're right, Allan," she answered. "This certainly is a hollow gold crown. Anyone can see that, in spite of the patina that's formed over the metal. Why—what can it all mean?"

"Search me! The patriarch's record gave the impression that this eastern expedition set out within thirty years or so of the catastrophe. Well, in that short time it doesn't seem possible there could have developed savages fighting with flints and so on. But that there certainly was a battle here at this door, and that the cathedral was used as a fort against some kind of invasion is positively certain.

"Why, look at the chips of concrete knocked off the jamb of the door here! Must have been some tall mace-work where you're standing, Beta! If we could know the complete story of this expedition, its probable failure to reach New York, its entrapment here, the siege and the inevitable tragedy of its end—starvation, sorties, repulses, hand-to-hand fighting at the outer gates, in the nave, here at the crypt door, perhaps on he stairs and in the vaults below—then defeat and slaughter and extinction—what a tremendous drama we could formulate!"

Beatrice nodded. Plain to see, the thought depressed her.

"Death, everywhere—" she began, but Allan laughed.

"Life, you mean!" he rallied. "Come now, this does no good, poking in the rubbish of a distant tragedy. Real work awaits us. Come!"

He picked up the torch, and with his primitive but serviceable matches lighted it. The smoke rose through the silent air of the cathedral, up into a broad sunlit zone from a tall window in the transept, where it writhed blue and luminous.

A single blow of Allan's axe shattered the last few shreds of oaken plank that still hung from the eroded hinges of the door. In front of the explorers a flight of concrete steps descended, winding darkly to the crypt beneath.

Allan went first, holding the torch high to light the way.

"The records!" he exclaimed. "Soon, soon we shall know the secrets of the past!"

CHAPTER VI.
TRAPPED!

Some thirty steps the way descended, ending in a straight and very narrow passage. The air, though somewhat chill, was absolutely dry and perfectly respirable, thanks to the enormously massive foundation of solid concrete which formed practically one solid monolith six hundred feet long by two hundred and fifty broad—a monolith moulded about the crypt and absolutely protecting it from every outside influence.

"Not even the Great Pyramid of Ghizeh could afford a more perfect—hello, what's this?"

Allan stopped short, staring downward at the floor. His voice re-echoed strangely in the restricted space.

"A skeleton, so help me!"

True indeed. At one side of the passage, lying in a position that strongly suggested death in a crouching, despairing attitude—death by starvation rather than by violence—a little clutter of human bones gleamed while under the torch-flare.

"A skeleton—the first one of our vanished race we've ever found!" exclaimed the man. "All the remains in New York, you remember, down in the subway or in any of the buildings were invariably little piles of impalpable dust mixed with coins and bits of rusted metal. But this—it's absolutely intact!"

"The dry air and all—" suggested Beatrice.

Stern nodded.

"Yes," he answered. "Intact, so far. But—"

He stirred the skull with his foot. Instantly it vanished into powder.

"Just as I thought," said he. "No chance to give a decent burial to this or any other human remains we may come across here. The slightest disturbance totally disintegrates them. But with this it's different!"

He picked up a revolver, hardly rusted at all, that lay near at hand.

"Cartridges, look!" cried Beatrice, pointing.

"That's so, too—a score or more!"

Lying in an irregular oval that plainly told of a vanished cartridge-belt, a string of cartridges trailed on the concrete floor.

"H-m-m-m! Just for an experiment let's see!" murmured the engineer.

Already he had slipped in a charge.

"Steady, Beatrice!" he cautioned, and, pointing down the passage, pulled the trigger.

Flame stabbed the half-dark and the crashing detonation rang in their ears.

"What do you think of that?" cried Stern exultantly. "Talk about your miracles! A thousand years and——"

Beatrice grasped him by the arm and pointed downward. Astonished, he started. The rest of the skeleton had vanished. In its place now only a few handfuls of dust lay on the floor.

"Well, I'll be—" the man exclaimed. "Even that does the trick, eh? H-m! It would be a joke, now, wouldn't it, if the records should act the same way? Come on, Beta; this is all very interesting, but it isn't getting us anywhere. We've got to be at work!"

He pocketed the new-found gun and cartridges and once more, torch on high, started down the passage, with the girl at his side.

"See here, Allan!"

"Eh?"

"On the wall here—a painted stripe?"

He held the torch close and scrutinized the mark.

"Looks like it. Pretty well gone by now—just a flake her and a daub there, but I guess it once was a broad band of white. A guide!"

They moved forward again. The strip ended in a blur that might once have been an inscription. Here, there, a letter faintly showed, but not one word could now be made out.

"Too bad," he mused. "It must have been mighty important or they wouldn't have—"

"Here's a door, Allan!"

He examined the door by the unsteady flicker of the torch. It was of iron, still intact, and fastened by a long iron bar dropped into massive metal staples.

"Beat it with the axe?" she queried.

"No. The concussion might reduce everything inside to dust. Ah! Here's a padlock and chain!"

Carefully he studied the chain beneath bent brows.

"Here, Beta, you hold the torch, so. That's right. Now then—"

Already he had set the axe-blade between the padlock and the staple. A quick jerk—the lock flew open raspingly. Allan tried to lift the bar, but it resisted.

A tap of the axe and it gave, swinging upward on a pivot. Then a minute later the door swung inward, yielding to his vigorous push.

Together they entered the crypt of solid concrete, a chamber forty feet long by half as wide and vaulted overhead with arches, crowning perhaps twenty feet from the floor.

"More skeletons, so help me!"

Allan pointed at two more on the pavement at the left of the entrance.

"Why, how could that happen?" queried Beta, puzzled. "The door was locked outside!"

"That's so. Either there must be some other exit from this place or there were dissensions and fightings among the party itself. Or these men were wounded and were locked in here for safekeeping while the others made a sortie and never got back, or—I don't know! Frankly, it's too much for me. If I were a story writer, I might figure it out, but I'm not. No matter, they're here, anyhow; that's all. Here two of our own people died ten centuries ago, trying to preserve civilization and the world's history for future ages, if there were to be any such. Two martyrs, I salute them!"

In silence and awed sympathy they inspected the mournful relics of humanity a minute, but took good care not to touch them.

"And now the records!"

Even as Stern spoke he saw again a dimly painted line, this time upon the floor, all but invisible beneath the dust of centuries that had come from God knows where.

"Come, let's follow the line!" he cried.

It led them straight through the middle of the crypt and to a sort of tunnel-like vault at the far end. This they entered quickly and almost at once knew they had reached the goal of their long quest.

In front of them, about seven feet from the floor, a rough white star had been smeared. Directly below it a kind of alcove or recess appeared, lined with shelves of concrete. What its original purpose may have been it would be hard to say; perhaps it may have been intended as a storage-place for the cathedral archives.

But now the explorers saw it was partly filled with pile on pile of curiously crinkled paper not protected in any way from the air, not covered or boxed in. To the right, however, stood a massive chest, seemingly of sheet-lead.

"Some sense to the lead," growled Stern; "but why they left their records open to the air, blest if I can see!"

He raised the torch and flared the light along the shelves, and then he understood. For here, there, copper nails glinted dully, lying in dust that once upon a time had been wood.

"I'm wrong, Beta; I apologise to them," Stern exclaimed. "These were all securely boxed at once, but the boxes have gone to pieces long since. Dry-rot, you know. Well, let's see what condition the parchments are in!"

She held the torch while he tried to raise one, but it broke at the slightest touch. Again he essayed, and a third time. Same result.

THE PRINCE'S MOTTO

Uncertainty as to Origin, Now Used For Splendid Purpose

Splendid indeed was the response to the appeal of the Prince of Wales for relief funds.

"Ich Dien," his motto, which he wished used in connection with his appeal, has never been satisfactorily defined by experts. The words are really part of the motto of the Black Prince, placed on his tomb in Canterbury Cathedral, "Ich Dien Houmgni," which one recognized authority translates as meaning "I serve a higher Power."

There is a tradition that, at his birth at Carnarvon, Edward II., the first English Prince of Wales, was presented to a gathering of Welsh chieftains. It is recorded that his father, Edward I., pointing to the child, exclaimed "Eich dyn," the Welsh for "Your man."

As the pronunciation of the words in the Welsh tongue are the same as those of "Ich dien," it seems not unreasonable that the Welsh definition is correct.

Once a Foe, Now a Friend

A dozen years ago the most determined enemy of Britain in the field was General Louis Botha, in command of the Boer forces. At that time a little boy of five, his son, Johnnie, was probably lisping words of hate and anger against Britain. To-day all is different. Johnnie Botha is 17, and, without even waiting to consult his parents, he left school and enlisted as a private for active service.

The Lance in Warfare

The German authorities obviously believe in the lance. The Uhlan regiments carry it, and their battle equipment is certainly formidable, for in addition to the lance they have a carbine and a sabre, which is slung on the saddle. It is interesting to note that the Cossacks do not use the lance in warfare. Their weapons are the carbine and a curved sabre.

Neuralgia of the Heart

This Letter Tells of Wonderful Change Effected by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mr. James G. Clark, Fosterville, York County, N.B., writes:—"I have been a great sufferer from what the doctors said was neuralgia of the heart. The pain started in the back of the neck and worked down into the region of the heart. Though I had taken a lot of medicine of one kind and another, I could not get anything to help me until I used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"When I began this treatment I could not rest in bed, except by sitting upright, on account of the dreadful pains about the heart and the quick, loud beating. The change which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has made in my condition is wonderful. It has entirely overcome these symptoms, and is making me strong and well. If this statement will help to relieve the suffering of others, you are at liberty to use it."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a true tonic and the greatest of nerve restoratives, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited Toronto.

THE VICTROLA AND THE FAMILY—No. 1

and the Victrola are great friends. "I like to sit back and dream of the days gone by, while the Victrola, through its magic, recalls the old songs and singers to me.

"There's Tamagno and Plançon, Patti and Melba who still sing for me just as I used to hear them, at their best, although two are now dead and one has permanently retired from the stage. And the younger generation of singers, although I have never had an opportunity of hearing them personally, seem like old friends to me, so familiar have their voices become through their wonderfully beautiful Victor Records.

"All the rest of the family enjoy the Victrola just as much as I do. They all have their favorite music and their favorite singers and musicians. It don't seem to me as though there could be anything that could give so much pleasure to everybody as the Victrola does."

FRENCH WOMEN ARE BRAVE AND DEVOTED TO WOUNDED

Both British and French Women Show Wonderful Spirit—Scrub Floors and Men as Duty Calls It—Substantial Hope for Success of Their Work.

BORDEAUX, Oct. 1.—This is about women. There was a famous official phrase in the days of the South African War: "The men are splendid." Thus they were mentioned in despatches." Travelling about for the Daily Express in Belgium and down here in the lush valley of the Garonne I have seen what leads me to exclaim, "The women are splendid.

Not theirs the wild intoxication of the charge, the thrilling joys of riding full dash at rows of the enemy, of "sabring the gunners there" or swinging pennoned lance to still the Kaiser's fine Uhlans and stem the tide of oppression and win glory or death in a race, nerve braced with joy.

Tender, gentle nurtured women, French, and English down here in the valley of Garonne are soothing the anguish of the twenty-five thousand wounded French and German soldiers, privates and officers, who have been brought to the region of the new capital of France.

Scrub Floors and Men.

There is a notable British colony here in Bordeaux. It was founded a century or two ago. Some of its members have been long in the wine industry in this mellow valley, where the red juice ripens into clarets of price and where a place called Cognac gives spirit to the world. Some of the women are rich, of culture and leisure. Now that wounded are being gathered, a harvest of pain from the terrific battlefields of the Marne and the Aisne and from districts hard by, where these cultured women have set themselves to work scrubbing floors and scrubbing men.

"Ardennes waves above them her green leaves,

When you have been fighting like fury, driving or being driven, day after day, you have had no time for baths and rose water. Some of the soldiers—Kaiser's men and freedom's men—have been brought here covered with blood, sweat, dust and dirt. I have been watching them to-day coming in on the floors of trains on beds of soft hay, friend and foe. Tender women, seeing that the great thing needed was scrubbing, scrubbed.

The Daily Express nurses have learned in the practical London nursing classes that the nurse's duty does not begin and end with the holding of a man's hand, the cooing of soft words like the tangled fairy tale, the holding of a cool cup to his parched, grateful lips. It includes this —and more. So women of the British colony in the French capital, and women of France, are scrubbing floors and men.

Women Are Ready and Calm.

Bordeaux, truly French, has glorified women for generations in her big public squares, streets and gardens, in bronze and stone. In this lavish, exultant statuary woman is clothed only in beauty. In the countless hospitals where she is tending the wounded and nurturing men back to strength and the battlefield, she is clothed sweetly in white, with the small red cross on breast and arm. There is nothing voluble, excitable, mercurial about her. She is ready and calm.

The French women hereabouts are thinking of copying the British example of not wearing the "customary black" of mourning for their husbands, brothers, cousins, killed in the war. Some are in favour of a tiny pendant of white, small, modest, to be worn at the throat—simple symbol that their men have died for freedom and for France.

At one of the little tables of a typical French restaurant sits a cultured woman. Fortune has been good to her in grace and wealth. Quietly she takes her dinner. Then she steals away. It is seven or eight in the evening. She is off to work. She has had a sleep in the day. Now she is going to her voluntary night duty, to tend the wounded in the dark hours.

Arouses Chaplain's Humour.

There is substantial hope in her work.

"Excuse by English, parson, but these damn Germans can't shoot for nuts," was the remark of one of the very few British wounded here to the Rev. William Holding, the devoted English chaplain who is slaving in Bordeaux.

"Humph! they seem to have managed to hit you," answered the clergyman with a smile.

"Yes, but it was only a bit of shrapnel — not much marksmanship about it."

What the nurses and doctors find is that most of the wounds are in the arms and legs, and of the twenty-five thousand wounded here scarcely any have died. So the merciful work of these devoted women has all the more hope in it— that of saving fighting men to fight again.

The Rev. Mr. Holding tells me he finds an eager spirit everywhere among the French wounded—the desire to get well quickly and have another fight for freedom and France.

When some of the men working the tramcars in this fine city, where you go miles for a penny, were called up for the war, women stepped on the footboard and filled their places.

Act as Tram Conductors.

Here they are acting as tram conductors, giving the tickets and taking the money, and expediting the getting in and out of the crowded times with gentle pressure of their hand, as calm and serious about it as though they had been at it all their lives. Thus the women are helping to keep "business as usual" and earning money toward the maintaining of the children of the men in red and blue and khaki ordered north.

So, by the side of the incoming trainload of men stretched on the floors of railway waggons or away in the scores of hospitals among the rows of wounded getting better by their help, amid the smiles and garlands that make it easier for the men to leave their homes and dear ones for the stricken field, or in the jostle of the tramcar crowds, keeping things going with a brave heart, "the women are splendid."

When You Hear That Dinner Bell

Does Your Mind Go Back to the Days When You Could Eat Like a Farm Hand?

The memory of an appetite is a woeful thing. The loss of stomach power—the ability to eat—the yearning after good old-fashioned food—that conditions is pitiful. Why can't you realize what thousands of others have demonstrated?

First Man—"I'm as hungry as a bear."

Look at the above illustration. Most every one remembers such a scene. Fancy yourself wild for food now. Fancy yourself able to eat as one of these men can eat.

Use a little common sense and look at your stomach trouble in a practical manner. Something has gone wrong with your digestive apparatus. Set your body machinery aright. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are Nature's own way to digesting food. By eating one of these tablets after each meal you digest that meal. Digesting that meal means easing the work of the stomach, intestines, liver and pancreas, and storing up new materials for digesting future meals.

Eat what you will and when you will but always carry a little Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet in your pocket. In a short time you will be surprised at the gladsome spirit with which you look on food.

Go to your druggist anywhere and buy a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets this very day.

To anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

RUDOPH PITCHED ONLY 54 BALLS.

Thirty-nine of these are Strikes, Twenty-nine Called Balls and the Rest Batted Balls.

BOSTON, Oct. 14—"Dick" Rudolph pitched a more remarkable game on Tuesday than in the first contest. Although hit more often, he was practically invincible in the pinch. He kept the ball spinning over the plate continuously and went through the nine innings by delivering the ball only ninety-four times, thirty-nine of these being strikes, twenty-nine called balls and the remainder batted balls.

Shawkey and Pennock were labouring mightily all the time. The first named delivered 82 balls during the five innings he was on duty, 51 of which were strikes and 29 called balls. Pennock levered his arm toward the plate 51 times in three innings, sending over 31 strikes, 20 balls and 10 that were batted.

Rudolph's record of pitched balls by innings was: 9, 12, 7, 12, 16, 6, 16, 7, 9.

Shawkey worked as follows: 9, 13, 8, 13 and 16, and Pennock 16, 18, 17.

BE PRETTY! TURN GREY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favourite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural colour and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay grey. Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

What a Girl Did

By EVERETT P. CLARKE.

When I went to work for Farmer Grimshaw at the beginning of the harvesting there were three other hands employed by him. We took our meals at the farmhouse, but slept in an outhouse, in which each man had a room to himself. I was especially pleased at not being obliged to sleep with another, for I didn't like any of the hands, and one of them looked to me like a jailbird.

One morning I got up, as usual, long before the sun. My room faced the west, and there was but one window in it; consequently it was half dark when I dressed. I noticed as I went out to work that my shoes didn't feel easy on my feet, but thought very little about it. So long as they didn't pinch me I didn't mind the rest. When breakfast was ready we all went into the farmhouse, and while we were sitting at the table several men—they were policemen in plain clothes—came in and arrested every one of us farm hands and ordered us to take off our shoes. When we had done so they chalked our initials on the sole of each shoe, and two of them went out, while the others remained to see that we stayed where we were.

Now, I remembered that my shoes had not been easy on my feet, and when I took them off I saw that they were not mine. Evidently a substitution had been made during the night; I was seized with a terrible dread, for it seemed to me that this substitution and the arrest had some connection.

Grimshaw's daughter, Eliza, who had from my going to work for her father shown an especial preference for me, was in the breakfast room, where we were held by the police, and I called her to me and asked her what it all meant. She told me that she didn't know unless we were held on suspicion of the murder of Farmer Benton, who was found dead in his bed shortly before our arrest and $500 that he had drawn from the bank, intending to pay off a mortgage, gone. I told her about the changing of my shoes for others, and she added that she had heard the policemen talking about tracks leading from the outhouse where the hands slept to Benton's house and back.

It was all plain to me now. Some one of my fellow hands had done the murder and had worn my shoes in order to throw the crime on me. I told Eliza of my fears, and she turned pale. I saw her fix her gaze on each of the other prisoners in turn, and when she had gone the rounds she whispered to me:

"It's Brown."

Brown was the man whom I have mentioned as looking like a jailbird. After Eliza's hitting on him I watched him closely myself for a few minutes and saw under a very quiet exterior a restless eye. Eliza saw that I was very much broken up by this effort to fix a murder on me and said sympathetically, "Don't worry; it will come out all right."

She had scarcely spoken the words when the two policemen who had gone out with the shoes came back and right up to me, paying no attention to the others.

"A job has been put up on me," I said. "Those shoes are not mine."

My remarks had no especial effect on them, so far as I could see. They told me I was under arrest for the murder of Ezra Benton and told the others they would be held as witnesses. As we were marched off I saw Eliza moving for the outhouse, where we had slept. A faint hope sprang up within me that she was going to look for some evidence to clear me, but this I knew was not to be expected.

There was not much doing in the courts, and my trial came on without delay. Farmer Grimshaw kindly employed a lawyer to defend me, and my advocate had a long talk with me in which he questioned me closely about the substitution of the shoes for mine, for the only proof against me was that the shoes taken off my feet by the police fitted exactly in the tracks made in the soft earth—it had rained the day before the murder—between the outhouse and Farmer Benton's. A worn place in the sole of one shoe and the heel of the other showed plainly in the indentation. Unless we could prove that the shoes were not mine it would go hard with me, and that would be a pretty hard matter to prove. The shoes found on Brown were very much smaller than mine.

When the case came to trial the police, who had made the discovery of the tracks and the shoes that had made them, and my lawyer were all put to shame by a girl. Eliza Grimshaw had done a bit of detective work that saved me.

While the trial was on Eliza gave her secret to my defender, and he at once put her on the stand. He drew from her that she was familiar with the soil between the outhouse and the home of the murdered man; that on the morning of the arrest she had examined dirt left on the floor of the rooms in the outhouse. She had found a yellow clay recently turned up in Benton's yard in Brown's room and before my door, but not in my room. She had collected bits of this caked dirt and produced it.

The result of this was that Brown was charged with the murder, and in time I was acquitted and he was convicted. I have thus far spent the remainder of my life in the service of Miss Grimshaw.

VITAL FORCE

Disease germs are on every hand. They are in the very air we breathe. A system "run down" is a prey for them. One must have vital force to withstand them. Vital force depends on digestion—on whether or not food nourishes—on the quality of blood coursing through the body.

ENEMY REBELS TAKEN.

Col. Martin Loses In First Fight With Union Forces.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Oct. 16.—Eighty of Lt.-Col. Martin's rebel rabble have been captured after a brief fight by the union forces.

As a result of Col. Martin's rebellion in the northwest of the Cape province, Gen. Botha, Premier of the Union of South Africa, and commander of the troops of the union, is declaring the field earlier than he originally intended to do. Gen. Botha is planning himself at the head of several strong Dutch commands, operating on the old pursuer line, which are reinforced with regiments trained by the union defence force.

Commandants, field cornets and burghers who served under Gen. Botha in the South African war, are rallying to his call, irrespective of their political feelings, to fight alongside of the British in defence of the empire, against which, twelve years ago, they were in arms. This fact has had a marked effect on waverers, who are now flocking to Gen. Botha's standard.

The other rebels within the union, having openly declared themselves, the Government considers itself not obliged to deal gently with them out of consideration for certain Dutch people, who, even though they are first class supporters of the Government, are said to have drawn the line at rebellion.

Gen. Beyers, who has been one of Gen. Botha's most bitter opponents, has placed his services at the disposal of the Minister.

WAR DECLARED?

Portugal Has Delivered Deal to Germany, Say Spanish Papers.

MADRID, Oct. 16.—While the Minister of State remains silent on the authenticity of the report that Portugal has declared war against Germany, the Spanish newspapers say the declaration was made yesterday.

Liberty organs discuss at length the new situation created by Portugal's attitude and declare that the moment has arrived for Spain to abandon her state of passive toleration and prepare for eventualities. With Portugal in the field, they go on to say, the operations will not remain confined to France, and in order to strike at Portugal the Germans will not hesitate to invade Spain, just as they invaded Belgium.

SICK, SOUR STOMACH, INDIGESTION OR GAS

"Pape's Diapepsin" makes upset stomachs feel fine in five minutes.

"Pape's Diapepsin" makes upset stomachs feel fine in five minutes.

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapepsin and in five minutes you wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women to-day know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favourite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin which costs only fifty-cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

MOVEMENT GROWING.

French-Canadian Contingent Fair To Become a Brigade.

MONTREAL, Oct. 16.—Why 2,000 French-Canadians have already volunteered for active service with the new regiment, Royal Canadian Franco-Can, and why thousands more should and will volunteer, was made plain at a monster assemblee patriotique in Sohmer Park last night.

The movement started some three weeks ago by Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Hr. L. T. Marechal, Dr. Arthur Mignault and other prominent French-speaking Canadians of this province, back by the Government and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Lomer Gouin, has already outgrown the original plan by a special French-Canadian regiment. It is now to be a brigade, and there is no doubt but that at least 4,000 volunteers will have offered for service by the end of this month, in addition to the 2,000 French-Canadians now with the first Canadian expeditionary force.

Last night's meeting was for the purpose of stimulating recruiting, although apparently little stimulus is needed, now that the French-Canadians are getting what they have asked for from the first—namely, a chance to serve under the officers they know and understand, in order to preserve the unity of their individual corps. The immense crowd which turned out last night and the responses to the appeal showed that the heart of Montreal is in the right place. The flags of Belgium, France and Belgium for justice and liberty, for the champion crusade of humanity as against brute force and the spirit of militarism, but a natural appeal to Canadians who speak the language of France, who know and are jealous of all the principles of British liberty, and who appreciate the heroism of the Belgians.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Athens correspondent asserts that the Russian fleet in the Black Sea has seized two German steamers loaded with cereals bound from Galats for Kustendje, Roumania.

A despatch to London from Gibraltar says that the Hamburg-American Line steamer Graecia, New York for Cadiz, was brought into Gibraltar yesterday as a prize.

Four carloads of grain, produce, clothing and supplies are being forwarded to the Belgians from Hastings County. The first carload was shipped yesterday from Stirling Village.

Russia has more than ten million men less than 40 years old who have served under the colors, and who are available for military service, according to the Berliner Taegliche Rundschau.

The newspaper France du Nord declared that when the Germans were defeated at Arras they lost from 12,000 to 15,000 men, who were surrounded by the French in some numbers.

MOVING ON METZ.

French Are Achieving Notable Results In Alsace.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Gaul and Teuton met in death gripe yesterday on the ground won Tuesday and Wednesday, commanding the roads to Metz, and it is said that the German line of communications to that base is seriously imperilled if not definitely lost. The French War Office will give no information on the subject, but it is stated in well-informed circles that masses of French troops have been moving in the direction of Metz for several days. One report declares that the Germans in the district affected by this new change of tactics have been thrown back beyond Muhlhausen. To support this statement comes a cable from Rome, declaring that messages from Berlin say the French have reoccupied Muhlhausen and Altkirch, both strong fortresses, and both taken by the French once, after the beginning of hostilities, evacuated and retaken, but finally relinquished because of pressure in the north.

THINK HARD

It Pays to Think About Food.

The unthinking life some people lead often causes trouble and sickness, illustrated in the experience of this lady.

"About four years ago I suffered dreadfully from indigestion, always having eaten whatever I liked, not thinking of the digestible qualities. This indigestion caused palpitation of the heart so badly I could scarcely walk up a flight of stairs without stopping to regain breath and strength.

"I became alarmed and tried dieting, wore my clothes very loose, and used other remedies, but found no relief.

"Hearing of the virtues of 'Grape-Nuts and Postum, I commenced using them in place of my usual breakfast of coffee, cakes or hot biscuit, and in one week's time I was relieved of sour stomach and other ills attending indigestion. In a month's time my heart was performing its functions naturally and I could climb stairs and hills and walk long distances.

"I gained ten pounds in this short time, and my skin became clear and I completely regained my health and strength. I continue to use Grape-Nuts and Postum for I feel that I owe my good health entirely to their use.

"I like the delicious flavour of Grape-Nuts and by making Postum according to directions, it tastes similar to mild high grade coffee." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

The most perfect food in the world. Trial of Grape-Nuts and cream 10 days proves. "There's a Reason."

A Word To The Poultry Keepers

By F. C. Elford, the Dominion Poultry Husbandman

The indications are that new laid eggs will be as scarce this winter as usual and if extra attention is not paid to getting the laying stock into condition and housed early, the supply of eggs may not be as plentiful even as they were last winter.

Though the present is too late to begin to prepare for early winter eggs, it is a good time to make the best of what we may have by getting everything ready before the cold weather comes. The beginning was made last spring when the early pullets were hatched, for only the early pullets can be depended on to give eggs during November and December, the hens, as a rule, will not lay many eggs until the end of January or February, if is therefore from the well matured pullets that the high priced eggs may be expected and in order to get the most out of these, care must be taken as from now until laying time is a more critical time in the life of the pullet than most poultrymen imagine.

How to Get Ready.

1. Keep no stock that will be non-producing. Kill off the old hens that will not lay until the spring. Market the immature pullets and all surplus cockerels as soon as they are ready. Give the rest of the pullets every opportunity to develop and get into laying condition before winter sets in.

2. Put these pullets into their winter quarters early. The unnecessary handling or changing of pullets from one place to another just when they are about to begin to lay is disastrous and in some cases will retard laying for several weeks. Give the pullets every chance to get acquainted with their winter quarters in plenty of time and feed liberally so that they will start to lay before the cold weather.

3. Do not feed sparingly but judiciously. Though feed may be high, it does not pay to stint the layers. Feed them grain in a litter on the floor and as the weather gets colder increase the quantity of litter. In addition to the grain see that they have either a hopper, with a dry mash constantly before them, or if preferred, give it in the shape of a moist mash once a day. Have the house clean, preferably white-washed, and allow plenty of sunshine in. We have found that with a shed roofed house, a board protection along the front of the house as high as 18 inches from the floor is an advantage; from this up glass and cotton in the proportion of one of glass to two of cotton, make the most ideal front for the average Canadian house.

Why Not More City Hens.

Many town and city people could not only produce sufficient eggs to keep their table going but have enough eggs left over that would go a long way towards supplying a household with groceries, etc. There are comparatively few city lots where a small flock of poultry could not be kept and enough scraps find their way into the garbage can to provide a large proportion of the food. No male birds should be kept, as they are both a nuisance and an expense, which if done away with and the house kept clean and sanitary there is absolutely nothing about such a plant that could possibly annoy the neighbours. If any one in every one hundred city families would produce even enough eggs for their own table, it would reduce the number of those who only consume and add that many more to the list of producers.

Canada Imported Eggs Last Year.

During the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1914, over 11 1-4 million dozen eggs were imported into Canada. These came from Great Britain, Hong Kong, China, Japan, New Zealand, and United States. Surely Canadian poultry keepers can supply the demand this year. If all help in this matter there should be no lack of eggs and if care is exercised in the production there should be a good revenue to the producers and the consumer ought not to pay such exorbitant prices as sometimes have been asked in the time of scarcity.

Better Have the Cost Low Than the Sale Price High.

Owing to the high price of feed it may cost more this year than usual to produce new laid eggs, but by careful management the average cost of one dozen of eggs might be kept as low as usual. It is at the production end that producers should aim to economize and it is better to save at this end than to expect extreme prices. This is always the case and especially will it be so this winter when everything the consumer has to buy will be dear and money to pay for it be scarce. It will be a loyal act to study how cheaply the eggs can be produced rather than how much can be charged for them.

Prof. Edward Brown, the Veteran Poultryman of England, made a suggestion the other day to English breeders, which suggestion from this distance sounds good. He thought that as so many poultry breeders in Great Britain had done business with Belgian poultrymen, who in all probability were killed, or who at least have had all their stock destroyed, that these English breeders, as soon as the smoke of battle had cleared away, might donate to their old customers and friends in Belgium, sufficient breeding stock to enable them to start up again. This suggestion of Prof. Brown's is worthy of a Britisher and though Canadian poultry breeders may not be able to do this, they can show their loyalty by producing as many new laid eggs as possible for this winter and at the least possible cost. Strictly new laid eggs in the winter time are worth a good price and the man who can produce them deserves credit and extra remuneration, but let us hope that this winter by better care and management we will have enough new laid eggs that we can supply the consumers at a price which is within the reach of those who must have them.

"The Prussian Government will ask the Diet for a war credit of more than $2,500,000,000.

"The Government work on the railways and highways will be proposed in order to cope with the unemployment situation and to give relief to small communities. The sitting of the Diet will partake of the character of a war session and will last only a few days."

Germany Tries To Get Trade.

MONTREAL, Oct. 16.—That Germany is making deliberate efforts to recapture some of her lost trade is evident from a communication received by the Montreal Chamber de Commerce from one of its correspondents in New York. This correspondent says that he has been approached by a German manufacturer's agent, who had unfolded a scheme for selling German-made goods in Canada. Since it was impossible to do business in the ordinary way, his proposal was to ship as American products goods that had been made in Germany, but on which "Made in Germany" did not appear. This offer was rejected.

Dutch Troops Killed Germans.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—An Amsterdam correspondent of The Daily News says that last Friday, when some German soldiers entered Holland, near Roosendaal, and through their commanding officer refused to be interned by the Dutch soldiers, a fight ensued, in which the Dutch troops killed or wounded a dozen Germans. The Germans were interned.

Force Goes After Rebels.

LONDON, Oct. 16. — According to his official reports from South Africa the rebellious commando under Col. Maritz numbers about 500 men, including a number of Germans who have joined him.

Gen. Botha, the South African Premier, has sent a strong force against Maritz, who has near Upington a large number of German cannon, rifles, ammunition and stores.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Oct. 18. 1914.

(Copyright, 1914, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

In the Garden of Gethsemane. Mark xiv:32-42. (Compare Luke xxii:39-46.)

1. Verse 32—What time of the day was it when they went to the place called Gethsemane?

2. Why did he not want all his disciples close to him while he was praying?

3. Verse 33—Why did Jesus take Peter, and James, and John, to be a little nearer to him than the rest of his disciples?

4. What reflection was it, if any, on the other disciples, that Jesus chose the company of Peter, and James, and John, on this, and on some other occasions?

5. Why was Jesus thrown into the agony of soul as indicated in this narrative?

6. Verses 34-36—Would you say, or not, and why, that it was the anticipation of the death on the cross that terrified Jesus?

7. Would Jesus have been glad or not, and why, if God had taken the cup of suffering from him?

8. What benefit has this suffering been to Jesus, and mankind, in all the years since that time?

9. Most, if not all true Christians, have one or more gethsemanes in their life time; are these times of soul agony, a bane or a blessing, and why?

10. What example does Jesus give us in the manner in which he prayed?

11. Would you say that this suffering of Jesus was wholly subjective, or was God in any sense punishing him for the sins of the world? Why?

12. Would it be a blessing in this present life, with other conditions as they are, if God were to make suffering impossible? Why?

13. Verses 37-38—Were the disciples to be blamed for sleeping, while Jesus had been praying in such soul distress? Why?

14. What is the benefit of human sympathy when we are in real heart trouble?

15. Verses 39-40—Why did Jesus go away and pray the same prayer that he had offered before?

16. When we pray for something we actually need, is it right or wrong, and why, for us to keep on praying until God gives us some sort of an answer?

17. Verses 41-42—Jesus now had evidently got light from God, as his mind is made up to "drink the cup." Why had God not answered him sooner?

18. If the crucifixion was a necessary, and not contingent, event, why did Jesus discuss the matter with his heavenly Father?

19. Why is it that God very frequently keeps his most faithful children in the dark as to their future duty, notwithstanding that they cry unto him night and day?

Lesson for Sunday, Oct. 25, 1914. Jesus and Judas. Matt. xxvi:14-25, 47-50; xxvii:3-10.

ANOTHER BRITISH CRUISER IS SUNK

THE ALLIED FORCES MAKE PROGRESS AT EVERY POINT

ALLIES' LINE EXTENDED TO THE SEA PROGRESS CONTINUES EVERYWHERE

Official French Bulletin Shows General Joffre and French-British-Belgian Forces are Ready to Meet Germany's Attempted Flanking Movement---Substantial Advances are Made at all Points

GERMANS RUSH REINFORCEMENTS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, October 16.—The allied lines have been extended so that they now hold a line extending from Ypres to the sea. As a result they will now be able to prevent any sudden flanking movement by the new German forces which have been sent into Belgium. This was the most noteworthy announcement contained in the official communique issued at Bordeaux at 2.40 this afternoon and telegraphed here to be made public by General Gallieni. The report declared that the progress already reported as being made by the allies at every point of the long battle line, was being continued without interruption to-day. "The line has been extended from Ypres to the sea," it was stated, and in general the entire situation was described as "Excellent."

PARIS, October 16.—The text of the official statement was as follows,—"The progress indicated in yesterday's communication is confirmed. On our left wing the action of the allied forces now extends from the region of Ypres to the sea. In the east, on the left bank of the Vistula during the day of October 15th, the Russian troops repulsed the German attacks directed against Warsaw and Ivangorod. The battle is now going on to the south of Przemysl."

ITALIAN WAR MINISTER DEAD

ROME, Italy, October 16.—Marquies di san Giuliano, the Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, is dead.

The death of Italy's Foreign Minister is expected to have a potent effect on Italy's attitude in the present war. He has always staunchly advocated Italy's adherence to the Triple Alliance and joining Germany and Austria in the war. In this attitude he engendered much feeling against himself. His death has removed the greatest obstacle which existed to Italy's taking up arms on the side of the allies.

PARIS, October 16.—Germany is planning the sacrifice of her new reserve army in a final desperate attempt to crush France. Realization of this came home to everyone here to-day when the war office announced that the allied line now extends from Ypres to the sea. This new line, including Britain's newly arrived forces and French reserves from the south of France, was created to prevent the general outflanking operations by enormous numbers of German reserves reported traversing Germany en route to the battle front. One report reaching here placed the number of these fresh hordes at not less than 240,000 men, with all branches of the service included.

LONDON, October 16.—As was the case just a week ago with Antwerp, so it was to-day with Ostend, that is to say, its occupation by a German army is momentarily expected.

Forbes And Hardie Are Both Confident

All arrangements are complete for the wrestling match between Alf Hardie and Jack Forbes at Brock Street Rink, to-night. Both men are in good shape and both are confident of victory. The hour's wrestling last week showed them most evenly matched, and few of the fans are able to pick a winner, so even was the going. A large number of ring side seats have been arranged for to-night and a special mat laid down. It should be a grand battle.

Instead of Jimmy Milby, who was announced to box in the preliminary bout with Geo. Hubbard, Kid Dallas will don the gloves with the Birmingham lad. Altogether it looks like a big night's fun.

Italian Sentenced by Magistrate Dumble in Police Court This Morning—Couple go to Gaol

OTHER CASES HEARD

F. Piper pleaded guilty to creating a disturbance in a house on Brock Street on Saturday night, October the third, at the police court this morning. He had the option of paying a fine of five dollars or spending the next fifteen days in gaol. He took the latter. Margaret L. Duncan, who has been living with Piper, in spite of the fact that she knows he has a wife and child in the Old Country, and who was quarrelling with Piper, at the time the arrest was made, also pleaded guilty and was fined two dollars or ten days in gaol. She had no money and had to go to gaol. The Magistrate stated that if she was willing to give up her present mode of living and go under the guidance of the matron for a while, he would let her go. But the young girl never answered a word. She left the court room in company with Mrs. McElripey.

One Month in Gaol.

Philip Carpoon, an Italian, was sentenced to one month in gaol for stealing a shirt valued at fifty-cents, from the store of Samuel Jay yesterday afternoon. James Sharman, a salesman in the store, stated that the prisoner and two other Italians, came into the store to look at some trousers. They did not buy anything, but after they went out a shirt was missing from one of the counters. In company with an officer, Sharman went to the house where Carpoon was living and the shirt was produced. The Italian was placed in custody. Carpoon stated that he had been drinking, giving that as his excuse for the theft.

Manuel Hannah, who is wanted in Avonhurst, Sask., for the theft of a team of horses, and who was arrested here on Wednesday night, was remanded for a week to await the arrival of an officer.

London Daily Mail Pays Canada a Splendid Tribute—A Living Picture of the Empire in Action

FAVOURABLE COMMENT

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Oct. 16.—In the leading article on the arrival of the Canadian troops, the Daily Mail pays Canada a splendid tribute. "What Plymouth was privileged to witness was something more than the arrival of so many thousands of hardy, natural soldiers." The paper says: "It was a living picture of the Empire in action; the scattering of all illusions of imperial disintegration with which the Germans have bemused themselves. This was a spectacle hardly to be paralleled since the crusades. A feature which appears to have struck competent observers of Canada's contingent most favourably is the general atmosphere of maturity about the men. "These fellows won't take much licking into shape," declared one grizzled non-commissioned man, who doubtless has been enduring some trying moments recently in training new home levies into shape.

Victoria Patriotic Association To Raise $100,000

Will Not be Affiliated With the Dominion Association

Lindsay Post: A very successful meeting was held last night for the purpose of organizing a Patriotic Association. There were a large number of prominent citizens present and the matter was thoroughly discussed, and put in a clear light and on a sound basis to suit the local situation. It was decided in organizing to call the Society the Victoria Patriotic Association and that it would embrace not only the town of Lindsay, but the whole of the County of Victoria, as well as Haliburton also.

Mr. J. D. Flavelle was elected President, Mr. J. R. McNeillie, Secretary Treasurer, and Mr. T. H. Stinson, Assistant Secretary-Treasurer. The Association, it wil be noticed is not affiliated with the Canadian Patriotic Association, whose charter limits it to devoting its money only to certain well-defined and limited channels.

CARD TO THE ELECTORS

THE ELECTORS OF EAST CITY.

I have been a resident of the City of Peterborough for many years, and am well known to the residents of the East Ward. I feel therefore, that I have a right to become a candidate for Alderman in the East Ward, at the request of many Electors.

My platform will be, that greater efforts should be made to induce the Street Railway to enter the East Ward, by the Hunter Street Bridge, and I would strongly urge a revote to be taken on the Dalhousie Street Bridge, in order that an outlet might be given for the workingmen of the East Ward, to get to the factories, without coming up to Hunter Street to cross the river.

You are aware, that the streets and sidewalks in East City have not received the attention to keep them in a proper state of repair. This should be remedied, and by an energetic campaign, which I can give, East City needs will be brought to the attention of the Council, and sufficient appropriation obtained, to keep the East Ward in a proper state of repair. This is the main thoroughfare for the whole traffic coming from East Peterborough, and from the North side of Peterborough County into the City of Peterborough, and we are entitled to a larger proportion of the city's monies to be expended for the benefit of East City, which will result in the ultimate benefit to the merchants and business men of the City of Peterborough.

If elected, I assure the residents of East City that I will make every effort to see that the affairs of my Ward are properly conducted and takes care of, that the street lighting is installed to properly light East Ward, and that East City will not have the grounds to complain, by reason of neglect, at the hands of the City Council.

I remain,

Yours truly,

G. L. HAY.

DEMAND REVENGE

Loss of Cruiser Hawk Has Aroused the British People and the Admiralty is Criticised

TO BALANCE SCORE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng. 5 p.m. (Special cable.)— All Britain was demanding revenge to-day. The loss of the armoured cruiser Hawk, with practically all her crew, is in itself no serious disaster to Britain's sea strength. There are plenty of war craft and lots of volunteers to take her place, but the almost uninterrupted series of successes to the German submarine operations has called forth a chorus of criticism of the Admiralty that cannot be checked without a stern blow with resultant success. It is evident that the submarine struck a blow far from the German coast, close to the British naval base of Aberdeen. Because of this fact the bewilderment grows. Where is the British fleet? That is the question on everyone's lips this evening. Of course an authoritative answer to the question is not forthcoming. The Admiralty is making no comment, but its chiefs, in their attitude, make it plain that news will soon be forthcoming that will balance the score with the German navy.

CHEERING NEWS FROM "OAK HALL"

Prices of all Their New Fall and Winter Clothing to be Dropped to Help the Masses

"What's the use of talking about alarming conditions when there is no such thing as alarming conditions in Canada," said Sir William Mackenzie a short time ago, speaking about the prosperity into which the Dominion would soon plunge. And the average man who sits down and calmly reviews the situation, will be inclined to echo the question of the railway king. Here we are now confronted with almost daily evidences of the resolute manner in which Canadian manufacturers are "hewing to the line," and adjusting their business in the interests of the masses. One sample of this is seen right at home in the announcement made by the local branch of the Oak Hall Clothing Company, announcing a general sacrifice of profits on all their clothing, in order to share in the work of lightening the burden of living during these strenuous times. Partly through the co-operation of their Hamilton factory, profits will be a secondary matter in every transaction this fall. Beginning to-morrow morning the local Oak Hall branch store will, in conformity with this arrangement, make a general sacrifice of profits on all suits, overcoats and haberdashery in their store. Examples of the reductions in prices will be found in their large page advertisement which appears in another part of this issue.

He is supposed to have been thrown out after losing control of the car from striking sand. An inquest is being held.

THE CRUISER HAWK SUNK BY SUBMARINE IN THE NORTH SEA

While on Patrol Duty, British Warship is Torpedoed and Nearly Five Hundred of Her Crew Are Drowned--Sister Ships Obeyed Admiralty Instructions and Did Not go to the Rescue.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, October 16.—England has lost another cruiser through the activity of the German submarine fleet. The cruiser Hawk, utilized for scouting purposes off the German naval base in the North Sea, has been torpedoed and sunk with the loss of about five hundred officers and men. The disaster took place yesterday afternoon at a point in the North Sea whose location is withheld by the Admiralty. The Hawk was steaming along when she was struck almost amidships by a torpedo sent by a submarine, and was torn almost to pieces. According to an official announcement issued by the Admiralty at 12.05 this afternoon, three of the Hawk's officers and forty-nine men have been saved.

While comparatively an old vessel, the Hawk was especially suited for the work assigned to her, that is, patrol duty. She is the warship which just missed sending the giant White Star liner Olympic to the bottom of the English Channel, when she rammed the passenger liner, during a fog in 1911. The Hawk was an armoured cruiser, 380 feet long, 60 feet beam, and had a displacement of 7,950 tons. She was built at Chatham, and went into commission November 3, 1891. She carried a crew of 544 men and officers and was armoured with a belt of six inch armour. Her armament comprised two 9.2 inch guns, ten 6 inch and twelve 6 pounders, and she carried two submerged torpedo tubes.

The Hawk, Theseus and the Gibraltar, sister cruisers, were engaged on patrol duty when the attack was made. The first torpedo was launched against the Theseus, but it is reported that it missed its mark. The submarine immediately dived, and the cruisers with their guns manned stood by watching for her to rise. It is not yet known whether the crew of the Hawk saw the submarine rise to the surface, but she must have been in close because her torpedo simply shattered the doomed cruiser. Because of the admiralty orders that comanders of warships in case of submarine attacks must consider that their first duty is to their ship, no attempt was made by the other cruisers to go to the rescue of the crew of the Hawk until all danger was over, and to this is attributed the great loss of life among the complement of the sunken vessel.

Most of the crew of the Hawk had stripped when the crash came in an effort to swim until help should arrive. All of the movable fixtures, wardroom tables and the like, were thrown overboard to furnish something to cling to while swimming, but because of the length of time that of necessity elapsed between the sinking of the cruiser and the arrival of help, most of the crew sank. The water was intensely cold and it was almost impossible for the swimmers to remain afloat for any length of time.

PLYMOUTH, ENG., October 16.—Two of the Canadian contingent were buried at sea, and one man in a Montreal regiment was arrested as a German spy.

TOKIO, Japan, October 16.—With all the non-combatants reported as safely out of the fortified German position at Kiao-Chau, the British-Japanese expeditionary army forces and the combined fleets off shore are bombarding the place continually. Part of the fort batteries have been destroyed.

SIR ROBERT'S CHANCE.

Sir Robert Borden now has a chance to show whether he is a statesman or a politician.

KITCHENER KNOWS.

Some persons are in dread over the threat of German Zeppelins dropping bombs on London. Do these fearful persons imagine that Kitchener is hiding in a cellar?

REMEMBER THE BOYS.

Princess Mary of England has issued an appeal for contributions to the amount of half a million dollars, to provide Christmas presents for the forces in the field—these presents to include pipes for Tommy Atkins and candies for the Indian troops. We owe our fighting soldiers a remembrance like this. They are enduring hardships and making sacrifices in the interests of those at home, to an extent that we, who are not on the scene cannot appreciate. It would be a cheering thing to the soldiers on the field to feel that they were being remembered at home at Christmas time; and though the religion of our Indian troops does not associate any special significance with Christmas, a remembrance at Christmas, representing the spirit of Christianity, will make strange appeal to them. They, as well as our own Tommies, deserve recognition, for they like the soldiers of our blood, are helping to the triumphs of the principles of peace; signified in the celebration of the birthday of the Prince of Peace. Our own Canadian troops should be specifically remembered on Christmas day. Surely with proper effort there can be found in Canada thirty-three thousand persons, who will each be willing to contribute a personal present for every individual Canadian soldier at the front. With wise leadership and prompt action this can be done. Time is stealing on, and if anything is done in this direction, it should be done promptly. The moral effect—the encouragement, the heartening of each Christmas remembrances would be morally very great.

CIVIC CARELESSNESS.

Hamilton city is in trouble. It is just discovering by means of a judicial investigation that it has been robbed to the extent of "tens of thousands of dollars" by means of false cheques for work—that was not done—for street material that was not delivered. That this could be done was due to lack of system, one of the curses of municipal government. It was no doubt helped on by the bad example, by the city council or its committees—being untrue to their trust. For years the most pressing need of the city hospital of Hamilton was a motor ambulance. An appropriation was voted for one but it is to be used for another purpose. This is a wrong way of doing things, a breach of trust. When employees see officials doing wrong things like this it seems a venal offence to them to divert, by means of bogus cheques, to their own pockets, money intended for city service. We know a city not far from Peterborough, where a large sum of money voted by the people for a specific purpose was wrongfully diverted to other purposes. There is no evidence or even a hint that every cent was not accounted for—was not illegitimately expended for legitimate purposes. But the principle is wrong. It is an irregular and mischievous way of doing things and suggests a carelessness in regard to responsibility that lessens public confidence in civic administration, and may easily represent an example to others to justify to themselves the perpetration of wrong-doing as in the case of the manipulation of bogus cheques in a Hamilton gravel contract. A reasonable system of civic administration in Hamilton or elsewhere, a rigid adherence to the right way of doing things would make less possible the suggestion or use of wrong-doing in regard to the misuse of civic funds.

"EVERY KNOCK, A BOOST."

This is the time that tries men's souls and brings out the grim determination of Britons, at home and abroad to bring this great war to a triumphant end. Difficulties instead of daunting, make more dogged the British spirit. Everything combines to develop and intensify this spirit. The threat of bombarding London with Zeppelin bombs is the strongest recruiting agent that could be imagined. Every bomb dropped in London will be worth a brigade. Many wiseacres shook their heads and saw imminent portents of disaster in the mutiny of Col. Maritz, a British-Boer officer in the north of the Cape provinces. But it has been a blessing in disguise. It has shown us a danger in time to take precautions against it. But it has had a greater result. It has fired General Botha, the Premier of the South African Union, to take the field earlier than he had intended to do. This act of treason and disaffection has fired the spirit of the Boer commandoes and they are flocking to the standard of General Botha, as they probably would not have done so promptly and so strongly, without the danger revealed by the mutiny of Col. Maritz. It has brought commandants, field cornets and berghers, who served under General Botha in South Africa, rallying to his call; it has brought wavereers to decision and they are flocking to General Botha's standard. Kaiser Wilhelm can't bulldoze John Bull or terrorize Britons—every outrage committed on civilians and cities, every act of vandalism, is a stimulus to more energetic action. It may be a long way to Tipperary, otherwise, Berlin, but the way will be travelled and the goal reached. The Kaiser will find that, in the language of the street, "Every knock's a boost." That Teuton terrorism, brigandage, and savagery, will nerve arm anew and raise new arms to smite militarism and organized tyranny to extinction.

CHURCHILL'S "RATS."

Considerable criticism has been given the First Lord of the Admiralty, for what is considered his "ill advised boast" as to digging out the German navy "like rats from a hole." This sentence, taken by itself, seems like bluster. But as Britain plumes itself in its fair play, it is fair to give Churchill fair play. Half truths are dangerous, and it is dangerous very often to wrest a few words from the context. This practice enables many an isism-ist to prove almost any absurd doctrine from Holy Scripture. The full reports of Mr. Churchill's speech—not the cabled summary—show that his remark was not quite so bumptuous as it is made to appear. What Mr. Churchill said on this point is this:

"The navy cannot fight, so long as the enemy remains in port; but if the German fleet does not come out and fight, it will IN THE END have to be dug out like rats from a hole."

The qualifying phrase, "in the end" greatly modifies the naked statement, "like rats in a hole." What Churchill evidently meant was, that when Germany is defeated on land, as in the end she is sure to be, her navy would be dealt with. He did not evidently mean any foolhardy attempts were to be made to dig out the navy like rats from a hole, till the time was ripe. A statesman's utterances should be taken for what they obviously mean and should have the benefit of reasonable interpretation. The arm chair critics will always be with us. The man in the street who can edit a paper better than the editor belongs to a large family.

CRY FOR RETRIBUTION.

The innumerable crimes committed by the German armies cry aloud for retribution. In our uncultured way, we and our allies will in our own good time take heavy toll for them. There is no act of pillage, of vandalism, of outrage, and of murder committed by the Germans in this war which will not in the end recoil upon its ruthless perpetrators. Already the good name of Germany is blackened forever, and her soldiers and statesmen, their hands stained with the deeds that can never be purged, look in vain throughout the world for a single sign of human sympathy. Their whimpering appeals are treated with scorn. The black and ineffaceable facts are their only answer. The allies have clean hands, and when in turn they march through Germany they will keep them clean. Their disciplined armies will never lapse into the calculated demoralization of the German hosts.—London Times.

BE OF GOOD CHEER.

Therefore, let Canadians take part and be of good cheer. There never was any danger that the Allies would be defeated. There is no possible combination of forces, known or unknown, which can prevent the destruction of the power of the man who has claimed to rule in Germany by divine right. Germany itself will not be crushed, but the mediaeval feudalism which has hung as a mill-stone about its neck will be removed. There can be no peace until the Germany army is crushed and the German navy is transferred to other owners. That means a long, long war. Great Britain has made up her mind that the work must be done thoroughly so that it will not be necessary to do it a second time. Indeed, a long war can be prevented only by some accident or event which will remove the Kaiser from the throne of Prussia and from his leadership in the German confederation.—Canadian Courier.

STERN REALITIES OF THE SITUATION TOO SERIOUS FOR DISTRACTING ISSUES

The people of Britain, throughout all social circles, and in every district of the United Kingdom, are facing with dogged resoluteness the stern realities of this war. They put first things first. Sport and fashions and play give place to enlistment for war service abroad or for national defence at home. The social leaders are organizing for the care of the needy left behind and for ministering to the wounded at the front. The man who would scheme to make private gain out of his country's distress, and the politician who would pay for his own or his party's advantage, are alike counted among the traitors. Carson's attempt to raise again the Home Rule cry and Churchill's foolish boast about digging out the Germans "like rats out of a hole" were both instantly rebuked by the high seriousness of the whole nation. With the supreme interests of their homes, of their country, and of the world's civilisation at stake, the people of the motherland are in no mood any more either for playing at cricket or for playing at politics. With their men and boys, a million of them, gathering for the most searching war of the ages, they are willing to face only stern realities.

Some one asks if Canada is even yet ready to take things seriously. Thirty-three thousand Canadian soldiers are gone. Twenty thousand more are needed now. A hundred thousand must be got ready. If this does not sober the Government and people of Canada, then, as a people, we are incurably flippant.

Private citizens with relatives and friends from the home lands at the front are serious. Already family circles, from the highest to the lowest, are broken past all earthly repair. One man who trims lawns and tends furnaces said with his soft south of Ireland accent yesterday: "Sure, I had twenty-two close blood-relations from Tipperary in the trenches at Mons; how many of them are left I don't know." Such men are serious. And serious, too, are men like the Hamilton citizen whose four sons will never return from the awful slaughter. Facing these stern realties strong men are always serious.

And the possibilities of the near future, indeed the imminent probabilities—for a hundred thousand homes in Canada that must face for themselves war's stern demands, and for many hundred thousand more to whom the days will come shadowed with war's inevitable accompaniments, make it impossible for any man anywhere in Canada, with brains in his head and a heart in his body, to go about as though this year was just one in a decade. It is for all Canada a year of the sternest realities.

And it is because of these realer things that it comes with surprise and humiliation to know that the responsible leaders of this Dominion are here and there in party caucus scheming for party advantage at the expense of the country's honour before the world. Several of these men are openly distrusted by their colleagues in Parliament and by Government supporters in the country. From them, as from any other political gamester, nothing honourable is expected, least of all regard for honour and the country's weal. Let them pass. Let pass, too, those on the Press and among the heelers who look to share in the campaign funds raised from Government contractors. They are only for the loaves and fishes. But what about men who profess patriotism and honour and a culture that is not wholly Prussianised? Sir Robert Borden, Sir George Foster, Hon. W. T. White—have they at last been bullied into submission by the Bernhardi arguments of "party necessity"? Have they surrendered to the men whose political philosophy repudiates reason and honour and rests on Brute-force?

Let them count the cost. Belgium to-day may suffer what the braggart people call defeat, but while history tests the shame of dishonour and the brand of the coward will be theirs who for a seeming strategic advantage counted their nation's good name a thing for trifling. Do the Government leaders in Canada judge the morality and patriotism of their party supporters so low that, with their present huge majority, success in an election two years before the time, and when a truce to party controversy has been declared, would be a thing of which honourable men anywhere would be proud? To be a Belgian refugee to-day is better than to be the Prussian King.—The Globe.

IS CANADA TO BE DISGRACED?

To-day we publish a statement by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, giving the leader's views on the possibility of an election this year. It is characteristic of Sir Wilfrid that he refuses to believe that Parliament will be dissolved before Christmas because there is a matter of honour involved. Scrupulous to a degree in such matters himself, the Knight of the White Plume is ready to give his adversaries credit for the same high sense of honour. Excepting the politicians, all Canadians will hope that Sir Robert Borden will prove himself strong enough to resist the pressure that is being brought to bear upon him to bring on a flag-flapping election and assure his party of a full term in office.

A fortnight ago The Herald and Telegraph warned Canada that the publication of the dying despatch to the New York Wall Street Journal and its means of dissemination throughout this country were part of a plot of the party in power to test the feeling of the country. There is absolutely no doubt that this was actually done.

The response was not encouraging, but it is well-known that Mr. Rogers is the member of the Cabinet who is always referred to by his colleagues is being "practical"—and all that that means—when an election is in sight. He is keen for an election in November. He sees nothing incongruous, or dishonourable or even in bad taste in holding an election now when the Opposition is loyally observing the pact which declared a truce to party strife. Mr. Rogers thinks he sees victory in such methods, for he has just recovered from the blow—almost a knock-out—that he got in Manitoba a few months ago.

That the danger is not yet averted is apparent from a statement in one of the best-informed Conservative newspapers last evening:

There are many politicians close to the Government who are figuring on the probability of dissolution and a general election with polling towards the last of November. Numerous apparent activities, in quarters that are busy when elections occur, might be regarded as justifying that surmise. It must be emphasized, however, that while the rumours are persistent, and come from usually well-informed sources, there is yet nothing by the way of official confirmation and no very conclusive decision one way or the other.

Sir Wilfrid points out that there is a document bearing the signature of His Royal Highness which, from an honourable point of view, should make an election this year impossible. Mr. Rogers, however, has a notorious precedent for describing an honourable agreement as "a scrap of paper." Is he going to follow it? — Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

A REPORTER-KING.

King Albert of Belgium a few short years ago was working as a police reporter on the St. Paul Pioneer-Press. When he made his first trip through the United States, he was struck with the newspapers that confronted him. He said, in recalling his career, that he had desired to take up newspaper work, because he believed it a calling in which men saw life, and served their fellowmen. His old comrades he had desired to take up newspaper per reporter, not because he was specially favoured by the proprietors, but because he "made good." He was unknown as a prince, except to one or two persons, and that he was a hail fellow well met.

One of the present King's assignments was to interview the famous Bill Nye. Believing that Bill, in spite of the fact that he was reputed to come humour, might have trouble in retailing off a column or more of witticisms, the reporter asked his fellow-writers to prepare the anecdotes. Bill Nye agreed to let them be published as his "stuff." Albert showed some ingenuity, which brought a raise in salary.

A naturally-endowed reporter is a looker-on at the great drama of humanity, and King Albert must have became a better man for having worked "before the mast" in an exacting profession. But to-day he is one of the central actors in the greatest tragedy that has ever occupied the great, sanguinary stage of life. He "saw life" as an American newspaperman, perhaps with the thought that, though he must some day became a nation's gilded figurehead, he would play the game of living for a while. Now, he looks with his wise, sad eyes upon a plethora of slaughter. A sea of his countrymen's blood has rolled to his feet, as though the dykes of another terrible world had been swept away. He could have saved his country himself. But, not his honour. Whatever may be said of his newspaper training, it did not take away his innate sense of honour, though we do not believe it gave it to him. But his life, in a sense, brings honour to a profession that builds or tears down on the honour of mankind, and we know that newspapermen in Canada and the United States are given an example that will not be lost, for on The Advertiser are two men who worked at one time on the same paper as this man-king, and we know they were visibly affected as they read the account of his activities in the very haunts they had come to know themselves. This hell-sent catastrophe illogically radiates a thousand clear lights of honour and courage upon the world.—London Advertiser.

PRIVATE HOBBS' OUTFIT.

Private Hobbs at Salisbury Plain was writing a letter home; haversack for a desk, candle and pencil. He had just been going over the contents of his haversack and knapsack and his war equipment. Here is a cheerful and pointed extract from his epistle to Dad:

"Just been reading about the way they found those German corpses on the battlefield, Cheerful? Not exactly. But it set me thinking. Was there a single iota in one of those outfits not made in Germany? I guess not. Those German-born Jacobs were outfitted by German labour; and if one of them found he had a toothbrush made anywhere else, well I guess he would have written a letter to the Kaiser to say something was wrong with the Fatherland.

"Well, I've been going over my Tout Ensemble, Dad, and I rejoice to remind you that whenever they lug me off with a hole in my leg, if they do, it will not only be a hole in a good all-Canadian leg but also a good Canadian boot that the bullet went through. And if I swing a German it will be with a rifle made in Canada a good Canadian bullet. So I rejoice to itemize, as Hashimura Togo, would say:

"Made in my own country whose regimental badge I have on my shoulder, to wit:

"Khaki, rifle, cartridge belt, boots, service cap, socks underwear, blankets, overcoat, handkerchiefs, brush and a good Canadian bullet. So I razor and comb, toothbrush, tecetera.

Sorry to relate—razor made in Germany, but shall swap as soon as possible for a Sheffield; pipe made in Austria—won't do. Also a few other knicknacks not Canadian. So my dear Dad, reassured that your one and only is going towards the Rhine with as far as possible a Canadian-made outfit, see to it that you and the rest of them do likewise. Buy Canadian things made in Canada pater. That's the way you and the rest can keep up your end. For I guess if "Made-in-Germany" hadn't been as much a slogan along the Rhine as "Gott Mit Uns"—well Germany never could have started her machine against the world as she has been doing.

"Finally Dad—Three Cheers for the Maple Leaf, which I should like to have stamped on every baffy thing I wear and carry when I get to the spot where everything matters or nothing.

Your Canadian-born son,
HARVEY.

GERMANS STIRRING THE TURKS

New Yorker Says Their Influence is Dominant in the Army

ENGLISHMEN HUSTLED

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—J. Wheeler McGovern, who has an office at No. 46 East Seventeenth street, has been in Asiatic and European Turkey since last June until his return last Monday, and had ample opportunity to observe the war preparations all over the Ottoman Empire.

"Conscription," he said, "is going actively forward regardless of whether Turkish citizens have served their three years' service or not; every man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five is being forced into the army. Each man, too, is forced to bring to the barracks with him five days' provisions. The result is that the villages are being depleted of foodstuffs and there is an immense amount of destitution.

"All the banks in Palestine are closed. The Ottoman Bank in Constantinople, which is the Government bank, is paying only 5 and 10 per cent. of their money to depositors. The reason given is that the bank expects war and the Government will not allow it to pay out more to any one depositor. I was lucky enough to have a friend in the bank at Palestine, where I had a small personal account, and he arranged with the Roman Catholic Patriarch to let me have enough from the church funds to get me as far as Constantinople.

Militarists In Control.

"Turkey is entirely in the control of the military branch of the Government. There are two factions in the country, the conservative, led by Vihdei Pasha, which is averse to war, and the younger, which is literally shrieking for war. The younger element are continually advised by German officers, and every move they make is dictated by Germans, who are either in the Turkish army or in some semi-official position at Constantinople or some other point.

"Under orders from the military authorities the Turkish soldiers have seized all the stores they think will be available in case of war. All the horses of any probable use have been commandeered, no matter to whom they belonged. The American Ambassador, Mr. Morgenthau, was driving about five miles outside of Constantinople, when two Turkish troopers seized his horses and took them back to the barracks and he was forced to walk home. Within twenty-four hours after he had made a vigorous protest the horses were returned to him with an abject apology for the troopers, who were merely carrying out their orders literally.

Hate Englishmen.

"All the corner houses in Constantinople have been taken by the military and converted into stations for recruits and as depositories for stores. The foreigners are at their wits out of their wits. All the embassies are fortified and all the Americans in Constantinople are armed. The American Embassy is equipped with two rapid-fire guns and every American house in the city has quantities of arms and ammunition stored.

"There seems, however, to be especial enmity against Englishmen all over Turkey. They are openly insulted everywhere. In Smyrna I saw Englishmen pushed from the sidewalks, slapped in the face and subjected to other indignities."

Mr. McGovern says that in Egypt the feeling among the Moslems is decidedly hostile to the English. Since the regular troops were withdrawn there is considerable uneasiness in Cairo and Alexandria over the attitude of the Moslems in those cities. They pay no attention to the orders of the Khedive, he says, and are anxious for European invasion.

Fomenting Holy War.

"There is no doubt," said Mr. McGovern, "that Turkey is trying to foment a Holy war. In three days 8,500 men were recruited in the little town of Hebron in Palestine and marched to Jerusalem, thirty miles away. When the troops are mobilized they are marshed to the mosques, where they engage in prayer for an hour or two, and when they come out there is a marked difference in their demeanour. They sing hymns and yell execrations at Christians, Jews and, especially, the Ottoman Greeks. The Greeks and Jews are forced to bear the brunt of the assaults on person and property. A Christian can secure exemption from war duty by paying 1,000 francs. There is no exemption for the Moslem—he has to do military duty anyway."

When he left Turkey Mr. McGovern says, there were 45,000 men mobilized at Mabunus and over 25,000 at Jerusalem, all under the supreme command of German army officers. He states also that the two warships that Turkey is said to have purchased from Germany are exclusively manned by Germans. The Dardanelles is heavily mined from one end to the other.

"If a boat wants to get out safely it must be escorted by a Turkish gunboat."

FIRED.

A well-known judge often relieved his judicial wisdom with a touch of humour. One day, during the trial of a case, Mr. Gunn was a witness in the box, and as he hesitated a good deal and seemed unwilling, after much persistent questioning, to tell what he knew, the judge said to him:

"Come Mr. Gunn, dont hang fire."

After the examination had closed the bar was convulsed by the judge adding:

"Mr. Gunn, you can go off; you are discharged."

How An Army Is Fed On The March

Work of A. S. Corps

LONDON, Oct. 14—The feeding of the army and the system by which supplies are forwarded from the base and issued to the troops at the front is not one of the least interesting and complicated problems of a modern campaign. Supplies of food and forage reach the base from overseas and are forwarded thence by rail to railhead. This is some station sufficiently advanced for motor transport to keep up communication between it and the troops, and at the same time not so far advanced as to be nominaly exposed to attack from the enemy. Railhead must be connected with the army by good and suitable roads.

All railhead supplies are transferred from the train to motor lorries. These vehicles are organized with personnel and travelling workshops into formations designated supply columns. Each supply column is a separate and complete unit, and there is one of these units for every division.

38 Three-ton Lorries.

The supply column for an infantry division consists of 38 three-ton lorries, of which one is for postal services and 27 for conveyance of one day's food and forage for 17,000 men and 4,000 horses. The remaining ten lorries are partly for first aid and partly for emergency work. The 27 supply lorries are divided into four groups, three o four lorries each and one of 15 lorries.

The three groups of four are for the infantry brigades in a division. The remaining group is for all the mounted units of the division. This disparity in the numbers of the lorries is accounted for by the amount of forage to be carried. Each infantry brigade group is loaded as follows: One lorry with bread, one with meat, one with groceries, and one with oats.

Transfer of supplies.

As soon as the supply column is loaded it makes its daily trip from railhead to rendezvous. This spot is fixed by corps or divisional headquarters the previous night, and is some central position well in rear of the troops it is supplying. As soon as the tactical situation admits, a refilling point is decided upon to which the supply column advances from rendezvous, here meeting the horse-drawn vehicles of the supply section of the train. Supplies are then transferred and the supply column returns to railhead (which may or may not be the same station as on the previous day), while the supply section of the train proceeds to the troops.

The supply train waggons on arrival in the area where troops are billeted proceed direct to their own regiments, or batteries, and hand over their supplies. Then they return empty to some central position in the billeting area, and are parked for the remainder of the night. Next morning they proceed to the refilling point, repeat the programme of the previous day.

NOURISHING FOOD.

As regards the food itself, it is ample and very nourishing. The daily ration for each man consists of—Bread, 1 1-4 lb., or biscuit 1 lb.; fresh meat (frozen), 1 1-4 lb., or tinned meat 1 lb.; jam, 1-4 lb.; bacon, 1-4 lb.; cheese, 3 oz., sugar, 3 oz., tea, 5-8 oz.; salt, 1-3 oz.; rum, 1-2 gill, and occasionally tobacco 2 oz. per week; fresh vegetables, 1-2 lb. daily when procurable, or lime juice.

The hours of work of the Army Service Corps have been long and arduous, while the work itself has been very fatiguing and often dangerous. Twenty-two hours' work out of 24 have been the rule, rather than the exception, marching and loading by day, delivering to units by night. The work has always been cheerfully carried out, for the A.S.C. realize that if their lot is hard, it is a bed of roses compared to that of their brethren of the fighting, foot-slogging infantry.

Last Way in Raid.

At 10 o'clock on the night of Aug. 26—26 one supply column lost its way in the rain and darkness when endeavouring to find its own brigade in the outpost line. It stopped at a road sign-post only to find on comparison with the map that the column was a mile outside its outside lines and in close proximity to the enemy.

The feelings of the officers in charge can perhaps be imagined. One a.m., a dark night, a strange country, close to the enemy's lines with five noisy lorries with thrumming engines and flaring headlights. It may be asked why in the circumstances headlights or any lights were permitted. It was a case of Hobson's choice. Either no lights and a certainty on a dark wet night of driving into the ditch in the narrow lane and remaining there or lights with the risk of drawing the enemy's fire. Eventually the vehicles were turned round, the right road discovered, and the units, for whom the supplies were intended, found.

Iron Rations.

In addition to the ordinary daily ration each soldier carries in his haversack an Iron Ration of biscuit and tinned meat to be kept as a reserve. On the morning of August 24 during the last day of the battle of Mons and the first day of the retirement this ration was consumed by the troops, since it was impossible to deliver the normal ration to them in their battle positions. With each brigade is a requisitioning officer who supplements the soldier's ration by requisitioning supplies locally, and who is provided with a motor car to carry out his duties.

On the 24th, two supply officers succeeded in requisitioning some newly-baked bread, which was loaded in the cars. Under a very heavy rifle and shell fire this bread was carried rapidly along the line behind the barricades manned by the troops, and issued to the soldiers. Rifle and shrapnel bullets knocked up the dust in the road along which the cars were driven.

One car, which was hit in two places, but not seriously damaged, conveyed wounded men from the firing line to the hospital. In addition to the danger from bullets and shells the cars ran considerable risk of damage from the condition of the road, strewn as it was with pieces of stone, brick, chimney pots, glass, and telegraph wire brought down by the shrapnel and high explosive shell.

Ran Into Uhlans.

The supply and requisitioning officers in their cars have to work on the front and flanks of the main bodies of the troops; much of the work is done at night, and considerable risks have to be run from small detached or scouting parties of the enemy. One morning in the dawning light and in a thick mist a car ran into an outpost of Uhlans, muffled up in their heavy cloaks and half asleep. Before they realised that the car was British it had been smartly turned round and vanished again into the mist.

On September 10th in daylight a car with two officers and the chauffeur ran suddenly round a corner into four German infantry men. It was too late to turn the car, so one of the officers immediately sprang out and, drawing his revolver, advanced towards the party. In very good English one of them informed the officer that they had already surrendered. One of the men was shot through the lower part of the leg, and was being attended to by a British chaplain attached to the Cavalry Brigade. On the same date forty Germans surrendered to a small party of A.S.C. of the 3rd Division Train.

Delivered in Dark.

During the fighting of September 9 and 10, and the British pursuit of the Germans on the following days, the supply section of the train delivered the supplies to the troops in the outpost line during the darkness. The waggons would reach the position about midnight, and would be left in the road until the officer in charge had discovered the various units. This could only be done by tramping across country, falling over wire and into ditches, walking through hedges and over stubble fields, suddenly challenged out of the blackness by sentries with rifles at the "present" and nervous fingers on the trigger, ignorant even of the general direction of the outpost line, constantly misinformed by sleepy piquets as to the position of the next unit, the A. S. C. men were in constant difficulties in their search for their battalions, while the danger was always present of running into the enemy's outpost line.

Miracle of Cook.

During the great battle which began on September 12 the roads from refilling point to the troops in the trenches were always under the enemy's accurate shell fire. On the 13th the Germans by chance dropped a high explosive shell under the cook's waggon of the G.O.C. 3rd Division. The shell exploded and demolished the vehicle, horses and driver. The cook miraculously escaped with only a wound. So accurate was the shell fire that the roads were impossible during daylight, and it was only at night that supplies could be forwarded. Even at night the roads were not safe, and were shelled periodically in the hours of darkness.

On the nights of the 12th and 13th attacks on the outpost line were being made when the supply convoys arrived. Bullets and shells flew over the train, one high explosive dropping a few yards from the waggons. Only one casualty, however, occurred, one man being hit by a bullet in the spine. During this great battle the troops nightly received their following day's supplies in quantities more than sufficient.

THE NOVELIST'S CONSOLATION.

"How did your novel come out?"

"Well," replied the self-confident man, "it proved beyond all doubt that it isn't one of these trashy best sellers."

RATHER HAZY.

He is carried away by the spirit of the times and remained away for several days. He came to himself, his own room, without knowing exactly how he got there. A friend sat beside him.

"Hello! I became ill on the opening day," he said. "What day is this?"

"Never mind the day," said the friend. "This is the twentieth time I've told you."

"Well, I became ill on the opening day," he said, thoughtfully. "Let me see. Thursday, isn't it?"

"What became of Wednesday?" he asked.

Services At St. James' Church

Those present at St. James' church last night were privileged to hear the Gospel presentation of the atonement in a way that was at once convincing and comforting. Mr. Crossley made the message clear and plain. Not a few took advantage of the opportunity to enter into a covenant with Jesus Christ as they heard, believed, were willing and trusted in Him. Logic, song, incident after incident were splendid in producing conviction. This was the last song sermon. To-night Mr. Crossley will speak on "Seven Royal Proclamations." It is hoped that there will be a rally of young people as well as of those older in years. Every denomination and church is being represented at the meetings. Mr. Crossley considers to-night's subject one of his strongest sermons. Be sure to hear him.

Germans Boast Of Their Spies' London Work

Say More Useful Than An Army Corps on the Field of Battle

LONDON, Oct. 15.—It is not much news that reaches here about life in Berlin at the present time, all we learn being what may be obtained from women refugees, who arrive in England in exchange for women sent back to Germany.

"The continuous arrival of wounded soldiers, many of whom are literally dragged from their beds and sent back to the battlefield before they have recovered, is about the only warlike thing about Berlin," said a woman who has just arived from the German capital.

"Every cafe, every shop and hotel is transformed into a Red Cross [illegible] there is no distress and no unemployment. When war was announced the shops raised their prices. But at the Kaiser's command they were lowered again. The bakers then made smaller loaves and cakes, but again the Kaiser intervened, and everything is normal.

"The Kaiser is very popular. From the windows of my hotel I used to see him riding along the Unter den Linden every morning. He looks much older than his portraits. His hair is grey, and there are deep furrows in his cheeks.

"'The Holy War' is the name by which it is known in Berlin. In a window in the Wilhelmstrasse is shown a huge bronze bust of the Kaiser, set around with modern and mediaeval arms, and behind it is an enormous crucifix. Among the German picture post cards, next in popularity to one representing three miserable looking Jack Tars, gazing over an empty, desolate ocean, inquiring, 'Where is the English Navy?'—the answer, of course, being, 'Demolished by the Germans'—is one of the Kaiser addressing the populace, with an extract from his speech headed 'Der Kaiser Spricht.'

"But public spirits were very much damped five days after the celebration of the anniversary of Sedan, and when they were expecting news of victories from the Crown Prince, a telegram arrived asking for woollen mufflers for the men, and hum, and 'attic'—'attic,' I believe, being a drug given to revive courage in soldiers.

"They openly boast in Berlin that they have an army corps in the very middle of London which is doing more useful service to them than if it were on the battle lines."

This woman also gave a conversation she had with an English engineer who had been employed in a German government factory before the war broke out.

"The new siege guns," he said, "which made such havoc at Liege are very short and stumpy. On account of their tremendous cost they can only be used for very large fortresses. The weakness in this particular mode of warfare," the engineer added, "is that they can only be worked by a very few specially trained men from Krupp's."

At the factory where this engineer worked—of course he was dismissed immediately when hostilities began—they had just finished one hundred and fifty locomotives, and were turning out weapons of warfare as fast as they could be manufactured.

NEW COTTAGES FOR STONEY LAKE

Stoney Lake does not seem to be affected much by the general depression so noticeable in cities. Instead, it is going ahead at the usual pace started four or five years ago, when there was a revival of interest in this section of the Kawartha Lakes.

Muskoka has had its day, and the next decade should see Stoney Lake riding in on an immense wave of popularity; especially if Sir Adam Beck waves his magic wand over Peterborough and builds a radial railway through Lakefield and Young's Point to Burleigh Falls. Should such a scheme be carried out Stoney Lake would jump ahead by leaps and bounds.

Young's Point, Kawartha Park and Burleigh Falls would become the chief distributing centres for the lakes. Values in their vicinities would shoot sky high.

In the meantime many improvements are on the way, some nearing completion, and others planned for the future.

Mr. Fraser, of Hamilton, who has purchased the second large island east of Burleigh Falls, proposes erecting a handsome summer home thereon. Work will commence next spring.

Mr. Will Jones, of Toronto, who owns the cottage "Roxie," on Eagle Mount, will build a two-storey boathouse.

Mr. Clink, steward in the University of Toronto, who has bought a lot adjoining the Langford farm, east of Viamede, will build a cottage next summer.

Mr. Hugh Robb, a new cottager near Crowe's Landing, is building a launch house.

Mr. L. H. Grahame is having an icehouse added to the equipment at his cottage. Mr. John Cassidy has the contract.

Mr. Hamilton, near Crowe's Landing, has had some repairs made to the piers of his launch house.

Miss Ray has had a room added to the northwest corner of her cottage "Rayburn."

Mr. Robert Neil is erecting a launch house with cement piers at his cottage "Clear View," on "Leather Island." He already has a garage at Bryson's Landing to house his automobile.

Mr. Walters, of Montreal, who has lately come into possession of the old Leech property, has a large gang of men engaged building a launch house. Mr. Richard Simpson, of Lakefield, has the contract for the cement work.

Mr. and Mrs. Watson have just returned to Baltimore, Md., where Mr. Watson is professor in the John Hopkins' University. They have probably the most unique summer home in Stoney Lake. It is entirely the work of their own hands, even to the building of the foundation, and an elaborate fireplace. Mrs. Watson was as enthusiastic as her industrious husband and ably assisted him throughout their long vacation, which extended from the month of May.

Their home is of the bungalow type, one storey. Granite boulders, found on the property, were used in the foundation and walls of the porch, which extends across the whole front. The sides of the building are shingled and the gables are covered with V-jointed boards. The ample porch, the generous windows and the broad slope of the roof give the exterior an air of hospitality and repose that is very homelike.

German News Bureau Has Killed British Army Twice With 800,000 Frenchmen

And They Claim to Have 800,000 Russian Prisoners—Imaginary Hoax Imposed a Lying Sheet Upon Liege—Belgians Organize a League of Remembrance.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—That "decking out the news" is as much of a favourite indoor sport among German journalists at home as abroad is indicated by a despatch from Geneva published in La Metropole, of Antwerp, on September 21, copies of which reached New York yesterday. According to this despatch German newspapers have already twice destroyed the British field army and all but a handful of the French forces. It reads as follows:

"A reader of la Suisse has calculated that the Wolff Bureau in its news telegrams has already given the French loss as 800,000 killed, wounded and captured. The Germans pretend to have captured 17 generals, 1,213 standards and 11,882 guns. According to this same agency the British army has already been twice destroyed.

"As to the Russians, the Germans say they have made eight hundred thousand prisoners, who have been taken to Berlin."

La Metropole then quotes the Hamburgische Correspondens, which in its issue of September 12, it asserts, announced that the German army has taken a grand total of 280,000 prisoners of the Allied armies. Of this number 88,700 were Frenchmen, 1,830 being officers; the Russian prisoners totalled 91,00, of whom 1,830 were officers; the Belgians totalled 30,200, 440 of whom were officers; the British prisoners were 7,360, with 160 of them officers. Outside of this the German account stated that two generals, two generals-commandant and thirteen others were taken.

"One might ask," continues La Metropole, "by whom the German armies are being fought; the Germans, it is true, however, have no sense of humour."

German Newspaper in Liege.

In the city of Liege the Germans have established a newspaper, printed in both German and French, called L'Ami du Peuple, which translated means The Friend of the People. Against this sheet La Metropole fulminates in most approved Belgian newspaper style. Some extracts from La Metropole's articles are worth translating.

"Finding it impossible," says La Metropole, "to make any of the newspapers of Liege resume publication, despite the shameful pressure placed upon them, the Prussians who dishonour by their presence the bold and honourable city of Liege have hit upon a new combination. With the aid of Volksfreund, of Aix-la-Chapelle, and its managing editor, Herr Max Roeder—to call this reptile by its right name—they have printed a bilingual edition, of which we have received the first issue, dated September 16. The entire paper, four small pages, is composed of but eight badly printed articles. * * *

"Herr Roeder, who serves as affable interpreter for the barbarians, grossly insults our country in one lucubration by saying that it is related to the German people.

Calls Kaiser "Attila II."

"He touches the depths of his degradation by terming as 'noble emperor' the savage beast whose real name is 'Attila II.'

"The Enemy of the People reproduces * * * an article upon the commerce between Belgium and Germany before the war, in which the only point left untouched is that this commerce served above all to support in our midst a horde of traitors and spies.

"When we add," La Metropole closes, "that it is published in language which would make a six-year-old Belgian schoolboy blush with shame, we have said enough to make it understood that not a single Liegeois reads the ignoble sheet."

How the German military authorities collected a number of Alsatian recruits from the French army is related in a despatch from Macon published in La Metropole. According to this article, when the Germans decided to call out the recruits of 1915 and 1916, the young Alsatians liable to duty were gathered at Thann, in upper Alsace. There were nearly 8,000 of them there when the place was attacked by a French column.

After a short resistance the Germans began to retreat. The recruits were told to follow them," but once out of the town the young men scattered in all directions, the greater part of them succeeding in reaching the French lines, where they were welcomed. Most of them decided to enlist in the French army, and they have been sent to various garrison posts. More than 3,000 of them passed through Macon in the long trains, the youths being decorated by the young women with garlands of flowers as they passed through the various towns on their way to Privas.

Form "Ligue du Souvenir."

Patriotic Belgians are organizing throughout their harassed country a "League of Remembrance," to instill a hatred of all things Germans into the Belgian people. Evidence of this feeling of implacable anger against the German invaders was brought to this city in La Metropole. Upon the front page is a direct appeal to the Belgian people to join the newly organized association, which is called the Ligue du Souvenir.

Belgian editors and publishers are requested to collaborate in the publishing of a book containing duly attested photographs and official documents relating to German atrocities in Belgium.

"In order to give this publication the grave and definite character which it should have," says La Metropole, "and to fasten in all Belgian hearts for the ages and ages to come a hatred for the German name, these photographs must be accompanied by the official text of the commission of inquiry upon the atrocities."

The "League of Remembrance," says La Metropole, will pledge itself to erect suitable tombs to the memory of those Belgians who died fighting for the defence of their country, and to place plaques or other memorials in all localities where crimes have been committed by the Germans or that have been devastated by them.

Will Work For Needy Children

Parents' Circle of Queen Mary School Hold Meeting

The first business meeting of the Parents' Circle of Queen Mary School was held on Thuraday afternoon, Oct. 15, in the school room, the president, Mrs. Waugh in the chair. A general discussion took place as to the best ways and means during the winter. It was decided that much good work could be done through the co-operation of the teachers handing in the names of all needy children to the circle. A committee was then appointed to take up this work starting next week. The meeting was largely attended.

URIC ACID IN PENDING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Power Companies Consider Offer

From Utilities Commission—City to Get 60 Cycle Meters at Half Price Through Hydro Commission

At a meeting of the Utilities Commission last night letters were received from the Otonabee Power Company and the Electric Power Co., acknowledging the receipt of letters from the Commission offering to buy the out-of-town part of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, and that part of the Otonabee Power Co., which does not duplicate the P. L. and P. system. The letters promised that attention would be given to both propositions.

Manager Howse reported that the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission had fixed a price of $4.10 for the C.G.E. and Westinghouse meters which are being taken out at Walkerville He had arranged for their purchase. These meters are 60-cycle ones, and as Walkerville's system is being changed to a 25-cycle service, they have to install new meters. The local system, however, is 60 cycle and the meters will fill the requirements here. The city is saving nearly fifty per cent on them, as the C.G.E. instruments are listed at about $9.00 apiece and the Westinghouse nearly as high. The city is getting them at $4.10 each.

A letter was read from the Toronto Savings and Loan Company in regard to expenses in connection with a leak in the water service of Richard Hall's store. It was decided to offer the Company $95.05 without prejudicing the city's side of the case, to settle the question.

A letter was read from Mr. John Oliver, secretary of the Nicholls Hospital Trustees, saying that the trustees accepted the suggestion of the Commission regarding the water rates for the hospital.

The manager was instructed to purchase an adding machine for the new office.

Services Held At Fairmount

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Your kindness in giving me space in your excellent and newsy paper in the past for advertisement, encourages me to further presume upon your generosity.

The anniversary services at the "Fairview Appointment," on Sunday, Oct. 11, were of unusual interest and profit.

Rev. Gipsy Simon Smith, of Toronto, preached morning and evening to audiences as large as the church building could accommodate.

When I first met Mr. Smith I was convinced that I was griping the hand of a Christian gentleman, even though reared in a Gipsy camp. His manner in the pulpit is very pleasing, he rivets the attention of his audience before he utters a word. He is mild and unassuming in his style of utterance and holds the attention of every hearer from start to finish. His plain earnest way of telling the Gospel story is very impressive, at times provoking the smile, again moving many to tears. His lecture entitled, "From Gipsy Camp to Pulpit," is undoubtedly among the best, most interesting, and most helpful, that I have heard, for the encouragement of young men to make much of themselves. The Gipsy's visit with us will not be forgotten.

The people at Fairview Appointment have greatly improved their church property, have renewed the church both inside and out, and have just completed their splendid new closed shed. The cost of church repair and new shed, about one thousand dollars. All provided for, no debt.

J. F. IRELAND, Pastor.

The Tenant Has The Bulge On The Landlord These Days

Pity the poor property owners in these days of stress. The word comes from all sections that while rents are down, the property assessment and tax rate show no signs of weakening. Taxes are inevitable and inexorable. The city requires a certain amount of money for debenture interest, sinking fund, permanent work and the usual departmental necessities, and it must come from the land. Hence the man who pays rent is facing a scale that shows a tendency to decrease. Your property owner, however, the man who is keeping the city going, wears a cheerful smile, pays the same old tax bills, thanking his stars when the rate is nailed down to previous limits. Just now, the house owner finds families doubling up in many cases and practically no opposition is offered to the practice. Under the weight of war, the holder of residences finds his revenue considerably curtailed. And the feature that heats his collar is the fact that his taxes remain as high as ever. In a lean season he realizes the fluctuations to which rentals are subject, and is inclined to wish he was a mere tenant with his money in 5 1-2 p.c debentures. At the present time the property owners are facing the enforced situation of decreased rents and hopes for the early return of the former conditions.

AN INSTANCE OF HOW WAR OPENS NEW MARKETS

Another Welland industry is going to benefit as a result of the conflict of nations. Electro metals, Limited, one of our pioneer industries, has begun the construction of a seventy-two foot addition to the main furnace building. Twenty-five men will be added to the one hundred and twenty already employed at that plant. In the present building there are three furnaces and the addition will provide room for two more.

Shortly after the outbreak of hostilities last August a perceptible increase in the orders was seen and from that time the firm has been rushed with orders from all parts of the world. This plant is one of the few on the continent which manufacture ferro-silicon, a compound essential to the making of the finest steels. Formerly firms in Northern France supplied the large steel and gun factories in France and England. Now this work has had to be stopped and gun factories which are still kept going at full time are calling on the American market to supply their needs. Not only are the European markets to be supplied but others in distant parts.

Electro Metals has shipped ferro-silicon in the past month to Russia and Japan. This is the first shipment they have ever made to those countries.—Welland Telegraph.

TURNBULLS

TWO GAMES OF RUGBY TO-MORROW

Both P.C.I. Teams Will Meet Out of Town Aggregations

Two games of Rugby will be furnished local fans at Riverside Park tomorrow afternoon when the P. C. I. first team will meet the Lindsay College first, and the second P.C.I. fifteen will play the T. C. S. third team.

The first game will be between the local juniors and the Port Hope college squad, and will start at two o'clock. The local juniors have been practising and training every afternoon since the beginning of the season and should be in shape to make things warm with the T.C.S. team a real live engagement.

The locals have improved very noticeably since the beginning of the season and are in good shape now. The Bengogville Collegiate, however, is said to have a fast, but heavy, line-up and it is likely that this game will be one of the best to be seen here this season. The local students have been rustling the pigskin industriously and look to give a good account of themselves to-morrow. Their line-up will be: Centre half, Long; right half, Smythe; left half, F. Jobbit; quarter, Knapman (capt.); flying wing, A. Huycke; outside wings, Carmichael and McNeeley; middle wings, Eastwood and Cassiff; inside wings, Austin and Smythe; scrimmage, Mrs. Stevenson and Crawford.

CASE IS PROCEEDING

The case of John McGarvey, charged with stealing the sum of $85 from Harry Hamilton, an East City Chinaman, was resumed this afternoon before His Honour Judge Huycke, and who promptly at 2 o'clock to

CABLE RESULTED IN HIS ARREST

BRANTFORD, Oct. 15.—The arrest by the police to-day on instructions from Col. Elliott at military headquarters in Toronto, of A. S. Van Westrum of this city, a member of "Westrumite," caused a sensation. A cable message to his sister-in-law, saying, "Come at once, delay is dangerous," caused suspicion, but his friends explained that he was arranging for a sister-in-law, who is a German, to return to join her husband, who is said to be in Switzerland. Mr. Van Westrum was allowed to go free after investigation by an officer from Toronto. He declared he was Dutch, not German; and if Holland joined the allies he would be among the first to join the troops to fight with them. He was a prominent citizen in the recent patriotic campaign

JEALOUSY THE CAUSE

TORONTO, Oct. 16.—In what is believed to have been a fit of jealous rage, James Howitt, a clerk who said he lives at 36 Kerrard Street east, is alleged to have drawn a revolver early last evening at the corner of Broadview Avenue and Queen Streets, and attacked Mr. and Mrs. John R. Richardson of 33 Boston Avenue.

According to the police, Howitt claims that he married Mrs. Richardson some time ago, but Richardson denies this. When Howitt was searched at Pape Avenue police station several cartridges were found, while four chambers of the revolver were loaded.

As the man and woman stood on the street corner waiting for a car, Howitt, it is alleged, walked up to the couple and shouted that he intended to kill them. Richardson, in self defence, [illegible] appearing with [illegible] grasp.

CHILDREN POISONED

An Unusual Case is Reported in Toronto

TORONTO, Oct. 16—Exhibiting unmistakable signs of belladonna poisoning, according to Dr East, an east-end physician, two children, Christina Berkeley, 502 Eastern Avenue, and Helen Sanderson, 313 Logan Avenue, both of whom are five years of age, are now lying in an unconscious condition at their homes. They had been in the throes of violent convulsions since late yesterday afternoon, and had not recovered consciousness at an early hour this morning.

The young girls had purchased a "grab bag" in a nearby store late yesterday afternoon, according to the information given Acting Detective Nursey and Plainclothesman McKeown. After disposing of the contents they had carried them home, and after they had [illegible] light meal [illegible] sick. [illegible] son child, as soon as she had eaten her supper surprised her parents by going to her bed. Within a short time she was crying for assistance. A doctor, who was summoned, diagnosed it as belladonna poisoning.

On the strength of this the police officers visited the grocery stores of Harry Layden and E. Cousins, on Eastern Avenue, and carried away all the "grab bags" in the shops.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR THE SOLDIERS

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Princess Mary has issued an appeal in which she says:

"I want you all to help me to send a Christmas present from the whole nation to every sailor afloat and every soldier at the front. On Christmas eve, when, like the shepherds of old, they keep their watch, doubtless their thoughts will turn to [illegible] and [illegible] Perhaps, too, they will recall the days when as children themselves they were wont to hang up their stockings wondering what the morrow had in store.

"I am sure we will be happier on Christmas morning to feel that we have helped by sending our little token of love and sympathy—something useful or of permanent value, the makers of which may be the means of providing employment in the trades adversely affected by the war.

"It is hoped that the appeal will result in the raising of $500,000 for the provision of gifts taking the form of an engraved brass tobacco box or cigarette box, pipe and tinder lighter, and candles for the Indian troops.

POLITENESS IN THE FAMILY.

"How is it that a man can carry an umbrella over another man's wife more satisfactory than he can over his own wife?

He cannot. He just thinks he can because the other man's wife is too polite to tell him what she thinks of

THE WORLD OF SPORT

HOW THE STALLINGS MEN WILL USE THEIR MONEY

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 15—Promoters of wildcat schemes are hereby warned to pass up the "Boston Braves." The world's baseball champions are wise young men and they have resolved that not one cent of their winnigs of $2,818 each will fall into the hands of promoters, or 'Con' men.

However, persons who have good producing farms to sell or who control banks that pay good interest may approach the champions without risking the possibility of being booted across the threshold. The boys are open to reason on the question of farming and banking.

"I'll assassinate the first person that approaches me on the subject of investment," declared Captain John Evers. "I invested all I had a few years ago—and I lost it all. No more investments. My little roll goes right into the bank—and the soundest bank I can find."

"Going to use some of yours honeymooning?" "Hank" Gowdy was asked. It may be recalled that "Hank," the batting hero of the series, was reported as about to become a benedict.

"Mix on that honeymoon talk," responded "Hank." "I'm not going to get married, not right away at least."

"And say I wish you would deny that report about me getting married. There are a couple of nice girls I know and if they hear I am supposed to marry another girl they will cut me."

"But what are you going to do with the money?" we asked again.

"Well, I guess I will spend five cents of it buying myself a glass of beer. It's been a long time since I had any beer—been in training you know, but I guess five cents worth won't hurt me now. The rest of the money goes into the bank."

Pitcher Dick Rudolph, who beat the Athletics twice, plans to use the money as a part payment on a bungalow.

"I've always wanted a bungalow and now I will get one," said Rudolph.

Charles Schmidt, the huge first baseman will use his money in the purchase of a home in Baltimore Schmidt, who is wealthy, owns several large butcher shops in Baltimore, but says that he won't buy any more—at least—not with his world's series winnings.

"Rabbit" Maranville, the whirlwind shortstop, said he is going to put his money in the bank.

"All the other money I get hold of is going into the bank, too," said Maranville. "My ball playing days will be over some time and when they are I'll want to have enough money laid aside to enable me to start in a good, paying business."

Charley Deal, third baseman, is going to buy a farm near Wilkesbarre, Pa. Oscar Dugey, the utility infielder, will buy a farm near his home in Palestine, Texas, and 'Josh' Devore, substitute outfielder will buy a farm near Chillicothe, Ohio — his home town.

Pitcher Bill James will buy some stock in a mine in Placer County, California.

"It's a good paying proposition, and it's safe," said James. "So that's where my money will go. No frivoling it away for me."

"Ted" Cather, outfielder, will place his wad in the bank "until such time as I see a good safe investment."

Outfielder Whitted will buy some real estate with his share, and Larry Gilbert, another outfielder, will do the same with his.

Pitcher Crutcher was the only Brave who admitted the possibility of part of his money being spent in the purchase of a "moderate priced automobile."

The Braves, it seems are not afflicted with automobiles as were the Red Sox, Giants and Athletes.

Pitchers Tyler and Cocreham are among those who will buy farms. Tyler wants to get one somewhere up in New Hampshire near his home, while Cocreham wil buy a farm around Luling, Texas, his home town. Catcher Bert Whaling, who hails from Seattle, will be another farm purchaser. He has picked out one in the state of Washington.

Joe Connolly, the outfielder, will put his money in the bank for the time being. "Later on I may buy a farm around Woonsocket, R.I.," he said.

The winnings of Pitcher Paul Strand, Utility Infielder Mitchell and Pitcher Geo. Davis wil go into the bank. Herbert Moran, outfielder, admitted that "I might spend a little first, but the great bulk goes into the bank."

"When I find it that's where my money will go," said Hess.

"Them's my sentiments," said Cottrell.

J. Carlisle Smith, the third baseman, is in a hospital at present suffering from a broken leg, but Smith, of a thrifty nature, undoubtedly will put his money in the bank.

BALL SEASON WOUND UP

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Except for a few echoes in the form of banquets to world's series heroes the 1914 baseball season passed into history to-day with the National Commission's settlements with players, officials and club owners concerned in post season activities. Owing to to-day's postponement on account of rain a game remains to determine the city championship of Chicago. But the representatives of the commission in that city have been instructed to effect a settlement for the triumvirate as quickly as possible.

The National Commission at a meeting in the Waldorf Astoria Hotel today instructed Secretary John Bruce to draw cheques necessary to square all accounts with those concerned in the world's series and the New York City championship series. Bruce mailed to Manager George Stallings in Boston a paper valued at $73,139, which is supposed to be shared equally by the members of the new world's championship representatives.

Graham, who superintended New York's series, met Fred Merkle and Roger Peckinpaugh at the Giants' Fifth Avenue building offices before noon, and turned over cheques of $9,537.91 and $6,358.61 respectively. The players were allowed to divide the money as they chose. Just how the split was made was not announced. But members of each team said that provision had been made for the respective trainers, Ed. Mackalt and Doc. Barrett, and for Groundkeeper Harry Fabian. The Giants also staked mascot Jimmie Ford to the price of a Winter wardrobe.

Mr. Graham departed for Philadelphia at 1 o'clock with a cheque for $48,769.63, which he was to turn over to Connie Mack at Shibe Park, where the former world's champions assembled at 3 o'clock for the division. It was understood though no official confirmation could be made, that Jimmy Walsh, of Philadelphia, and Pete Daley of the New Yorks, will share equally one portion of the loser's end of the world' series and the local series. This agreement was made at the time Mack traded Daley for Walsh.

Secretary John Bruce, of the commission, had instructed the representatives who handled the Cardinals-Brown series in St. Louis to settle with the Mound City players. So that as soon as the Chicago series is terminated the 1914 season will be officially wound up. Of course there is the tour of the All-Star teams of the National and American Leagues led by Frank Bancroft and Connie Mack, respectively, which will start for Chicago Saturday. And there will be no end of barnstorming in Cuba and elsewhere. But these are no concerns of the National Commission.

An informal meeting of the National Commission was held to-day at the Waldorf Astoria, though none of the members would acknowledge that anything but routine business was discussed. It is believed, however, that recent activities of the Federal League came in for consideration. The Federals are reported to have won over Ivy Wingo and Pitcher Perritt from the Cardinals, and First Baseman Ed. Konetchy from the Pirates. It was said about town this afternoon that Walter S. Ward, the business representative of the Brooklyn Federals, had interested three Giant players — Tesreau, Fletcher and Burns. This story President Harry N. Hempstead stoutly denied. He called upon Secretary John Foster to furnish an alibi in the form of signatures to contracts. It is said that the players whose names are mentioned are held by term contracts to the New York Nationals.

Both Presidents Ban Johnston and John K. Tener, of the American and National Leagues, are inclined to regard the latest Federal enterprises as a dying effort to avoid the inevitable. Governor Tener showed not the least concern over the reported desertion of technical league stars.

THREE PLAYERS ARE FANNED BY CUPID

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—"Bullet Joe" Bush, the Athletics' young hurler who made a game attempt to stop the Braves Monday, has been fanned by Dan Cupid, leading hurler in the Love League, for Joe will wed Miss Sylvia E. McMahon, of Bordentown, N. J., this morning in St. Columbus' Catholic Church in Philadelphia.

"We lost the world's series, but I'm going to be the happiest man in the world to-day, anyway," said "Bullet Joe."

After the wedding Bush and his bride will join the team of all-stars which will tour to the coast.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—George David Weaver, better known as Buck, shortstop and captain of the Chicago White Six, yesterday obtained a license to marry Miss Helen Cook, of this city. He gave his age as 29 years and his residence as Chicago.

"I never felt happier in my life This means four hits for me in the game with the Cubs this afternoon," said Weaver as he received the license.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14. — John P. Henry, catcher of the Washington American League Baseball team, and Miss Dorothy Lawrence Perry, of this city, obtained a marriage license yesterday and will be married here to-day. Henry lives in Amherst Mass., where he graduated from Amherst College. Miss Perry is the daughter of Charles G. Perry, of Hyannis, Mass.

Members of Lucky Club

Six of the players who have taken down a big divvy from the world series receipts this year are eligible for membership in the "lucky club" of baseball. When the season started not one of them felt there was the slightest chance of their mingling in a world series affair that means about $2,800 for each of the players on the losing team and $3,800 for the players on the winning team.

Those six players are: Johnny Evers, Ted Cather, Herbert Moran, J. Carlisle Smith, George Whitted and Josh Devore. All are members of the Braves.

Evers is the luckiest of all. Not only did he get a divvy of the players' share of the receipts, but in addition he got $2,500 extra from the Boston Club owners because the Braves won the pennant. Such a clause was inserted in his contract when he signed up last spring.

Evers' Salary Is Large.

Evers' contract called for a salary of $10,000 a year. In addition to this he got $500,000 when he signed his contract. Add to that the $2,800 bonus and his world series divvy and you'll find that he'll draw down just about $41,000 for six months' work.

But Evers' luck didn't begin just this year. He was with the Cubs in 1906, 1907, 1908 and 1910, when they won pennants and mingled in the world series. Evers' share from each of those series was around $2,800—a total of about $10,000.

Josh Devore, the "human football" in the baseball world, was pushed into a postion where he could grab off a share of the world series spoils this year. Josh was with the Phillies when the 1914 season opened, acting as substitute outfielder. The Phillies payroll was cluttered up with outfielders that Manager Dooin figured were better than Josh, and so, when Stallings made an offer for Josh he was sold in a jiffy.

Luck Follows Devore.

This isn't Josh's first lucky break in the way of world's series money. He was on the Giants' payroll in 1912 when they played the Red Sox. He got about $2,800 for his labours in the eight games. He also figured in the 1911 Athletic-Giants world series games and drew down about $2,500 for his work.

J. Carlisle Smith, third sacker of the Braves was with the hopeless Brooklyn Dodgers up to about six weeks ago. And then Dame Fortune smiled upon the auburn-haired party and he was sold to the Braves, thereby giving him a chance to take unto himself a divvy of the gold that is poured into the hands of the championship team players.

Herbert Moran played with the Cincinnati Reds until the latter part of August. He never dreamed that he would share in the world series money this year. Then came the shift in his fortunes. Stallings needed an outfielder. He bought Moran.

Traded in Mid-Season.

Ted Cather and George Whitted were traded to the Braves in mid-season—traded just at a time when the Braves were so far down in the rut that any one who would have predicted that they would win the 1914 pennant would have been hustled off to the booby hatch.

Last year it was Larry McLean, Eddie Grant and Arthur Fromme who joined the "Lucky Club." They were traded to the Giants near the end of the season, and joined the team in time to make them eligible for a divvy in the Giants' share of the world series money. Charley Herzog became a member of the club in 1911. He was with Boston until near the end of the season. Then he was traded to the Giants—in time to get into the "eligible for participation" class.

Ira Thomas Has Horseshoe.

Outside of Johnny Evers, Catcher Ira Thomas of the Athletics is about the luckiest man in baseball. He was with the Tigers in 1908 and 1909 when the Tigers mingled in the world's series doings. In 1910 he was sent to the Athletics. The Athletics won the pennant— and the world series — that year. Ira again got a divvy of the world series gold as he did in 1911 and 1913. He got another share this year.

The strangest part of Thomas' career is that he was turned adrift by the Yankees seven years ago. And this same man has played on six championship teams since then and received six different splits of world series gold. With this 1914 share counted in Thomas will have received between $17,000 and $19,000 simply because he was lucky.

BASEBALL CHATTER

From minor league bat boy to a world's series hero is a dream of every young American, a wish as common as to fight the Indians, become President or go to war. But only once in a century does fortune so smile upon impetuous youth. This series is the one and "Hank" Gowdy formerly "stick tender" of the Columbus American team, is the youth, grown to manhood, realizing his boyish wish.

BRAVES WILL LIVE LONG.

Governor John K. Tener, president of the National League, in recounting to-night the notable upsets of the series, said:

"The demonstration here shows a wonderful reversal in 'form' as applied to the 'fans'. A week ago some of the experts were bewailing the fact that the series was to open in Philadelphia because the novelty of the Braves would wear off in two days of hard usage there. No matter what the outcome of this series, the Braves will have a place in baseball history no less honoured than that of any team. When it is considered that the Boston National League team's spurt brought with it interest in the game itself that was necessary, for success for the 1914 season in the major leagues, the place of the Braves in the annals of the national game is established."

Harry Davis, the Mackian strategist, says that the Braves did not get the Athletics' signals and that an attempt to put forth that as an alibi for Boston's batting was not sanctioned by "Connie" Mack or the players.

"Jack" Barry's business associates in Worcester, where he has a garage, called upon the Athletics' shortstop, and were told to hold their heads up. Many admits that he is open to conviction, but hasn't seen anything to prove that the Athletics canned 'come through.'

Included among the guests to that of Barry and Collins against Manageville and Evers in the advanced points of infielding. The world's champions haven't erred in the field but have delivered one single against six hits by the Braves' middle station workmen.

"Luck" was still with the owners of the two clubs struggling for baseball glory for the day was another such as greeted the teams in Philadelphia. It was so hot, in fact, that the ambulances made nine runs with victims of heat prostration.

"Jack" Barry has earned a reputation in the American League as a 'pinch" hitter, but he does not resemble that Barry now. In three games Barry hit the ball out of the infield just once.

REIMS HIT AGAIN.

German Shell Works Damage—Count Bernstorff Explains.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—The Temps says that a German shell fell in the Rheims cathedral on Tuesday and destroyed the gallery of an apse. Three other shells, according to the newspaper, demolished a part of the law court. The Public Attorney was buried in the ruins of the court building. He was extricated, suffering greatly from shock.

German Version.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16. — Count Von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, announced that he had received the following wireless telegram from the Berlin Foreign Office:

"Close to Rheims Cathedral two French heavy batteries have been located. Light signals from one tower of cathedral observed. Of course, all hostile measures detrimental to our troops will be fought down. With regard to sparing cathedrals, France now, as formerly, responsible if venerable building becomes victim of war."

Woven wire poles for electric wires or lights have been invented by a Chicagoan.

Miss I. Smith Won The Prize

Large House Saw Local Artists and Webb Chamberlain Company Last Night

Last night was "Amateur" night at the Grand, and after the Webb Chamberlain had presented a splendid comedy-drama "The Yellow Streak," the local aspirants took the stage. A large audience witnessed the play and amateur acts.

Four acts of a very good calibre were given by the local artists, the prize going to Miss Ivey Smith, who sang "The Sand man." Miss Smith was encored and in making his award Mr. Chamberlain had the concurrence of the audience. Adam Davidson was a competitor giving a good dancing act, and Mr. Jas. Cartlidge was given a good reception. An unannounced black-faced comedian of local vintage also appeared, but his act and his reception were both somewhat dubious.

The "Yellow Streak," the fourth offering of the Chamberlain Stock Company, was well handled last night with Webb Chamberlain in the role of Rosebourn. The play was replete with good situations and was a splendid vehicle for the talent of the company. To-night they play "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde."

SUBMARINE IS SUNK

EDINBURGH, Oct. 15—According to The Scotsman, a German submarine was sunk by British patrol ships off the coast of Holland on Saturday. The newspaper gives this description:

"British patrol ships located a German submarine resting on the coast of Holland Saturday awaiting a supply ship.

"One of the patrol vessels smartly evaded the torpedo process and dislodged the submarine.

"Then there commenced a weird scene in the glare of the searchlight. It could be witnessed from shore.

"About 11.30 p.m. the enemy was escorted and forced to come to the surface for the last time.

"There was an immediate crash of gunfire and the submarine went to the bottom."

How Collier's Compliments "Cousin Canada"

As the war rages on and we find ourselves pinched by it, we can and do thank God for good neighbours. The most wonderful thing in North American life is the fact that for four or five thousand miles our frontier is Canada's frontier, and not only is there no fort upon it, but there is no place where anyone in either nation wants a fort. They are people one is glad to have next door, the Canadians. Sometimes a Taft or a Clark says something that makes us blush for him; but the nice thing about these people is, they understand what a loose tongue is and pay very little attention to it. A good deal used to be said about annexing Canada, and once in a while a man comes back from there so full of admiration that he wants to annex the United States to Canada instanter; but most of us feel—and we sincerely hope Canada can share the feeling — that just being neighbours is the best thing for both of us. We have the same problems in the main, and we are glad to have Canada show how she thinks they should be worked out. We have a good deal of common property in the lakes and rivers which lie between our shore and hers. It is a really beautiful thing to think of—in the war-torn autumn of 1914 — that we have never had a serious difference about this common property. This is a good time to vow that we never will. Our Lady of the Snows is not so cold as her title might lead one to think. She is distinctly our sort—and we hope she won't mind our saying so. The frontier is an imaginary line only. Thoughts are the true bond of friendship. Let us draw closer and closer to Canada in thought. Let us seek, nationally and individually, to foster the relations which make us thank God for Canada as a neighbour. After all, most of our history is the same as hers. We owe the same debt to Chaucer, Spencer, King Alfred, William the Conqueror, the Barons who operated on John at Runnymede, the Bill of Rights, the Petition of Rights, Shakespeare, Darwin, Spencer, Wesley, Newman, Washington, Pitt, and all that wonderful succession of poets, statesmen, soldiers, and scientists who have built British, Canadian, and American thought, art, and democracy. The lessening detail of differing governments should scarcely enter one's thought when thinking of Canada. In fact, it scarcely ever does.—Collier's Weekly.

CARING FOR WOUNDED.

Britain Has Thirteen Thousand Belgian Soldiers On Her Hands.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The directors of the Belgian Red Cross arrived in London yesterday with 600 wounded soldiers, the last of 13,000 who have been brought to England.

They left Ostend Wednesday morning, at which time 25,000 refugees, besides townspeople, were hoping to get away.

No satisfactory arrangement has been made for the return to their homes of those Belgians who crossed the frontier into Holland, although the Germans continue to try to induce them to do so.

There are many Antwerp refugees among the crowds at Dover. When some of these were asked if they would be willing to return to Antwerp in case arrangements for their repatriation can be completed with the German Government, they declared emphatically that they never would return so long as the Germans were in possession.

The captains of ships which already have docked declare they saw hundreds of persons leaving Ostend in small rowboats, hoping to reach some point on the French coast. Hundreds of others boarded little trawlers and sailboats, which are still straggling into Dover. Their passengers often have been without food for 36 hours. Many small boats from Belgium are also putting into Lowestoft and Felixstowe. These craft are manned mostly by volunteers, who know nothing of the British ports, and head in wherever they can see docking facilities.

"EMPIRE IN ACTION"

London Daily Mail Comments on Arrival of Canadians

PLYMOUTH, Oct. 17.—Hundreds around the railway stations at Plymouth, who sought their beds before the small hours, had a strange lullaby in the uproarious demonstrations of the Canadian contingent, who were being packed into troop trains and sent inland. The men were half frantic with delight at release from the troop ship.

The work of entraining went on right into the small hours. None of the men were aware of their destination.

In a leading article on the arrival of the Canadian troops, The Daily Mail says Canada a splendid tribute. "What Plymouth was privileged to witness was something more than the arrival of so many thousands of hardy natural soldiers." The paper says it was a living picture of the Empire in action, the scattering of all illusions of imperial disintegration with which the Germans have amused themselves. This was a spectacle hardly to be paralleled since the Crusades.

"The presence of this splendid body of men," says The Daily News, "is an an inspiration and assurance that however long the war lasts there can be but one end to the struggle. These Canadian troops are the practical embodiment of Empire devotion."

COMMANDANTS RALLY.

Boers United In Denunciation of Action of Rebel Maritz.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Pretoria says:

At a meeting of commandants representing all the free state north of Bloemfontein held at Kroonstad, a resolution was unanimously adopted denouncing the rebellion started in the northwest of the Cape province by Col. Maritz as a blot on the honor of the free state. The resolution pledged the fullest support of the commandants to the Government and requested a mobilization of the burghers to crush the rebellion.

"Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, Minister of Defence, thanked the commandants for their tender of support. He explained, however, that a mobilization was unnecessary as it would put more men in the field than would be needed.

"The action taken by the Kroonstad meeting is considered significant in view of the fact that hitherto the people of the Congo Free State were lukewarm regarding the campaign against the Germans."

Germans In West Want Exuberance of Canadian Papers Curbed.

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.—A petition to the Government which will hardly be acted upon has been received from the German-Canadian Alliance of Saskatchewan, requesting that certain restrictions be placed on the English press of Canada. The petition sets forth that the press "is not doing justice to German civilization, but is bound to do harm in this country by stirring up race hatred and ill-feeling.

"The work of upbuilding must be endangered if the press should without restriction continue unnecessarily to hurt the feelings of a considerable section of the Canadian people."

It Pays To Advertise.

OTTAWA, Oct. 17.— The Department of Trade and Commerce finds that it pays to advertise. Recently in the Canadian press advertisements were published urging each Canadian home to buy a barrel of apples, in view of the domestic market being glutted for lack of foreign markets. A booklet giving recipes for the use of apples is being issued by the Department, and over 20,000 applicants for copies of it have been received.

H.M.S. HAWKE DESTROYED

German Submarine Destroys British Patrol Cruiser in the North Sea

471 OFFICERS AND MEN

LONDON, Oct. 17.— Like a bolt out of the blue came the distressing announcement yesterday that another British warship has been sunk by a German torpedo boat. The Hawke, with a complement of 544 men was struck some time Thursday afternoon at a point in the North Sea, thought to be not far distant from the coast of Scotland. Three officers and 49 men were landed at Aberdeen by a fishing trawler. Later, the Admiralty announced that Lieut.-Commander Reseman and 26 men had been picked up on a raft, making the total number of survivors 78.

Sydney Austin, a boatswain of the Hawke, who was saved, apparently bears a charmed life. He was one of the few survivors of the cruiser Hogue. After the sinking of this vessel he was transferred to the Hawke.

Early yesterday morning the Admiralty issued the following statement, which has followed by two hours a despatch from Aberdeen stating simply that the Hawke was lost:

"His Majesty's ship Theseus, Captain Hugh Edwards, was attacked by a submarine in the northern waters of the North Sea yesterday, but was missed.

"His Majesty's ship Hawke, Captain M. P. Williams, was attacked about the same time and was sunk.

"The following officers, with forty-nine men of the crew have been landed at Aberdeen by a trawler:

"Boatswain Sydney Austin, Gunner James Dennis and Acting Gunner Harry Evit. The remaining officers and men are missing.

"Further particulars will be published as soon as available."

The Hawke, in company with her sister ships, the Theseus and Gibraltar, was on patrol duty. So far as can be learned the first intimation they had of an attack was when a torpedo was launched at the Theseus. The projectile missed its mark, and the submarine immediately dived. In a few minutes it rose again to the surface and fired a second missile at the Hawke, which simply shattered the vessel. Evidently the German was but a short distance away from the doomed ship.

Fearing the presence of the Admiralty that the safety of vessels be endangered before the lives of those on board a destroyed craft, the Theseus and Gibraltar steamed away at once. By this action they undoubtedly missed a debacle such as overcame the Cressy, Hogue and Aboukir a few weeks since. But the crew of the Hawke were left to their fate.

It is believed that in the short interim between the torpedoing of the Hawke and the sinking of the boat that the men making up her complement had time to throw tables, spars and other pieces of ship's furniture overboard. It is probable that a good many of the men secured pieces of this floating wreckage and maintained themselves for some time. However several hours must have elapsed before either of the Hawke's sister ships could safely return to the scene of the tragedy. The water being at a freezing temperature, few survived the exposure. Nor can it be stated whether their rescue was effected by the Theseus and Gibraltar or by the fishing trawler which brought them to Aberdeen.

The Hawke is the sixth warship to come to grief in the North Sea as the result of German submarine activity or by the action of floating mines. There is some doubt as to whether the Pathfinder, lost Sept. 5th, was sunk by a mine or submarine, and the same applies to the Amphion, blown up Aug. 6th, off the Dutch coast. The Cressy, Hogue and Aboukir went to the bottom Sept. 22, torpedoed by the German submarine U-9.

SAN GIULIANO DEAD.

Sad Blow To Central Empires Said German Diplomat.

ROME, Oct. 17.—The Italian Foreign Minister, Marquis Antonio di San Giuliano, died at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon after a long illness.

The marquis was taken ill a month ago with an affection of the heart. His illness attracted international attention, because of its possible bearing on the attitude of the Italian Government toward the war. The marquis is understood to have been friendly to Germany and opposed to the demonstrations that occurred in several parts of Italy some time ago in sympathy with the allies, but more particularly in a spirit of hostility toward Austria.

The Italian Premier Signor Salandra will assume temporarily the portfolio of Minister of Foreign Affairs made vacant by the death yesterday of Marquis Antonio di San Giuliano. This was decided upon at a council of the Ministers this afternoon. Nothing is known as to the intentions of the King or the Premier regarding a permanent successor to the office. It is stated from an authoritative source that the death of the marquis will not affect the foreign policy of the Government.

It is reported that the German ambassador to Italy when he heard of the death of the marquis, said:

"This is perhaps the greatest misfortune for the central empires since the war began."

The doctors say that the war did not cause the death of the Foreign Minister, but say that the end certainly was hastened by the strenuous work to which he submitted his already weakened constitution.

Hungarian Bishops Flee.

VENICE, Oct. 17.—(Via Paris.)—As the first approach of the Russians into Hungary, many bishops and members of the clergy fled from the threatened districts to Budapest. Tried To Wreck Train.

BROCKVILLE, Oct. 17.— An attempt was made to wreck the evening train leaving Ogdensburg in the south on the N. Y. C. R., a short distance out of the city, when a tie bridging with planking, was placed across the rails. An employe noticed the obstruction in time to clear it before the arrival of the train.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

"Great Scott!" he ejaculated, nonplused. "See what we're up against, will you? We've found 'em and they're ours, but—"

They stod considering a minute. All at once a dull metallic clang echoed heavily through the crypt. Despite herself, the girl shuddered. The eerie depths, the gloom, the skeletons had all conspired to shake her nerves.

"What's that?" she whispered, gripping Allan by the arm.

"That? Oh—nothing! Now how the deuce are we going to get at these—"

"It was something, Allan! But what?"

He grew suddenly silent.

"By Jove—it sounded like—the door—"

"The door? Oh, Allan, quick!"

A sudden, irresistible fear fingered at the strings of the man's heart. At the back of his neck he felt the hair begin to lift. Then he smiled by very strength of will.

"Don't be absurd, Beatrice," he managed to say. "It couldn't be, of course. There's no one here. It——"

But already she was out of the alcove. With the torch held high in the air, she stood there peering with wide eyes down the long blackness of the crypt, striving to pierce the dark.

Then suddenly he heard her cry of terror.

"The door, Allan! The door! It's shut!"

CHAPTER VII.
THE LEADEN CHEST.

Not, at any time since the girl and he had wakened in the tower, more than a year ago, had Allan felt so compelling a fear as overswept him then. The siege of the Horde at Madison Forest, the plunge down the cataract, the fall into the Abyss, and the battle with the Lanskaarn had all taxed his courage to the utmost, but he had met these perils with more calm than he now faced the blank menace of that metal door.

For now no sky overhung him, no human agency opposed him, no counterplay of stress and strife thrilled his blood.

No; the girl and he now were far underground in a crypt, a tomb, walled round with incalculable tons of concrete, barred from the upper world, alone—and for the first time in his life the man knew something of the anguish of unreasoning fear.

Yet he was not bereft of powers of action. Only an instant he stood there motionless and staring; then with a cry, wordless and harsh, he ran toward the barrier.

Beneath his spurning feet the friable skeletons crumbled and vanished; he dashed himself against the door with a curse that was half a prayer; he strived with it—and staggered back, limpid and shaken, for it held!

Now Beatrice had reached it, too. In her hand the torch trembled and shook. She tried to speak, but could not. And as he faced her, there in the tomb-like vault, their eyes met silently.

A deathly stillness fell, with but their heart-beats and the sputtering of the torch to deepen it.

"Oh!" she gasped, stretching out a hand. "You—we—can't—"

He licked his lips and tried to smile, but failed.

"Don't—don't be afraid, little girl!" he stammered. "This can't hold us, possibly. The chain—I broke it!"

"Yes, but the bar, Allan—the bar! How did you leave the bar?"

"Raised!"

The one word seemed to seal their doom. A shudder passed through Beatrice.

"So then," she choked, "some air-current swung the door shut—and the bar—fell—"

A sudden rage possessed the engineer.

"D——n that infernal staple!" he gritted, and as he spoke the axe swung into the air.

"Crash!"

On the metal plates it boomed and echoed thunderously. A ringing clangour vibrated the crypt.

"Crash!"

Did the door start? No; but in the long corroded plates a jagged dent took form.

Again the axe swung high. Cold though the vault was, sweat globuled his forehead, where the veins had swelled to twisting knots.

"Crash!"

With a wild reverberation a scream of sundered metal and a clatter of flying fragments, the staple gave way. A crack showed round the edge of the iron barrier.

Stern flung his shoulder against the door. Creaking, it swung. He staggered through. One hand groped out to steady him, against the wall. From the other the axe dropped crashing to the floor.

Only a second he stood thus, swaying; then he turned and gathered Beta in his arms. And on his breast she hid her face from which the roses all had faded quite.

He felt her fighting back the tears, and raised her head and kissed her.

"There, there!" he soothed. "It wasn't anything after all, you see. But—if we hadn't brought the axe with us—"

"Oh, Allan, let's go now! This crypt—I can't—"

"We will go very soon. But there's no danger now, darling. We're not children, you know. We've still got work to do. We'll go soon; but first those records!"

"Oh, how can you, after—after what might have been?"

He found the strength to smile.

"I know," he answered, "but it didn't happen, after all. A miss is worth a million miles, dear. That's what life seems to mean to us, and has meant ever since we woke in the tower, peril and risk, labour and toil—and victory! Come come, let's get to work again, for there's so endlessly much to do."

Calmer grown, the girl found new courage in his eyes and in his strong embrace.

"You're right, Allan. I was a little fool to—"

He stopped her self-reproach with kisses, then picked up the torch from the floor where it had fallen from her nerveless hand.

"If you prefer," he offered, "I'll take you back into the sunlight, and you can sit under the trees and watch the river, while I—"

"Where you are, there am I! Come on, Allan; let's get it over with. Oh, what a coward you must think me!"

"I think you're a woman, and the bravest that ever lived!" he exclaimed vehemently. "Who but you could ever have gone through with me all that has happened? Who could be my mate and face the future as you're doing? Oh, if you only understood my estimate of you!

"But now let's get at those records again. Time's passing, and there must be still no end of things to do!"

He recovered his axe, and with another blow demolished the last fragment of the staple, so that by no possibility could the door catch again.

Then for the second time they penetrated the crypt and the tunnel and once more reached the alcove of the records.

"Beatrice!"

"What is it, Allan?"

"Look! Gone—all gone!"

"Gone! Why, what do you mean? They're—"

"Gone, I tell you! My God! Just a mass of rubbish, powder, dust—"

"But—but how—"

"The concussion of the axe! That must have done it! The violent sound-waves—the air in commotion!"

"But, Allan, it can't be! Surely there must be something left?"

"You see?"

He pointed at the shelves. She stood and peered, with him, at the sad havoc wrought there. Then she stretched out a tentative finger and stirred a little of the detritus.

"Catastrophe!" she cried.

"Yes and no. At any rate, it may have been inevitable!"

"Inevitable?"

He nodded.

"Even if this hadn't happened, Beatrice, I'm afraid we never could have moved any of these parchments, or read them, or handled them in any way. Perhaps if we'd had all kinds of proper appliances, glass plates, transparent adhesives, and so on, and a year or two at our disposal, we might have made something out of them, but even so, it's doubtful.

"Of course, in detective stories, Hawkshaw can take the ashes right out of the grate and piece them together and pour chemicals on them and decipher the mystery of the lost rubies, and all that. But this isn't a story, you see; and what's more, Hawkshaw doesn't have to work with ashes nearly a thousand years old. Ten centuries of dry-rot—that's some problem!"

She stood aghast, hardly able to believe her eyes.

"But—but," she finally articulated, "there's the other cache out there in Medicine Bow Range. The cave, you know. And we have the bearings. And some time, when we've got all the leisure in the world and all the necessary appliances—"

"Yes, perhaps. Although, of course, you realize the earth is seventeen degrees out of its normal plane, and every reckoning's shifted. Still, it's a possibility. But for the present there's strictly nothing doing after all."

"How about that leaden chest?"

She wheeled about and pointed at the other side of the alcove, where stood the metal box, sullen, defiant, secure.

"By Jove, that's so, too! Why, I'd forgotten that! You're a brick, Beta! The box, by all means. Perhaps the most important things of all are still in safety there. Who knows"

"Open it, Allan, and let's see!"

Her recent terror almost forgotten in this new excitement, the girl had begun to get back some of her splendid colour. And now, as she stood gazing at the metal chest which still perhaps, held the most vital of the records, she felt again a thrill of excitement at the thought of all its possibilities.

The man, too, gazed at it with keen emotion.

"We've got to be very careful this time, Beatrice!" said he. "No more mistakes. If we lose the contents of this chest, Heaven only knows when we may be able to get another glimpse into the past. Frankly, the job of opening it, without running the contents, looks pretty stiff. Still, with care it may be done. Let's see, now, what are we up against here?"

FARMER'S WIFE ALMOST A WRECK

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Her Own Story.

London, Ont.—"I am a farmer's wife and a very busy woman. Last summer I was taken with severe pains in my back so bad that I could not get up or scarcely move without pain, and my periods were painful. My husband called in a good doctor and I was under his care for some time, but he did me little or no good. One day a friend of mine told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she had been greatly helped by it. I began taking it and soon got well, and my periods became natural again. Since then I have had perfect health. In fact I have never felt so well in my life. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine many women need. If you think this letter will help other women please publish it."—Mrs. E. C. YOUNG, Tambling's Corner, London, Ontario, Canada.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Found a Friend in Dr. Chase

His Medicines Proven Effective, and Always Kept at Hand in This Home.

Mrs. Chas. Lovell, Agassiz, B. C., writes:—"I feel it my duty to tell you what a great friend Dr. Chase's medicines have been to myself and family. I cannot praise his medicines too highly, and Dr. Chase's name is a household word in our home. Well, quite a number of years ago I sent to you for a sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment for protruding piles, and, having used the sample and found relief, I sent to a neighbouring town for four boxes, and I am completely cured.

"I have also used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for constipation, and, after using them, I am completely cured of this dreadful disease. I am the mother of ten children, of whom nine are living, and when seven of my children were all very bad with whooping cough, caught in the middle of a severe winter, I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and they were all cured before the winter was over, and now we are never without Dr. Chase's medicines in our home, and I recommend them to all."

Lord Roberts' Stirring Address to City of London Recruits

Something to stir the pulses of the City worker, to make him straighten his shoulders, and realise the peril in which our Empire stands, happened in London when thirteen hundred young men, who in less than forty-eight hours had responded to the call of the Lord Mayor for recruits to make up a new battalion of the City of London Regiment (the Royal Fusiliers), marched through the main streets to be sworn in at the Tower of London. Headed by the band of the Scots Guards, they made a splendid show, though still in mufti, and the procession swelled to thousands en route. It was a great recruiting effort.

First of all, they paraded in the grounds of the Temple, presenting a magnificent spectacle of British manhood. There they were addressed by Earl Roberts, hero of many a battlefield.

After inspecting the men and speaking to several who wore the South African medal, Lord Roberts said: "I am proud to be the first to welcome you as brother soldiers, and to congratulate you on the splendid example you are setting to your fellow countrymen, coming forward to take your places in the ranks as private soldiers, not seeking, as the vast majority of men in your station of life are seeking to be given commissions as officers. We require hundreds of thousands of soldiers, and of these only a minimum number can be officers. Moreover, it is absolutely essential that officers should be sufficiently trained and disciplined to warrant their being entrusted to command and lead soldiers in war.

"You are the pick of the nation, highly educated business men of various professions, and you are doing exactly what all able-bodied men in the kingdom should do, no matter what their rank or what their station in life may be.

"I respect and honor you more than I can say. My feeling towards you is one of intense admiration. How very different is your action to that of the men who can still go on with their cricket and football as if the very existence of the country were not at stake.

"This is not the time to play games, wholesome as they are in days of piping peace. We are engaged in a life-and-death struggle, and you are showing your determination to do your duty as soldiers, and, by all means in your power, to bring this war—a war forced upon us by an ambitious and unscrupulous nation—to a successful result. God bless and watch over you all."

WAS TOURISTS' FRIEND

Baedeker, One of the War's Victims, Was Guide Book Man

Tourists all the world over read with sympathetic interest the report that Herr Karl Baedeker, the publisher of the famous guide books, had been killed in action. This member of the Baedeker family was one of the grandsons of old Karl Baedeker, who was born at Essen in 1801, where his father had carried on a business of printer and bookseller, and who himself started in business in 1827 at Coblentz, where he died just over fifty years ago. His grave in that town is often visited by tourists.

It was old Karl Baedeker who first hit upon the idea of publishing a series of guide books for the different countries. The first guide book published by Baedeker was a small book on the Rhine, of which in 1839 he produced a third edition entirely rewritten by himself. Since then guide books for Belgium, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, the United States, etc., have been published in the principal languages of Europe, until to-day the word "Baedeker" has become almost a synonym for guide book.

TORTURE OF THE "PICKET."

A Form of Military Punishment in England in Bygone Days.

The "picket," an ingenious form of punishment by which a soldier in the days of old was generally inflicted on cavalry and artillery men and was a singularly brutal bit of torture.

A long post, near which stood a stool, was driven into the ground. The delinquent was ordered to mount the stool, and his right hand was fastened to a hook in the post by a noose, drawn up as high as it could be stretched, round his wrist. A stump the height of the stool, with its end cut to a round and blunt point, was also driven into the earth close to the post.

Then the stool was taken away, and the sufferer had nothing to rest his bare feet upon but the stump, "which, though it did not usually break the skin," says Captain Grose, "put him in great torture, his only means of relief being by resting his weight on his wrist, the pain of which soon became intolerable."

One can very well believe him, especially when he makes the addition that a man was not infrequently left to stand in this position for half an hour, although the orthodox period of endurance was fifteen minutes.—London Graphic.

Ornithological Weddings.

There was a poetic appropriateness in two weddings which were celebrated in London some time ago in which Mr. Bird led Miss Linnet to the altar and Mr. Wren was linked to Miss Nightingale.

Although it is seldom that one comes across two of these "ornithological" weddings in one day, they are by no means uncommon.

On one occasion a church near Dublin was the scene of an interesting marriage in which a Mr. Crowe was united to a Miss Crowe by the Rev. Canon Peacock, the wedding march being played by Mr. Rook. Much more remarkable, however, was a match which set Edinburgh in a flutter some years since. The bride was Miss Henrietta Peacock, and the bridegroom was Robin Sparrow. The Rev. Mr. Daw performed the marriage ceremony; Philip Hawk officiated as best man and Miss Larkins as principal bridesmaid, while the marriage lines were extracted by John Crow, session clerk.

"It is worthy of further remark," adds a reporter, "that the sexton's name is Raven, one of the pew openers is a Gull, and the assistant sexton is a Hen-ry Laycock."—London Tatler.

"WOMEN AND CHILDREN FIRST." How the German Applies It.

Military Files.

"Files on parade" means a body of soldiers, a troop or company marching in a file or line, not abreast, but one after another. We speak of the "rank and file," meaning soldiers who are formed so that they march abreast and also in ranks following each other. The term in general means the common soldiers below the rank of non commissioned officers. There are other file terms in military tactics, such as "file right" and "file left." As Kipling uses the term it means the common soldiers who have been called out for the purpose described in the poem of "Danny Deever."—Philadelphia Press.

"NORMAN" The NEWEST ARROW COLLAR

FLINGING THE CHAKRI.

One of the Dexterous Feats of the Clever Hindus of Gwalior.

There is a curious custom in Gwalior, India, the seat of Jain and early Hindu antiquities. In front of the mausoleum of a holy saint—Mohammed Ghous—a fair is held annually on the outskirts of Gwalior town about the middle of the rainy season. The most noticeable feature of the fair is the chakri throw.

A chakri is a piece of iron something like a spindle, over which a long piece of string or thread is rolled. The player throws high into the air the iron chakri (literally a roll), holding one end of the string in his hand, and gives it a swing and jerk in such a clever manner that the chakri on coming down rolls up the thread again on itself and is caught in the hands of the thrower.

The art has been dexterously practiced by a class of people for ages past, and some members are so renowned that they cut a good figure at the scene. It is most interesting to watch the thrower fling the chakri up high, catch it in his hands on return and continue sending it up again and again till the rope becomes as high as seventy feet above the ground. There is absolutely no spring or lever attachment in the chakri. Nabbo is the champion thrower.—London Strand Magazine.

Modern Seamen.

The new ship has transformed the sailor with itself. He works among a subtle and intricate network of machinery. His brain is quickened by the effort to understand the new forces and appliances that he controls. He is drawn no longer from the lower strata of the population of our ports, but in increasing proportions from the ranks of skilled mechanics. The electricians and machinists, who are the aristocracy of the crew, bring with them the notions which prevail among the aristocracy of labor out of uniform. They possess more reading and more science than did nine out of ten of the officers in the old days. They have a respect for themselves and their class, which has revolutionized the morals and manners of the modern warship. The gradual reform of the service regulations has sought to keep pace with this transformation, and officers have been educated in a wholly new conception of their relationship to their men. The bullying and hectoring which was the rule of the sea in the old days is today the rare exception. Instinct and "good form" condemn that kind of thing as severely as the regulations.—Nation.

SLANG IS HARDY.

Some Supposedly Modern Phrases Are Really Centuries Old.

Much of the current slang supposed to be modern is not new. For instance, "kid" (child) goes back as far at least as Massinger's "Old Law" (1599).

"I am old, you say. Yes; parlous old, kids, and you mark me well." Kidnap (to nab a kid) was certainly not a new word to De Foe or Bunyan.

"To skip out" is accounted slang, but in Wycliff's translation of the Bible we read, "Whanne barnabas and poul herden this, thei skipten out."

In "Ralph Roister Doister," the first English comedy, about the middle of the sixteenth century, an actor says, "Nay dame, I will fire thee out of my house," which certainly has a modern ring.

Goldsmith in "The Good Natured Man" (1768) says, "If the man comes from the Cornish borough you must do him," and this will require no gloss for the modern reader.

"Not in it," in Scotch in Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale." "They have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols because they are not in it."

"Cut it out" goes back as far at least as Sheridan's "Critic" (1770). "The performers have cut it out."

The optimistic brakeman who had both legs cut off by a train and who, when a fellow-sufferer tried to console him by saying he ought to be thankful he wasn't killed outright, replied, "I'm not kicking," was only using a Biblical expression. "Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice?"—Edward A. Allen in Forum.

SAWING GRANITE ROCKS.

Steel Wires and Sand and Water Are the Apparatus Used.

Stone is still sawed by hand, even in great cities, where the latest appliances of the mechanical art are to be found. Yet the mechanical sawing of rock is at least sixteen centuries old and in recent years has reached a stage of perfection.

The idea of using a metal cord and a mixture of sand and water for sawing stone was patented by Eugene Chevallier in France in 1854. His apparatus, with scarcely any change, was used not long ago in cutting a trench through the Pont Neuf, in Paris.

The principle upon which the mechanical stone saw works is described by Victor Raygouard in La Science et la Vie as follows:

An endless rope composed of three steel wires twisted together is set in movement and draws with it a grinding granular substance, pressing this hard upon the stone that is to be sawed. The mordant substance is grit mixed with water. The stream of water renders the movement easy and prevents the heating of the cable. The ends of the cable are joined by splicing.

The hardest rocks, such as porphyry, are now sawed more easily than the softer, such as marble, but not so rapidly. Marble is sawed at the rate of nearly nine inches an hour, granite at from six to seven inches an hour.

Can't Be Cut Off With a Shilling.

French parents (or, at all events, those with more than 2 shillings to dispose of by will) are precluded from the gratification of cutting a unpopular child off with a shilling. A reserve is established by law which no testator can bequeath away from his offspring. A Frenchman with one child can dispose of half his property according to his pleasure; if he has two children, two-thirds pass to the child. Those with two children can dispose of only one-third of their property. Those with three children of one-fourth, and so on according to the size of the family. Some parents occasionally seek to evade the law by subterfuge, but the disposal of property in France is hedged round with so many restrictions that family black sheep are rarely masters of their legal inheritances.—London Mail.

Women's Wistful Eyes Win Freedom From Chicago Juries

NEW YORK, Oct. 14—I saw an exhibition of imported garments at a big department store this week that had run the gauntlet from Paris to Havre packed in huge osier baskets and lashed on the back of a touring car. They seemed not the least bit the worse for the wear of war.

The most striking feature of the whole collection was the fact that each and every skirt was cut off short to the tops of the high shoes. The effect is an exposure of well turned ankles that seems just barely skirting the conventions.

Just a Wisp of Tulle.

Next to the shortness of the skirts the most startling note is the almost total lack of anything tangible in the bodices. Positively they consist of merely a wisp of tulle passing over each shoulder for a high girdle and a tunic that is long on one hip and short on the other. The underskirt is of white satin and between it and the pink velvet upper tunic is an intermediary tunic of exquisite gold embroidered net.

The bodice, of course, consists merely of the velvet girdle supplemented by a slight drapery of the gold net and white tulle caught up on each shoulder with a small gold embroidered ornament.

Debutante Model.

A charming model for a debutante is of palest pink taffeta with a skirt of four-corded flounces flaring out quaintly like a veritable crinoline. A full rose nestling in the high girdle and billows of softest blush (I should think it would) pink tulle, reveals a snowy throat and perfect arms to the best advantage.

Another striking evening gown of black lace over white satin has a wide piece of the black Chantilly caught at each shoulder that falls behind straight to the floor like a train.

Utensils Cleaned in a Jiffy

Just a little "Old Dutch" quickly takes away every particle of grease and dirt—leaves utensils clean and bright.

Equally effective on woodenware and cutlery. No kind of uncleanliness can withstand its magic cleaning qualities.

HINTS FOR THE HOME

A useful gift for a new baby that will be sure to be appreciated by a baby's mother is a set of muslin bonnet strings, with a tiny gilt safety pin attached to the end of each to pin it to the little hood under the trimmings. Baby's bonnet strings have such a way of getting stringy and wet after a short time of wear that these are much daintier than silk or satin ties sewed to the hood, as they can be put freshly done up, and look clean and crisp. They are just strips of muslin very daintily hemmed.

For Scotch eggs boil six eggs hard, take them out of the water, crack them, and put in cold water; this will preserve their colour and make the shell come off easily. Roll the eggs in flour, take either a pound of sausage meat, cold fowl and ham, or any savoury mixture of cold meat; season well with pepper, salt, parsely, and a pinch of nutmeg; divide the meat into six portions, envelop an egg in each, dip into beaten egg, cover with bread crumbs, and fry in boiling fat, which must be deep enough to cover the eggs completely. Cut each egg in halves before serving.

Artificial flowers for millinary are being made to enclose tiny incandescent lamps, which can be supplied with current from storage batteries hidden inside their wearers' hats.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

BRIGHT SPOTS: A few months ago I walked along a noisy, busy, business street in Chicago. At one place there were three old frame houses that still stood, though all around them were big blocks of business buildings. One of them was unoccupied. Several dirty children played in the little yard of another, while an old couple was just moving into the third. I felt sorry for the old couple; they looked so out of place in that old house with the poor yard and rickety old fence in front.

In the spring I again passed the place and I saw the little old woman working in the little front yard. It was not more than ten feet by fifteen feet, but she had made several little flower beds and a lot of little narrow winding paths between. I saw little boxes on the windows and small green leaves peeping up along the old fence. Yesterday I walked there again and when I was opposite the old house I stopped in amazement; apparently every one else that passed the place also stopped and lingered as long as they could spare time to linger. When they passed on there was usually a pleasant smile and a far-away look in their eyes as though pleasant memories had been revived. The rickety old fence was entirely hidden by a mass of beautiful climbing vines, while a very beautiful little Dutch flower garden smiled up at every one and seemed to speak of peace and health and brightness. Part of the dingy old front of the house was covered with flowers that grew in the window boxes. I looked farther and in the back yard I saw growing, corn, lettuce, onions, radishes, turnips, cabbages and other thrifty, vigorous vegetables. The other two back yards, as well as the front, were covered with rubbish, weeds, boxes, and kitchen waste. The children playing about, would occasionally go to the partition fence and look longingly at the beautiful garden.

The same difference I find in the country. One farmhouse will be surrounded by a beautiful and well-kept lawn, flowers abundant and a garden that keeps the table well supplied with delicious fresh vegetables and fruits, with plenty to put in the cellar for winter use. The family are vigorous, healthy and happy. Cheerfulness abounds and life is worth living. At the very next farm I find weeds growing all about the yard, old ploughs, broken waggons, dilapidated buggies, boxes, barrels, and hen coops are thickly scattered where the garden ought to be. Sickly and unhappy looking people live there. Do you live in one of the bright spots or are you a party to the eye-sores that may be so frequently seen on all sides?

Much of disease and suffering is really dirt and don't care. It means work, of course, to make a lawn look clean and well kept, but it pays even if you do live in a rented house. It pays, brightness adds to cheerfulness and happiness and accumulation of these spell health.

Next year I expect to see all three of these yards in the busy Chicago street filled with flowers and vegetables. The object lesson is so wonderfully good, so forcible that it will not be lost. Others will be inspired in other parts of the city and the little bright spot will be a blessing to many besides the old coupe in the third house.

SWEET LAVENDER

Lavender, the sweetest of all the perfumed plants, should be widely grown by every flower lover. It possesses medicinal qualities as well as its delightful, lasting perfume. Raise the flowers from seds or plants, and if possible, devote quite a large space to its culture. Lavender requires light, dry, stony soil, with plenty of sunlight and not much water. Too much moisture will cause the plants to be weak with but a faint odour to the flowers and foliage.

In gathering flowers for their fragrance, such as lavender and sweet clover, pick them when in full boom. August is the best time. Pick plenty of leaves and stems with the flowers, and select a clear day early in the morning before the dew arises on the plants. Spread them on shallow trays made for the purpose, or on large sheets of paper. A warm, sunny attic rom is an excellent place to dry the lavender. Every day or two stir the drying plants to allow the air to circulate. When it is thoroughly dry place it in bags of flowered organdie to be laid away among the snowy lingerie or linen. Envelope sachets can also be made from mull or silk and decorated with bows of ribbon for gifts.

The resourceful woman can make money through raising lavender and herbs. She will find that pads for the linen shelves and dainty sachets filled with lavender, or cushions filled with sweet clover, will meet with approval.

HINTS TO HOUSEWIVES

FOR THIN EYEBROWS.

To thicken thin eyebrows anoint the eyelid edges with warm seasame oil. Do not get the oil into the eyes. The eyebrows can also be massaged with yellow vaseline for five minutes every evening. Always massage with the fall of the hair, not against it.

WHITE ENAMEL URNITURE.

To cleanse and restore white enamel furniture that has become soiled or discoloured, treat it thus: Melt one tablespoonful of bicarbonate of soda in one quart of boiling water; when cool, wash the furniture with the solution, using an old flannel cloth for the purpose.

TO IRON PLEATED RUFFLES.

Iron a starched ruffle flat; then, after removing the needle and shuttle from your sewing machine, adjust the ruffler attachment and run the hem of the ironed ruffle through, using the long gage for the ruffler. Your waist will look as good as new.

A Delicious Meat Pie.

Stew very slowly 1 1-2 pounds of round steak, cut into inch pieces, to which may be added for flavouring two slices of onion and a bay leaf, or a slice of carrot may take the place of the bay leaf, and toward the last of the cooking salt and pepper to taste. When tender put in a baking powder crust cut into small diamond shapes or cut round like biscuits. Bake until the crust is nicely browned and serve at once with creamed mashed potatoes.

DROWNING NO BOTHER TO THEM.

Old gentleman (who had just finished reading an account of a shipwreck with loss of passengers and all hands)—Ha! I am sorry for the poor sailors that were drowned.

Old Lady—Sailors! It isn't the sailors — it's the passengers I am sorry for. The sailors are used to it.

CHOICE RECIPES

A Fine Chili Sauce.

Peel and cut up fine one bushel tomatoes. Run one-half peck onions and 12 green peppers through food chopper; add four cups brown sugar, mixed spices to taste; four cups vinegar and one cup salt. Boil all together three hours. This makes about 20 pint cans.

To Keep Away Wrinkles.

For those women who have rather a dry skin, I would suggest the use of a good cleansing cream at night, after bathing the face in hot water. Take one-half teaspoonful of cold cream and add to it 10 drops of spirits of camphor. Mix well and proceed to massage gently into the skin. Carefully wipe off with a soft cloth all of the cream that is not absorbed and keep up this treatment every night for three months. The skin will not chap and will be smooth and firm.

Boston Cookies.

Mix thoroughly three well-beaten eggs, 1 1-2 cups of sugar, 1 1-2 cups of raisins, seeded and chopped fine, one cup of butter, one-half teaspoon of soda, a little salt, half a nutmeg, and stiffen with flour enough to spread on tins. The dough should not be moulded or rolled.

Cornstarch Pudding.

Put one pint of milk and one-half cup sugar in a double boiler. When it boils add two tablespoons of cornstarch dissolved in a little cold milk. Let it cook a few minutes. Remove from fire and beat in the whites of two eggs which have been beaten to a stiff froth. Pour into serving dish. Make a boiled custard of one-half cup of sugar, one pint of milk, the yolks of the two eggs and flavour with vanilla or lemon. When both are cold pour custard over white part.

Lemon Ice.

Boil for eight minutes one quart of water, plus one and one-fourth cups granulated sugar. Add grated rinds of two lemons, plus one-fourth cup water. Then add three-fourths cup of lemon juice. Strain in 10 minutes and freeze.

Creamed Finnan Haddie.

Remove the skin and bones from a small finnan haddie, previously boiled, and pick into flakes with a fork. Place in a saucepan one tablespoon of butter and a tablespoon of flour, add one and one-half cups of milk. Cook a few moments, season with pepper and serve on a hot platter garnished with toast.

Cocoanut Pudding.

Bring one and one-half pints of milk to boiling point, then add three tablespoonfuls of cortstarch moistened with one cupful of milk, the yolks of four eggs beaten with one-half cupful of sugar, one and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Now add one cupful of chopped cocoanut and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Pour into a buttered pudding dish. Beat up the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, then beat in one-half cupful of sugar, turn on to the top of the pudding, and brown lightly in the oven.

Almond Cookies.

Cream one-half cup butter and add gradually, while beating constantly, one-half cup sugar; then add one egg, well beaten, one-third cup Jordan almouds, blanched and finely chopped, the grated rind of one-half leman, two tablespoons brandy, and two cups flour mixed and sifted with one teaspoon baking-powder and one-fourth inch in thickness, shape with a round cutter, first dipped in flour, and bake in a slow oven until delicately browned.

Sanger Pudding

Cut five slices entire wheat bread three-fourths of an inch thick and remove crusts. Butter the slices generously, arange in a shallow buttered pudding dish and pour over two cups milk mixed with one-half cup molasses and one fourth teaspoon salt. Bake two and a half hours in a slow oven, stirring occasionally, and adding one cup milk after the first hour of the cooking. Serve with thin cream.

THE FALL WEATHER HARD ON LITTLE ONES

Canadian fall weather is extremely hard on little ones. One day it is warm and bright and the next wet and cold. These sudden changes bring on colds, cramps and colic, and unless baby's little stomach is kept right the result may be serious. There is nothing to equal Baby's Own Tablets in keeping the little ones well. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels, break up colds and make baby thrive. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FLOWERS IN HOME.

Flowers add so much to the cheerfulness of the home, even though we may not be extravagant in buying them lavishly. A few flowers tastefully arranged brighten the entire appearance of a room. Dinner tables look bare and neglected without the little vase of flowers or centrepiece of ferns. In winter a bit of holly, variegated ivy or even green of any variety will give just the little touch of cheerfulness needed to counteract the dull gayness of the out-of-doors. Foliage plants are excellent for the house. The Boston fern, rubber tree and sword fern all grow well in the house.

FISH AS FOOD

(Issued by the Department of Naval Service, Ottawa, 1914.)

In these days when the cost of living has become such an important factor, it is necessary for the average housewife to give careful thought to providing for her table. The articles procured must not only be reasonably cheap, but they must be palatable and nourishing.

As fish meets these requirements, attention is called to it as one of the articles that should daily have an important place on each bill of fare.

Not only from an economic, but from a health, standpoint is it desirable that fish should be much more freely used. Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., D.Sc., lord chancellor's visitor, etc., in an article on the value of fish as food, states that it cannot be too strongly insisted on that for working people of all classes —those who work with their heads as well as those who work with their hands—fish is an economical source of energy necessary to enable them to carry on their work, and that for children and young persons it furnishes the very materials that are needed to enable them to grow healthy and strong.

The same authority states that another very important reason why fish should be generally used is its easy digestibility. Even feeble stomachs, that cannot readily deal with butcher's meat, find little difficulty in assimilating fish. The rapidity with which any kind of meat dissolves in the stomach depends largely on the fineness of its fibres. Thus beef is less digestible than mutton, because the fibres are longer and harder, and again mutton is less digestible than the breast of fowl. In fish the muscle fibres are very short and are arranged by flaky masses, which are easily separated from one another. Hence fish lends itself to comparatively speedy digestion. Of course, fish differ greatly in digestibility, the lean kinds being more readily disposed of than the fat, and salt fish, owing to the hardening of the fibre during salting, lingers longer in the stomach than fresh fish. Moreover, fish is less stimulating as a food than meat, which is a matter of importance in these days of heavy nervous tension.

In this connection, however, an important feature must not be overlooked, viz., that, as in other foods, the digestibility and nutritive value of fish largely depends on the cooking of it.

PAIN CONSTANTLY TORTURED HIM

Student Became So Ill, He Was Forced To Leave Berthier College. Suffered For Two Years Until Cured By Wonderful "Fruit-a-tives" Tablets.

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN, ESQ.

St. Boniface de Shawinigan, Feb. 3rd. 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after having suffered from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by the use of "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill that I was forced to leave College. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all. At times, I used to be for three or four days without a single motion of the bowels, and I became so sick that my digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and I once noticed a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured".

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN

Many famous physicians have stated that fully 50% of the cases of Kidney Trouble, Pain-In-The-Back, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Appendicitis, Nervousness, Headaches, Typhoid Fever, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, are found in people who habitually suffer from Chronic Constipation. Surely, you must realize the danger of Constipation "Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the Liver; stimulates this organ to renewed vigor; enables the Liver to give up sufficient bile to move the bowels and insures the bowels moving regularly and naturally every day. "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure every case of Constipation, no matter how severe it may be.

A Story For Papa.

There is a moral in this little story of child life.

"Mamma," asked little three-year-old Freddie, "are we going to heaven some day?"

"Yes, dear; I fervently hope so," was the reply.

"I wish papa could go, too," continued the little fellow.

"Well, and don't you think he will?" asked his mother.

"Oh, no," replied Freddie; "he could not leave his business!"

The Legal "ss."

The symbol "s.s." used in legal parlance is an abbreviation of the Latin word "scilicet" and means "to wit" or "that is to say." It is used to call attention to what is immediately to follow, introducing explanatory matter relating to what has immediately preceded. Other abbreviations for the same word are "Scil" and "Sc." The word "scilicet" is in itself a contraction of the Latin words "scire licet," and means, literally, "it is permitted to know."

FLIGHT OF A COMET

Its Wild Race Through Space and the Speed It Attains.

CRASHING INTO THE EARTH.

What the Result Would Be If One of These Light but Massive Wanderers of the Sky Were to Swing Into a Head-on Collision With Our Planet.

A large part of the fear that great comets have always inspired is due to an instinctive dread of their tremendous power for evil. They look like besoms of destruction, and those who know nothing about astronomy accept them at their apparent face value.

And, in truth, if they could come within hitting distance of the earth they would do an enormous amount of damage, and some of them might be capable of putting the earth temporarily out of commission as an inhabited globe.

The terror that was aroused in many quarters by Halley's comet in 1910 is sure to recur on the appearance of any new comet, so that it is worth while to consider what an evilly disposed comet could do to the earth if it got a chance.

There are two ways in which a comet could cause damage to the earth—first, by running straight into it with 15,000 times the velocity of an express train and, second, by infecting the atmosphere with the poisonous or stifling gases contained in its tail.

Let us consider the first case of a comet shock.

Two things have to be taken into account—namely, the velocity and the weight of the colliding comet, considered as a gigantic projectile shot against the earth as a target.

Comets are very deceptive in regard to weight or mass. They are enormously large, but relatively very light. The comet that appeared in 1861 first grazed the sun and then swept the earth with its tail.

Halley's comet also occupied vastly more space than the earth, but a careful estimate has shown that it probably did not weigh more than 30,000,000 tons, which is much less than the weight of the material excavated to make the Panama canal.

It might be thought, then, that the earth is in no more danger from such a comet than a battleship is from a boy's bean shooter. But now the velocity begins to come into play. The speed of a comet at the earth's distance from the sun would be about twenty-six miles per second.

A mass of 30,000,000 tons shooting through space at a velocity of twenty-six miles per second would develop in round numbers about twenty quintillion foot-pounds of energy, equivalent to the development in one second of thirty-five thousand million million horsepower.

Where the comet struck everything—rock, soil, vegetation—would be melted, vitrified and even vaporized in an instant, for all this tremendous energy would be turned into heat through the sudden and complete arrest of the swift moving flight. The quantitious of "dissipated mass of energy" developed by the stopping of the comet would furnish enough heat to [illegible] million tons of solid iron.

The result would be a very big and a very deep hole in the earth. Thousands of square miles would be more or less directly affected by the terrific impact, for the shock would be greater than that of the mightiest earthquake, and perhaps buildings would tumble into ruin and mountains would shake off their fringes of rock in all parts of the globe, while the sea would hurl itself in wheiming tidal waves upon every coast and drown all the low lying islands.

The atmospheric disturbances would also be enormous. The sudden development of great heat at the point of collision would unbalance the air currents and destructive and capricious winds would blow to and fro over the earth.

We have only a little space left to consider the effects of a collision between the earth and the tail of a comet. This is something that has actually occurred two or three times within a century. As already said, the comet of 1861 enveloped the earth with the spreading end of its tail for a few hours, and in 1910 Halley's comet brushed its tail over the earth, but apparently the electric repulsion developed prevented the gases of the tail from entering the atmosphere. It is possible that in every case this would occur, so that electricity may be our effective guardian against deleterious substances that might otherwise be introduced into the atmosphere from the switching tails of close passing comets.—Garret P. Serviss in Spokane Spokesman-Review.

ATLANTIC OCEAN RECORDS.

Vessels That Won Fame by Reducing the Time of the Trips.

In the early days of Atlantic steam navigation anywhere from ten days to a fortnight was used up between New York and England, and on the eastward voyage it was by no means unusual for some of the sailing packets of Grinnell and Minturn, red, white and blue swallowtail barges, and of Tommy Tapscott, black ball or burgee and foretopsail, to beat the lumbering sidewheelers.

The first steamer to cut under the ten day voyage was the Persia in 1856, with 9 days, 1 hour and 45 minutes. This remained a record for ten years, until the Scotia in 1866, 8 days, 2 hours and 48 minutes, lopped off a whole day. Three years later the City of Brussels in 1869 established the seven day class, with 7 days, 22 hours and 3 minutes.

It was not until 1882 that the six day boat claimed the record, the Alaska, with 6 days, 18 hours and 37 minutes. The five day class was opened in 1889 by the City of Paris, with 5 days 19 hours 18 minutes. The first of the four day class was the Lusitania in 1908, with 4 days 15 hours. The record is now held by the Mauretania, with a passage in 1910 of 4 days, 10 hours and 21 minutes.—New York Sun.

Care of Pearls.

One of the representatives of a famous jewelry firm gives a word of advice upon the preservation and treatment of pearls. Upon no account, he said, should they be locked up in a safe or other dark place for lengthy periods, since such treatment soon causes them to lose their "life" and become dull. If their fair owners find that for some reason or other they cannot wear them outside their garments they should make a point of wearing them underneath the dress next to the skin. Constant contact with the human skin gives to the stones light, luster, gloss and sheen. The best possible way to keep the pearls in a perfect state of preservation, as well as to prolong their life, is to wear them always, both by night and by day.—London Tit-Bits.

The Cruel Lie.

When Disraeli was nearing his end a young disciple said to him: "Master, what is the unpardonable sin? Is it not a lie?" The astute and subtle statesman, in the shadow of the grave, where he saw with the clearer vision, looked at the young man with deep, unfathomable eyes and answered:

"No, a lie is not the unpardonable sin. The unpardonable sin is the cruel lie."

On the borders of that shadowy land where great things grow small and little things loom large on the horizon he had come to know that the crime that is not forgiven is the brutal instinct that impels us to wound, to embitter, to mortify.

Emerson's Style.

Emerson's style was tersely summed up in the words of his dear friend Thomas Carlyle. Wrote the "Sage of Chelsea" of his friend's way of writing: "It is pure, genuine Saxon; strong and simple; of a clearness, of a beauty, but does not sometimes rightly stick together. The paragraphs are not beaten ingots, but beautiful square bags of buckshot held together by canvas."

His Safety Deposit Vault.

"Yes, my son is going to spend a few days in the city."

"He'll get bunkoed sure."

"Well, he's sure of car fare home. He's wearing a ten dollar bill underneath a porous plaster on his chest."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Innocent Victim.

"This food problem is something awful!" exclaimed the querulous man.

"Still harping on the high cost of living?"

"No; my wife has decided to reduce her weight. I wouldn't care what food cost if she wouldn't insist on my eating it."—Washington Star.

PLAYING GOLF.

The Game Demands Concentration, Yet Invites Sociability.

"One thing at a time, and that done well," is a very good rule in golf, as in many other lines of either work or play. I speak of this because golf is a game in which the relationship between players is a bit different from what it is in any other game that comes to my mind. It is a game which to reap the best results demands great concentration and yet a game which at times is played wonderfully well by those who seem to be paying scant attention to the task in hand.

The game one moment brings men together and next sends them apart, according to the direction in which they happen to hit the ball. Two men can start from the same tee, be two hundred or more yards apart after their drives and both be on the same green after playing their second shots.

It is a game which invites sociability and yet does not either demand or require it. One man can go out and play all by himself and thoroughly enjoy his game, or two men can go out, play a round together, neither speak a word between the first tee and the last green, yet both go into the clubhouse and declare they had seldom or never spent a more enjoyable time.—Francis Ouimet in St. Nicholas.

Destroying Equilibrium.

"That former enemy of yours is paying you a great many compliments."

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum, "and I wish he'd quit it. One of the easiest ways to throw a man down is to swell his head until he gets top heavy."—Washington Star.

Love, hope, fear, faith—these make humanity, these are its sign and note and character.—Browning.

Opportunity.

Opportunity comes more than once. There is no doubt about it, because almost every man knows the number of times he had an opportunity to make a fool of himself—and did it.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Knowlton's Thanksgiving

(New England Homestead)

By Ella S. Stratton

JAMES Knowlton was a man whose word was law in his own household and he was never slow in giving decisions. His only son had found home an unpleasant habitation long before he reached the age of legal freedom and left it one morning, never to return. One letter came from a distant mining town to the sorrowing mother, followed by a long silence of 10 years. Of his three sisters, two went to a long, quiet rest in the graveyard on the hill, and the youngest, now seventeen, was her mother's comfort and companion.

Those ten years had not used James Knowlton kindly. In a moment of unusual generosity he had signed notes with a trusted friend, who promptly ran away and left them for him to pay. He was obliged to mortgage his farm to do this, and had not been able to pay more than the interest.

His crop failed, worms ravaged his orchards, his best horse went lame in the busiest season, and two of his finest cows were condemned by the state commissioners. The fact that nothing was found to ail them did not mend matters after they had been killed, though it gave him just cause for grievance.

Therefore, James Knowlton was not in a very thanksgiving state of mind when he entered the kitchen where his wife and daughter were busy with preparations for the coming holiday. He closed the door with a bang and stood with his back against it, scowling at the women who were stoning raisins by the window.

"You might just as well stop your fixings. Snapum foreclosed the mortgage, just as I expected he would. That man is as mean as—as John Snapum can be, and that's pretty mean, now I tell you. There'll be no Thanksgivings for us in this life, and there's no knowing what will become of us. It's the poorhouse and a pauper's grave, I s'pose, unless—" He gave a side glance toward Nellie and paused in as much confusion as James Knowlton could show in his own household. Nellie colored to the waves of fair hair above her forehead, but she met his glance bravely.

"Snapum would give you the mortgage for a wedding present," he whined insinuatingly. "He says you are the very image of what your mother was at your age. He has a fine home—Snapum has."

Nellie shrugged her shoulders impatiently, and her mother looked at her husband in speechless dismay for a moment, then at the litter of flour, sugar and spices helplessly. There had not been a Thanksgiving in their married life when they had not celebrated in a modest way, and it was hard to break the habit. To be sure, more trials and tribulations had visited them that year than fall to the lot of most mortals, but they had always managed to find something to be thankful for—until now.

Little by little the dreadful mortgage had increased, for luck was against them, the interest was not kept up, and at last it had fallen into the hands of John Snapum, the moneylender. The worst had come, and the morrow was Thanksgiving! But what was that about wedding presents? She looked at her daughter's flushed face. Did Snapum—his wife had been dead a year—did he—

"Oh, I cannot do that, father," Nellie was saying.

"No, of course not." Knowlton laughed harshly. "You wouldn't do it to save the father who has slaved for you. I didn't expect it. I knew what your answer would be. But you might as well stop short up and we'll have a Fast day to-morrow. We have three weeks, he can't turn us out before that. I suppose young Jim Brown will make a home for you, Nell, but it is the poorhouse for your mother and I. If I could only work as I used to—but there, what's the use. Might as well give up first as last—it has got to be. You see, Mary, Snapum don't forget that you turned him down to take up with me. He never has and he never will."

James Knowlton threw himself into a chair by the table and laid his head upon his folded arms.

"Don't, don't, father," stammered his wife, laying her hand upon his shoulder in mute caress. "If Jimmie was only here, perhaps—"

"There is no use in wishing, or in thinking of what might have been," answered the man testily, raising his head with a jerk. "That boy has shifted us, that's plain to be seen. Things are as they are, and we've got to stand them, that's all there is to it. Nell will have a home—though she might have a better one. I s'pose she'll be getting married right away. No, you needn't say Thanksgiving to me. I'm not going to kill a chicken, let alone a turkey. We'll need all we can get out of everything on the place. No, no, I shall not do it, and you needn't look glum about it, either. Now I'm going fishing."

Knowlton always went fishing, in season and out of season, when he was greatly troubled or did not want to work, but he was not much better at catching fish than he was at keeping dollars. That was really the secret of the whole business. The mortgage would have been foreclosed long before but for his wife's prudent management.

"Very well," she replied patiently. "I have baked the pies and the cake is mixed, so we may as well eat them. There's plenty of sausage for dinner."

Knowlton went out and slammed the door. He soon passed the window with his fishpole over his shoulder. The woman watched him out of sight, then put on her bonnet and shawl.

"I'm going to the village on an errand, Nellie,' she said wearily. "No, you cannot do it for me. You finish the cake and I'll be back as soon as I can. Never mind, dear child; I—I guess things will untangle somehow—they generally do."

She walked down the road to the village with a quick, determined step, but her face was white with dread and anxiety. She had never thought to go on such an errand! She had never thought to ask any favor of him. All too soon she reached the tall building and walked straight into the office of John Snapum. "Good afternoon, Mary," said that worthy gentleman, looking up from a legal paper which he had just signed to motion her to a seat. "What good fortune shall I thank for this visit? It has been long since I had the pleasure of a chat with you."

"You know!" she cried breathlessly, her face flushing and paling. "You know why I am here, but you don't mean it, John; you can't mean it! It would send us to the poorhouse."

"That's just where I want to send you—you and that fool you married when you might have had a better man," he snarled, his eyes gleaming with cruel triumph. "I said I would get even with you, and with him, and I am a man of my word. I've waited a long time. I've planned and schemed and now my time has come. Yet there is still a way to avoid it. Your daughter resembles the Mary that I loved, and seems more sensible than her mother was. I will be a kind, indulgent husband to her, and I will not be hard on my father-in-law."!

"She is engaged to Jim Brown; you wouldn't have her break her troth?" stammered the woman. "She—they plan to be married at Christmas. You surely do not want a wife that loves another man, John?"

"That seems to be what I'm always wanting," he retorted bitterly. "She is a true daughter of her mother."

"But, John, she is so young. You are old enough to be her father," the mother argued. "Think of her happiness—you surely would not take her young life as a sacrifice."

"It must be a great sacrifice for the girl to exchange your home for mine," he sneered. "But I cannot marry her against her will, so there is only one way left."

"Surely you do not mean such a cruel, cruel thing, John!" she protested. "Give us a little more time and—"

"Not one day, not one hour, and I mean it!" he laughed at her misery. "What John Snapum says he means, and I have waited many a long day for this hour. I have seen you happy in your fool's paradise and smiled, for I knew it would not last. My revenge would have come years ago but for your thrift and contriving, you know that, but even you could not balk me for ever. When it is within my reach I would be a fool not to take revenge, wouldn't I? And what is more, I have already sold the place. This is the deed," holding up the legal. "The buyer will call for it in an hour. Who? Oh, a stranger; I never saw him before, he called to inquire about real estate in this vicinity. Of course, the deed is subject to the foreclosure time of redemption, but there is no need of waiting for it to expire, I told him the circumstances and he is willing to take the risk. Jim Knowlton never can redeem it."

"No, we can't redeem it," she repeated hopelessly, as she folded her shawl closer and shivered. "No—we cannot redeem it on such short notice, if ever. Will you have no mercy?"

"As much mercy as you had when I pleaded at your feet, Mary, no more and no less. This is my final answer. Take it and go back to your precious husband. Tell him that you have failed in your errand. He wasn't man enough to face the music himself," and he whirled toward his desk, a signal that the interview was ended.

"James does not know that I am here," cried the loyal wife. "He was not at home when I left."

Then she went out into the street slowly, like one suddenly aged. A few snowflakes, harbingers of a storm, came swirling down through the frosty air. The clouds were heavy and dark but not heavier and darker than the clouds that had swept over the woman's life. The wind sobbed and sighed among the pines, whirling the sleety snow into her face, but she did not mind that. She was insensible to physical discomfort. Agony of body was overcome by agony of mind.

She stumbled to her own door and went in blindly. Nellie helped to remove her wet things in sympathetic silence, although she but guessed at the cause of the utter despair in her mother's set face. She drew a chair to the fire and gently seated her in it, laying a hand upon the silvery hair in mute caress. Knowlton had not returned, but soon they saw him coming, far down the flat. He walked like an old, old man, pausing now and then to cast his eyes over the well-known acres of his farm. His wife hastily put the bonnet and shawl out of sight, took her knitting and sat down quietly. He must never know of her errand and its failure. They were both busy when he entered.

Rose of a Noble Scot.

William Carstaire was William III.'s chief counselor in ecclesiastical matters. What a noble man this sturdy Scot was! An Episcopalian curate who had been ousted from his parish and was a thorough irreconcilable called upon him one day by appointment. He was then principal of Edinburgh university. He found Carstaire in a rage. His tailor had sent in a misfitting suit. He threw the clothes about the room and then, looking at his visitor, thought that they would fit him. Would he not take them as a sort of atonement for the ill temper which he had shown? The next day the visitor came back to restore a ten pound note which he had found in the coat pocket. "No," said the principal. "When you took the coat you had a right to all that was in it." Carstaire had planned the whole affair.—From "The Scot of the Eighteenth Century," by John Watson, D. D.

PETROGRAD

The whole Slav world will hail with exultation the decision of Nicholas II. that the capital of Russia shall henceforth bear a purely Russian name. To them and to all who know them, the significance of this act is immense. It marks a deliberate breach with an old and bad tradition which has brought many evils on their race. In spite of occasional quarrels, the Court and the bureaucracy of Petrograd have been largely under the influence of the Court and bureaucracy of Berlin, since Russia first became a Great Power in Europe. Much found its account in this relationship. The reactionaries on the Neva could safely appeal to the reactionaries on the Spree for countenance in the most harsh and oppressive features of their internal policy, while the Junkers, against whom all that is progressive and enlightened in Germany have so often and so vainly striven, looked to St. Petersburg for their staunchest support. The alliance between these classes has been based upon their common desire to keep down the people for the honor and the emolument of the "small but powerful" class, which arrogates to itself in both countries the exclusive privilege of bearing rule. The step taken by the Tsar is a proclamation to the entire Slav race in all its branches that this unholy alliance is no more.—London Times.

ARMY HORSES MUST SWIM

A Necessary Part of Their Education For the War Game

An army on the march may at any time encounter a river which it is necessary to cross, and, in the case of a cavalry raid or reconnaissance, there may be no time to find a bridge.

Consequently, all army horses are taught to swim. Those of the British army get their tuition at Aldershot, where there are a number of large ponds, called "flashes." These ponds are usually shallow at the edges, and have bottoms of firm sand.

Swimming lessons are carried out under the eye of the veterinary officer or of the riding master of the regiment, and only experienced men, such as the rough-riding staff, are permitted to be in the saddle.

Every care is taken not to frighten the animal; for a horse, being naturally timid, will never get over the scare if forced roughly into deep water.

The riders are dressed in old suits of fatigue clothes, which will not suffer from a wetting, and on the first day the horses are simply walked into the shallow edge of the pond, no deeper than enough to cover their fetlocks.

Of course, there is a lot of snorting and shying, but by dint of coaxing this is soon overcome.

Next day saddles are taken off, and the horses are persuaded to go a little deeper—perhaps up to the belly. Day by day they are induced to go a little further in, and by the fourth or fifth day most start swimming quite naturally.

At first their riders swim beside them, in order to give them confidence. It is a risky business for a man to swim beside a horse until he is thoroughly accustomed to so doing. If he swims too close he may get a dangerous blow from the animal's hoofs.

As soon as an army horse swims easily he is next taught to swim beside a boat. Light, collapsible boats are used, and as many as five or six horses can be taken across a river behind or alongside each boat.

The last lesson is to swim with a rider on his back. A horse naturally swims rather low in the water, and, with the weight of of a man on him, the animal has only his head above the surface.

An Effective Land Mine

The fougrass is an unique old-time defense which is still being used effectively by the allies. It is made simply by digging a hole at an angle of forty degrees, with the incline up toward the enemy. A charge of powder is placed in the bottom and above it are stones, bricks or small live shells, the whole concealed by brush or grass. It is fired when a concealed wire is touched.

Baby Eczema Becomes Chronic

Causing Great Suffering and Anxiety —Prompt Relief and Cure by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

This is one reason why every mother should know about Dr. Chase's Ointment, since it is an unfailing cure for all itching skin diseases.

Mrs. F. Clarke, Belmont, Man., writes:—"My baby had eczema on her ear. The sore was very bad, and nothing seemed to do her much good. Hearing of the remarkable cures Dr. Chase's Ointment was making, we sent for some, and after the third application the sore began to heal. I am glad to say that it is quite well now, and we give the credit to Dr. Chase's Ointment. We cannot recommend this preparation too highly."

Here is another letter, which tells of the cure of a five-weeks-old baby: Mrs. Wallace Mingon, River John Road, Colchester County, N.S., writes: "My little girl took eczema when she was five weeks old. Though we doctored her until she was nearly a year old, she got no better. I was advised to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, and this treatment completely cured her."

It will help you to ward off sea- or car-sickness. It will prove a welcome relief in the heat of travel —refreshing to the taste, sweetening and soothing to the mouth and throat. It steadies the stomach and nerves remarkably.

Notes of an Author.

I remember that Frank kept a black notebook in his inside coat pocket, in which he set down a heterogeneous collection of notes of his own observations—a well turned sentence, a good name, the possible title of a book. One of these entries, I remember, read, "The hands of the village clock closed like a pair of shears and cut the night in twain."

This book was his greatest treasure. Years afterward he told me that keeping it taught him the difference between seeing life subjectively and objectively. No one, he believed, could become a writer until he could regard life and people and the world in general from the objective point of view, until he could remain detached, outside, maintain the unswerving attitude of the observer. I read part of his notebook once and got soundly kicked for my impertinence, but years afterward I came upon many of these same notes in his work, amplified and adapted.—From a Sketch of Frank Norris by His Brother, Charles Norris.

Signs of Ancient Paris.

George Cain, curator of the Carnavalet museum, in Paris, treasure house of Parisian antiquities, has arranged an exhibition of old signs rescued from under the pick of the demolisher.

Some are examples of exquisite iron work. Others are delightfully quaint, such as the sign of the old Latin quarter barber, which announces that he "works quickly and silently." Following the name of a herbalist in the same old world district is the request that he be not mistaken "for the other impostor living across the street."

A Belleville store proclaimed itself "a raw and cooked pork butcher." Among signs intentionally facetious is that of a little cafe which stood opposite the gate of a Parisian cemetery announcing to passers that they would be "more comfortable here than across the street."—Chicago Tribune.

The Caddy's Comment.

Small caddy, approaching first tee, groaning under the burden of a heavy kit, chiefly of iron clubs, is heard to exclaim: "Heavens above! It's a caddy he wants." Tam, who hears the remark, cries in sympathy. "Jock, wa's yer man?" Jock—Goodness kens, but I'm thinkin' frae his set of clubs he mon be a Glesca ironmonger.—World of Golf.

Scarcely.

A well-known aviator was not feeling very well, so he thought he would consult a physician, to whom he was a stranger. He told the doctor his symptoms. The doctor examined him carefully, and said:

"My dear sir, you are all right. What you want is plenty of fresh air."

Cut it Short.

While building the Panama canal Colonel Goethals knew exactly what he wanted done and would brook no arguments. One morning a rather fidgety subordinate came into the colonel's office.

"I got your letter, colonel," he began, "and I came to"—

He got no further, for the colonel with uplifted eyebrows, cut in:

"Letter? Letter? There must be some mistake. I have written you no letter."

"Oh, yes, colonel," repeated the man. "I've got it here. It's about the work down at Miraflores. Now, you see"—

Again the colonel cut in:

"Oh, I see! But you misled me. You spoke of my letter. You meant, of course, my orders!"

The colonel's blue eyes stared coldly at the argumentative man, who, suddenly feeling that the conversation was at an end, "faded away."

Switzerland's Capital.

The quaint city of Berne has been the capital of the Swiss republic since 1848. It is one of the most interesting towns of Europe for its numerous medieval features. It was founded in 1191 by a duke of Zahringen, and by 1288 it was strong enough to ward off two sieges by Rudolph of Hapsburg, the ancestor of the present Emperor of Austria.

Red Not Very Conspicuous.

It is a common delusion that red uniforms are the most conspicuous in the field. They were in the days when the British army used them, but ranges are much longer nowadays. At a distance of over 1,000 yards red is less easily seen than steel-grey or other light shades.

Radway's Ready Relief

Mrs. L. Bittner, 710 E. 140th St., New York City, writes: "I rubbed a cold. I used one bottle of your Radway's Ready Relief with wonderful results. I have also found it acts like a charm for sore throat. I used it with great benefit for several attacks my children have had, and recommend it to my friends."

NEURALGIA

The Relief is the best counter-irritant liniment and should be kept constantly on hand for use in families, ready at once when required, and being thoroughly rubbed upon the part that pains is the speediest remedy known to the science of medicine.

BRIGHT, HEALTHY, ATTRACTIVE GIRLS

This Condition Can Only Be Maintained Through Rich, Red Blood

It makes all the difference in the world to a girl whether she develops into a bright, healthy attractive woman or sinks into a sickly, unhappy, suffering semi-invalid.

The girl whose blood is poor and scanty—who is anaemic as the doctor terms it—starts life under too great a handicap. She is weaker and more frail than her companions who have rich, red blood. She is more easily fatigued in body and mind, and work of any kind exhausts her. In time her health breaks down. She becomes pale, looks worn out, is languid, irritable and nervous. Her heart palpitates violently at the least exertion, and she falls behind other girls in looks, health, and a capacity to enjoying life. Abundant rich, red blood is the only thing that can restore good health to the many thousands of such girls. This rich, red blood can only be obtained through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They have given thousands of weak, white-faced, bloodless girls robust, vigorous health and high spirits. Here is a bit of proof. Miss Olive Gauseau, St. Jerome, Que., says: "I have reason to be more than grateful to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for they restored me to health after more than one doctor and many medicines had failed. I suffered as so many girls do from anaemia. I was all run down, tortured with headaches, could not stand any exertion, and had no appetite, though of course I had to force myself to eat. I was in this condition for nearly two years, and although doctoring continually seemed to be steadily growing worse, and I was very much discouraged and dispondent. Finally a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I discontinued all other medicines and did so. In the course of a few weeks there was no room to doubt that I had at last found the right medicine. My appetite returned, the headaches began to come less frequently, and colour was returning to my face. The continued use of the Pills for a little longer fully restored my health, and I have since been as healthy and active as anyone could wish. I cannot too strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to other weak and ailing girls."

You can get these Pills through your medicine dealer or by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ATTACK SUCCESSFUL.

Servians Rotted Austrians on Plateau Overlooking Sarajevo.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The following Servian official statement has been received from Nish by Reuter's Telegram Co.:

"The Serbo-Montenegrin troops, commanded by Gen. Bojanovic, on Wednesday made a desperate attack on the Austrians in Glasinats, in Bosnia. The battle ended in a complete victory for our troops over a division of the enemy, which was reinforced by other units. This victory is particularly important because the plateau of Glasinats dominates the fortifications of Sarajevo (capital of Bosnia).

"At midday Wednesday the enemy attacked our positions at Blutchevo. The result was satisfactory for us. On the Drina river fighting satisfactory to the Servians took place towards Kuriatchesa.

"There is nothin important to report for the remainder of the front."

Makes Face Young--- Tightens Love Ties

A fretful expression, a wrinkled face and a faded complexion, do more to drive the male members from home than is commonly supposed. It was one of my greatest difficulties to appear smiling, fresh and elegant when my dear ones were with me. But I have overcome all that. I have changed my mental attitude and I now find it second nature to look cheerful. Due partly to this, partly to a remarkable treatment recommended by a friend, my appearance has so improved I look fifteen years younger than before.

A simple face lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half-pint witch hazel, proved a wonderful wrinkle-chaser. I still use this occasionally. To renovate my complexion I purchased an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax at my druggist's and before using this up, a marvellous transformation has taken place. It was like removing an unsightly mask, revealing a new face, a youthful complexion of distinctive delicacy, clear, white and velvety. I merely applied the wax like cold cream before retiring, washing it off mornings. Ten days' treatment sufficed.—"Aurilia" in Clubwoman.

A MESSAGE TO THIN, WEAK, SCRAWNY FELLS

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fattening elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of greatly urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. Your druggist has Sargol, or can get it from his wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervousness, dyspepsia and stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

NEWSBOY STOWED AWAY.

Montreal Lad Is A Bad Bugler, But Canadians Have Adopted Him.

SALISBURY, Eng., Oct. 17.—When the supply convoy first here into view here yesterday a tiny wisp of a lad was discovered on one of the caissons. He was blowing lustily on a battered bugle, the cracked notes daring up in a strange crescendo. Around his shoulders was a big overcoat loaned him by a grizzled sergeant. The youngster is a Montreal newsboy who stowed away on one of the ships and who has become the pet of the contingent. He put in every spare moment on shipboard practicing the bugle and hoped to qualify as a performer on that instrument in order that he may follow the troops to France.

Ten Thousand Cholera Cases.

ROME, Oct. 17.—A despatch to the Giornale d'Italia from the Austrian frontier says that cholera has assumed frightful proportions in Galicia and Hungary.

"Wednesday in a large town and district in northern Hungary," the despatch says, "there were 10,000 cases among the soldiers and persons having been in contact with them. The epidemic is extraordinary violent and a large percentage of the stricken persons die after a few hours.

It is asserted that the withdrawal of the Russians from Hungary was due to a desire not to expose themselves to the contagion.

Murder at Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Oct. 17.—The badly mutilated body of Michael Franco, an Italian resident of this city, was found by John Scott yesterday in a cave near the Maid of the Mist landing on the Canadian side, and near-by was an oar bespattered with blood, indicating murder. On the face are cuts supposedly inflicted by a blunt instrument, the blow having fractured the skull. There are indication by a trail of blood stains that the body had been dragged over the rocks in an attempt to remove it from the cave.

CUT OFF FROM SEA

Strong Allied Armies Hold District Behind Ypres

CROWN PRINCE THREATENED

LONDON, Oct. 17. — In distinct contrast to the tragedy of the sea comes most encouraging news from France. All troops of the Kaiser that had penetrated beyond Ypres toward the sea have been driven out of that district, which is now held by strong allied armies. A late report, however, says that a German advance squadron has arrived at Blankenberg, eleven miles north of Ostend.

It is stated positively that the allied line in Belgium extends from Ypres to the coast, thus blocking all attempts at Dunkirk and Calais, over the French border.

On the east of the French line distinct successes are reported. One of these claims that the army of the republic operating in Lorraine is almost within cannon shot of Metz, the great German base.

The position of Crown Prince Frederick William's army is described as extremely perilous. His tenacity in refusing to evacuate St. Mihiel, following his stubbornness before Vitry-le-Francois, has given the French commanders an opportunity to isolate him on at least two sides. On his left flank a huge mass of French troops threatens his line of communications in a grave way. In fact, it is not improbable that he is no longer in touch with Metz.

Being unable to form a juncture with the forces of the Duke of Wurtemburg after the position at Vitry-le-Francois became absolutely untenable, he has occupied a most unfavorable position east of the Argonne since the battle of the Aisne began. Each of his attempts to retrieve the situation has been beaten off, and it now seems that the French have turned their attention to the proud heir of the German throne with a vengeance.

With his front resting on St. Mihiel, on both sides of which the German line is bent backward, the French hold all of the roads from Nancy to Bagny, on the Lorraine frontier, the direct route to Metz. The capture of these roads has been progressing several days, and it would appear that a crisis impends in that region. The town of Etain remains in the crown prince's hands, and it is believed that an attack on that point is even now under way. Its loss to the French would force him to a hurried retreat on his advanced front. He could do nothing but fall back towards Luxemburg.

The following French official communication was issued here last night:

"On our left wing the action continues vigorously. Everywhere we have held our own. At certain points we have gained ground and have occupied Lavenzie, at the east of Notaires, in the direction of Lille.

"There is no important incident to mention on the other parts of the front, except an unsuccessful attack by the Germans in the region of Malancourt, northwest of Verdun."

The French official announcement of yesterday afternoon follows: "The progress indicated in the communication of yesterday has been confirmed.

"On our left wing the field of action of the allied forces extends at the present time from the region of Ypres to the sea.

"In Russia, on the left bank of the Vistula river, the Russian troops during the day of Oct. 13 repulsed the German attacks on Warsaw and Ivangorod.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. from Basle says that fierce fighting has taken place in the Vosges passes, in which a German column was buried back with heavy losses.

The French army is ringing with the stories of their 140th Regiment of Infantry, which has won imperishable glory. After capturing a village at the point of the bayonet, they were driven out by a devastating artillery fire. The regiment retook the village on the following day and maintained themselves, despite a steady cannonade. Finally, German infantry came forward to dislodge them. They were thrown back after a sanguinary conflict and 160 of the attackers taken prisoners.

Not satisfied with this achievement, the same regiment a few days afterward took another village whose defenders had baffled several attacks by other contingents. It was a vital point in the French advance, and only fell after the gallant 149th advanced by yards, digging themselves in as they came, and then pushing on a few more rods. The regiment, particularly deft with the bayonet, finally made a rush for the German trenches, and with their long, wicked bayonets threw the Germans back in a rout. The regiment has been named in orders.

A cable from Copenhagen conveys the information that 300,000 fresh troops are being rushed to the western line of the Germans, the same being new levies which have been raised and trained from material not included in the regular mobilization.

The despatch says that these troops are en route in twenty-eight trains, and that they consist of infantry and artillery, including many horses.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush out the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmasy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

HAD FORT IN LONDON.

German Music Publisher's Establishment Raided by Police.

LONDON, Oct. 17. — The police have found at Willesden, a suburb to the northwest of London, a building occupied by Germans, with foundations and roof of heavy concrete. They arrested 22 Germans on the premises. The premises were being used by C. G. Roeber, a German music publisher, as a factory. The police laid their plans and conducted a successful raid. In large force they surrounded the building and then entered. The factory is of one storey.

Within they found very thick concrete foundations, and it was discovered that the roof also was of concrete and between three and four feet thick. The site of this factory at Willesden commands several important railroad junctions.

German Demands on Antwerp.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The Amsterdam correspondent of Reuter's sends a despatch in which he quotes Councillor Langner of Antwerp as describing the situation in Antwerp as follows:

"Antwerp now has a garrison of 15,000 marines and 200 officers commanded by an admiral. As a war contribution the Germans demanded 300 hundredweight of potatoes daily, 9,000 bottles of wine, bread for the whole garrison, 55,000 cigars, 5,500 kilograms of meat, and pay for the officers and soldiers estimated at $10,000 daily."

CONFIDENT OF VICTORY.

Allied Troops Perform Remarkable Feats of Endurance.

ON THE BATTLE FRONT, Oct. 17.—Belief in their final success appears to have taken a firm hold on the allies. All the men display confidence in their commanders, who are doing everything possible to spare their troops. The allied soldiers are fighting with vigor. They often perform marches which seem beyond human power, while on the battlefield their ardor is unrestrainable.

This is made evident often when small detachments set apart from the main bodies. French dragoons recently were entrusted with the task of covering the passage of a river by artillery. They met a party of German Hussars in a clash. Both sides charged simultaneously and the melee lasted ten minutes, during which the men slashed and pierced each other with swords and lances amid the crack of the officers' revolvers.

GERMANS BADLY BEATEN BY THE RUSSIANS

WERE LED INTO A TRAP AND CUT UP

ALLIES STILL GAIN GROUND IN FRANCE

Germans Are Reported To Be In Full Retreat In Poland

Russian War Office Says That the Germans Were Lured On Into a Position Previously Selected and Then Cut to Pieces--They Abandoned Equipment, Transport and Guns.

FALL OF PRZEMYSL IS EXPECTED

Examiner Special:

PETROGRAD, October 17.—That the Germans are still being hard pressed and are in full retreat in Russian Poland, west of Warsaw, was the claim made by the war office to-day. It was stated that the Germans were vainly endeavouring to rally their forces, which have been badly cut up in the fighting that has now been in progress without cessation for eleven days. The war office insists that the Germans were led into a trap —the Russians retreating for strategic purposes—until they had reached a point previously selected, and where heavy Russian artillery was mounted in great strength. The Germans, flushed with their apparent success, were bombarded from all sides and literally cut to pieces, being compelled to retreat and abandon equipage, transports and guns. One entire ammunition train is reported to have been captured.

The war office in dealing with the Galician situation reports the conditions at Premxeyl as unchanged. The garrison has attempted sorties only to be repulsed with great loss, and the fall of the fortress is considered merely a question of time.

LONDON, October 17.—It is unofficially admitted to-day that the Germans have occupied Ostend with a small force of Uhlans, who are treating the people with consideration. The main force, however, has been diverted south west to meet the British army.

SAYS THAT CHOLERA IS SPREADING

LONDON, October 17.—The Rome correspondent of the Daily Star, says that cholera is spreading at a most alarming rate in Hungary and Galicia. He declares that there are ten thousand cases in a single city in northern Hungary, the victims being mostly soldiers.

BERLIN, via The Hague, October 17.—An English Bristol biplane, with two military aviators of high rank as passengers, is reported to have been shot down near Peronne, and the officers captured.

THE HAGUE, October 17.—Advices reaching here from Berlin, say that the Emperor intends to elevate General Von Hinderberg, the commander-in-chief in the east, to the rank of Prince for his work in driving the Russians from German soil.

BRITISH LOSSES TO DATE

LONDON, October 17.—Total British army losses of nearly thirty thousand men to date, are indicated by the casualty lists just published. The details are—Killed, 280 officers, 6,400 men; wounded, 680 officers, 12,280 men; missing, 289 officers, 7,400 men. Of course it is assumed that some percentage of the wounded have already returned to the firing line, and a proportion of the missing have since found their way back to their regiments at the front.

LONDON, October 17. — An unconfirmed rumour, widely circulated throughout London to-day, declared that the big cruisers Invincible and Terrible had been torpedoed and sunk by German submarines in the North Sea. The Admiralty insisted that the rumour was utterly without foundation.

HEROISM OF THE BELGIANS STIRS BRITAIN

King Albert Declares the Belgian Army Will Resist the Germans Until the Very Last

MORE BRITISH TROOPS

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The emphatic declaration by King Albert of Belgium that neither he nor the Queen will accept an asylum and that the Belgian army will continue its resistance to the Germans to the very last has to-day stirred all England. The loudest praise is being heard from all sides of Belgian heroism and its answer is expected to be the hurrying to the front almost at once of the next British expeditionary force now completing its training. It will be utilized to prevent the expected German attempted southern movement paralleling the seacoast. Reports from Aberdeen emphasize the heroic conduct of the crew of the ill-fated cruiser Hawke, which went down in eight minutes. They remained at their posts until the order "every man for himself" was sounded by orders from the bridge.

The Russian government has taken steps to safeguard its coast from a raid by the German Baltic fleet and its warships from raids by the German submarines. The gulfs of Finland and Riga have been closed to all shipping, and mines are also being laid along the coast.

CANADIANS WILL HAVE A COURSE OF TRAINING IN OLD ENGLAND

Although Admittedly One of the Best Looking Forces Ever Sent to Aid Britain Earl Kitchener Will Not Send Them to the Front Immediately.

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Oct. 17.—There is no longer the slightest nervousness over the outlook. Plenty of recruits are enrolling and their training is being rushed with every equipment they will carry with them into battle. There will, however, be no sending of raw levies to the front. Earl Kitchener set his foot down hard on the proposition that even the Canadians, admittedly one of the best looking forces ever sent to aid Britain in fighting her battles, were denied the privilege of being sent direct to the front. Instead they will be forced to complete a thorough course of training. However, it is explained that this will neither be long nor exacting, and the overseas contingent are looking forward to early action.

Potatoes A Big Crop And Likely To Drop To 50c. A Bag

On the market to-day potatoes sold at from 85c. a bag down to 70c, and there may have been lower quotations. Farmers declare the crop has been unusually heavy and from various sections come reports of sales at as low as 40c. a bag. It is generally felt that potatoes at 50c or 60c a bag is about all they are worth under the present abundant supply. The price tendency is undoubtedly downward, and it remains for consumers to seek the most advantageous offers. It is rather fortunate that in the present season potatoes are settling down to a low price. This fact will be welcomed by families of limited means and it will also be an additional factor in forwarding the lower price movement.

CARD TO THE ELECTORS

To the Electors of Ward Five.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been nominated as Alderman for Ward Five, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of ex-Alderman Anderson, I hereby solicit your vote and influence in my behalf.

I desire briefly to state that I am in favour of all facilities that will obtain for the residents of East City, easy and speedy access to all parts west of the river. If I am elected and the people who placed me in the Council are not satisfied with my representation of them they can find an easy remedy at the next election.

Yours truly,

ONE YEAR IN MERCER

Margaret Duncan Was Not Benefitted by Light Fine, So Heavy Sentence is Imposed

Margaret L. Duncan, who, in conjunction with F. Piper, a married man, was charged with disorderly conduct and fined $2, evidently failed to comprehend the meaning of such a charge, for in the evening she was found in company with other men. As a result she was charged, this morning, with vagrancy. She pleaded guilty and was sentenced to one year in the Mercer Reformatory.

PLUCK OF A CANADIAN OFFICER

The following story of the pluck of a Canadian officer is told in a letter to The Examiner from Sergeant G. White, of the 3rd Chester Regiment, a member of the 57th Regiment:

Captain Young and his brave men stood to their posts, having sent four orderlies to the right for information as to what to do, but not one orderly returned, they either having been killed or wounded. At last the enemy reached the brave captain and his men and ordered them to surrender. The captain's reply was. (Turning to his company.) "Men Surrender? No! Not while I am in command. He was shot dead by a German officer, his company being taken prisoners. For this act of bravery Captain Young was buried with full military honours by the Germans as a token of their respect for a real soldier. I am pleased to say Captain Young was a Canadian, having made enquiries from an officer of the regiment who knew and had soldiered with him for years. Surely the people of Peterborough are proud of Captain Young.

ALLIES OCCUPY THE ARMENTIERES DISTRICT

Ground Has Been Gained in the Vicinity of Arras and St. Mihiel, Two Widely Separated Points on the Long Battle Line--No Change Reported in the Ypres District

Examiner Special:

PARIS,, October 17.—That ground has been gained in the vicinity of Arras and St. Mihiel, and that the allies have occupied the district around Armentieres, eight miles north east of Lille, and the little village of Fleur-Baix, was officially announced here this afternoon. The official three o'clock communique, telegraphed from Bordeaux, stated that the situation generally on the front is unmodified. There has been no change whatever in the Ypres district, and as a general thing the lines remain as reported in yesterday's and Thursday's official statements.

GOVERNOR OF ANTWERP EXTENDS TIME FOR SHOPKEEPERS TO RE-OPEN THEIR SHOPS

LONDON, October 16.—G. F. Steward, the Daily News' correspondant at Rotterdam, telegraphs,—

"A fresh proclamation by the German Governor of Antwerp extends the time allowed for the shopkeepers to return to the city and open their shops from five to twelve days. If the shops are not opened in that time they will be seized.

"Orders have been given that no villages are to be burned, but Belgian soldiers, even in civilian clothes, will be treated as prisoners of war on their return.

"Curious reports of treachery and spying in Antwerp are circulating here. German spies in the city are said to have communicated to friends outside the exact nature and the position of the defending force. By this means the Germans were able to drop their very first shell into the trenches of the Belgians. Another report relates that the first thing the Germans did on getting within range of the city, was to proceed to certain houses, which they blew up, and used the concrete foundations as beds for guns."

TURKEY EXPECTED TO HIT AT RUSSIA IN THE BLACK SEA

LONDON, October 16.—The English press this morning expresses the belief that Turkey encouraged by German successes in Belgium, means mischief, and that the appearance of the cruiser Goeben, officered by Germans, between Varna and Baltschik, in the Black Sea, as the flagship of the Turkish fleet, indicates an impending battle with the Russian Black Sea fleet, which is reported to be near Baltschik.

While it is acknowledged that the Goeben and the Breslau have added considerable power to the Turkish navy, naval experts here are of the opinion that the Russians, if attacked, will retain the mastery of the Black Sea.

The Russian sailors, who learned much during the Japanese war, are superior to the Turks, and Russia's Black Sea fleet still retains the advantage in men and tonnage. Moreover, it is the belief here that if Turkey should strike at Russia then Italy, Greece, Roumania, Bulgaria and Portugal would join forces with Russia, France and England.

METHODISTS AND THE NEW RITUAL

To the Editor, The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In these times of war and rumours of war, we are told by many fantics these are signs the end of the world is close at hand. If such be the case, one is anxious to know if we are on the "right track." I see the Methodists at the Ottawa conference made a "new" ritual, at least they will call it a new fashion" as Sheldon did in one of his books. His hero, a preacher out West, found his congregation wanted hymns instead of psalms and pharaphrases because it was a "new" style, but we find the same ritual in use ever since the Apostles in 2nd Chap. Acts v42. "And they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship (the Creed), the breaking of bread (the Communion), and the prayers, the mark of the Church (established by Christ), whenever you find it and as He said, "Lo! I will be with you to the end."

Yours truly,
READER.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1914

KEEP THE DOLLAR AT HOME.

If Peterborough takes this war, the conditions it creates and the responsibilities it imposes, seriously, there is considerable disparity in the way of showing it, compared with other places. While not instituting comparisons it is enough to say that many places much smaller than Peterborough have contributed more generously to the patriotic fund; and other places are showing the way to us in a most enterprising way. In another place on this page is printed a reference to what the Walkerville Board of Trade is doing to protect and promote the interests of home trade, both local and general. The manufacturers of Walkerville declare it is their policy to keep the dollar within the empire, within the country and within the town. The Board of Trade followed suit and adopted, and has published a "proclamation" and a patriotic trade mark reproduced on this page, with the slogan—

"What we have we'll hold."
"Keep the wheels going."
"Keep the crops growing."
"Keep the dollar at home."

The proclamation referred to is a work of art. It is printed in four colours on heavy paper, 18 by 24 inches. It has the flag at the four corners, and a border of maple leaves relieved with panels of crisp argument in print. It is altogether a most effective appeal and shows not only the patriotic spirit of the Walkerville Board of Trade, but its enterprise. A practical printer says the "proclamation" must have cost at least $200 per thousand.

It is a magnificent inspiration to patriotic attitude towards the war situation. The central idea "Keep the dollar at home," so effectively insisted upon in the "proclamation," is the root of the whole matter, the underlying principle that should animate our people; and there is splendid pith and point in the argument buttressing the slogan, "Keep the dollar at home"—"When you spend a dollar outside Canada, Canada gets the goods but loses the dollar. When you spend a dollar at home you get both."

Here is comprised the whole philosophy that should guide our merchants and businessmen and our people, both at home and throughout the Dominion. The war situation presents a ripened harvest of industrial and commercial advantage to be reaped by the enterprise of the people of Canada; and the instrument of its reaping is the spirit and practice of the slogan "Keep the dollar at home." Buy home products at home and keep the money at home. Thus we shall stimulate and encourage domestic industrial development, give larger employment, and contribute to the material and social betterment of our own people and strengthen our financial resources, up-build our Dominion, and reap material reward for all the sacrifice we are making in helping the cause of the Empire.

A NEEDED LESSON.

We have many lessons taught by the experiences incident to the present war. One of these lessons is to teach and practice the neglected art of saving money, one of the first steps to national, as well as individual, independence of character and initiative of enterprise. Collier's Weekly in applying the facts to the United States, also impresses the lesson on us. It says:

"Speaking in a large way the principle job before the United States just now is to save money. For 125 years we have borrowed money from Europe. We can't do it any longer. Europe isn't going to have money to lend."

The article goes on to point out that, if the United States wants to build railways and develop mines, they "must supply the money out of their own pockets or go without." It is asserted that "the one great necessity put upon us by the war, the biggest economic need in America to-day is to save money." Collier's prints a table to show how many people out of a thousand in the several countries cited are savings depositors. The ratio runs from 524 per thousand in Switzerland to 220 in Italy and 90 per thousand in the United States. The figures in Canada are not presently at hand, but though the ratio of savings depositors to the thousand of population may be a little higher in Canada than in the United States, it is yet far too low. We do not save as much as we might do. We make money and spend it. We do not create capital to be drawn upon for great undertakings. We are not financially as independent as we might be, and must be hereafter, as we can be. When we want money for governmental and municipal enterprises we shall have to depend upon our people to save and borrow from them. Our recent city experience, with short-term debentures to finance local works shows that when the emergency arises the people have stores of ready money that can be used for public purposes. The price may be high, but it is better to pay high prices for money than to have needed public conveniences unprovided from lack of it. Besides by paying even heavy interest to our own people we shall be keeping the money at home anyway. We shall obviously have to do more and more our own financing. Great Britain, whose money bags have been open to us heretofore, will be pretty short when this war is over. In addition to this the war will teach us in Canada to depend more and more upon ourselves. We have a good chance to make this war a starting point of a new departure in industrial and commercial enterprise. We can turn our attention to capturing the new markets closed to the nations of Europe by the war, and to supplying within ourselves a large number of the prdoucts and articles shut off from us from the same cause. We can easily make more of what our people need at home. This creates a demand upon the enterprise of our capitalists and captains of industry, great and small, as well as our people at large. The people can help in this direction by confining their purchases as much as possible to Canadian productions and made-in-Canada goods. This applies to Canadians generally, and the principle should be extended to smaller communities, by every citizen adopting, as his mode of dealing, the slogan of the Walkerville Board of Trade—"Keep the Dollar at Home." The citizen who is truly loyal to the city will in addition to spending every dollar possible on Canadian goods and products, spend every dollar at home, with our local merchants and business men.

TOO BUSY FOR POLITICS.

If the politicians at Ottawa force a general election now, they will lose the thousands of votes of the men who do not believe in such tactics. Canada has enough to do in the Empire's fight and the nation's business, without politicians forcing a general election. Business men do not want an election now.—Monetary Times.

WHAT THE WAR IS FOR.

"The supreme object of the war," said Sir Wilfrid, at Park Sohmer, Montreal, "is not to merely vindicate the honour of France and the integrity of Belgium, but to defend the cause of civilization against that of barbarism. The expression is not exaggerated, for the methods of Germany since the war began recall those of Attila, who is known to history as the 'Scourge of God'."

ENGLAND'S WELCOME TO CANADIANS.

"To Canada belongs the immortal distinction and honour of sending the first contingent of Dominion troops to war. Canada has always been foremost in great Imperial movements, and in defence of the Empire's honour. Her troops will be first in the field. We in the west, had yesterday the gratification of seeing these stately ships steam into the harbour whence Gilbert set forth to discover Newfoundland and we will greet them with greater warmth than a brother if, and when, Plymouth is officially allowed to receive them.

"Canada gives us the flower of her manhood. In their favoured land the selected troops have lived for the Empire. They have crossed the ocean to fight for the Empire, and if need be, to die for the Empire. As the vanguard of what promises to be a considerable army from our daughter States which will grow in volume as the war progresses, the Canadian troops bear witness to the solidarity of the British people within the Dominions of the King, and bring proud answer to the arrant Germans who fancied that the British Empire was tumbling to pieces. Britain has received from Canada another sample of the 'contemptible little army'. These men, sons of men of Canada, why by their strong arms and alert brains have built up a sister State which promises to be the most highly developed and most prosperous country in the world, are hardy and soldierly individuals, who by nature and training are well equipped for the fray into which they are eager to plunge. The Canadian contingent, will in battle prove themselves worthy of the traditions of their race and the Dominion. May the Maple Leaf distinguish itself in many battles."—Plymouth News—on arrival of Canadian contingent at Plymouth.

United Canada's Response To The Call of The Empire

The Globe has the following reference to one of the most remarkable and imperially significant gatherings ever held in Canada. At the immense and enthusiastic meeting at Park Sohmer, Montreal, on Thursday night, in the interests of the proposed French regiment, the enthusiasm was so great, the interest so intense, that it was a reflection of the fact that the battalion proposed has developed into a brigade, 2,000 recruits having so far offered at Montreal alone. This great meeting was addressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Hon. Rudolph Lemieux, who was prominent in originating the idea, Senators Dandurand and Belcourt. It is a little remarkable that so remarkable a meeting suggested reports to no Toronto morning papers but the Globe. In addition to a full report, the Globe comments thus.

Last night (Thursday) was great and notable in Montreal. Before an audience remarkable at once for its gigantic proportions, its make-up and its purpose, Canada's greatest living statesman, a man of Canadian birth but of French-Canadian blood, made appeal to men of his own race to cease from all strife of class or creed or party, and to stand together as one man for the honour of Canada, for the defence of Britain, for the integrity of the Empire, and for the peace and freedom of the world.

It was a great sight. It was a notable hour. The thought of it stirs all the nobler sentiments in every breast capable of nobility. For what it signified it will live in the memory of the Province; it will be mentioned in the history of the nation. First in one language, then in the other, Sir Wilfrid Laurier proclaimed to all the world the essential and indivisible unity of French-speaking and English-speaking of Canada, of the Protestant and the Roman and the Roman Catholic in religion, and of the Liberal and the Conservative in politics, in the crisis which now challenges the nation, threatens the Empire, and bewilders the world.

His hair touched with the snows of three-score and ten winters, but his form erect, his step light, his eye undimmed, his natural force unabated as when, nearly half a century ago, for Canada's defence he carried his regiment's musket, Sir Wilfrid last night was once again the pride of his people and the spokesman of the Canadian nation. Other and younger men than he may "break from the van and the freemen"; others with louder boasts may "sink to the rear and the slaves." But he, loyal to Canada and to the King, in Opposition as in office, puts away all thought of party and of self, and, with the ardour of youth, with the devotion of patriotism, with the chivalry of the true gentleman, is first among Canadas foremost statesmen to call to arms in the King's name the young and manhood of the Canadian people.

As Louis Botha, the South African Boer leader, withstands to the face the ugly form of disloyalty on the veldt, so Wilfrid Laurier, the great French-Canadian Liberal, puts to shame the lesser men who turn away from the King's high call and seek first the lesser things of party and place and power. Thank God in these days of the Empire's stress Canada has at least one man who gives great and noble voice to the true Canadian spirit.

Investors Tempted By Higher Yields of Municipal Securities

(From the Financial Post.)

During the last few days some buying of municipals has been done by the United States. The price obtained under the circumstances was reasonable. Better still is the fact that more inquiries are coming from private sources from across the way. The cause of this undoubtedly is that Canadian municipals can be had to yield over five per cent. Locally also there has been a sligtly better demand. We are speaking for the whole of Canada. One house said that for a week they had been able to make expenses.

In some districts, notably Peterough, the city itself has offered its bonds to its own citizens. Mr. Frank Adams, treasurer of the city of Peterborough, says that "about a month ago it was decided by the city to issue about $150,000 worth of 6 per cent. short term debentures to obtain funds to pay for the street paving, amounting to about $80,000, and construction of outfall sewer, costing $70,000. Of the amount to be disposed of I have sold to date $80,000 worth. There are inquiries being received daily for more of them. I confidently expect that the whole issue will be taken up locally, as the money is required."

Of course, 6 per cent. debentures, of short date, are very attractive. Other cities are following the example of Peterborough, but not all of them have been equally successful.

The question of financing by short term debentures on a yield basis similar to that of Peterborough has some advantages. Of course, the cost of the money is high, and it is an open question as to whether it is the most economical course to follow. A month ago, however, it was doubtful if the debentures even of an old-established city like Peterborough could be disposed of at all. It was simply the question of getting the necessary cash. To get it at a cost of 6 per cent. cannot, in view of the world's crisis, such as we are at present passing through, be considered bad financing.

Loans to municipalities from the banks are certainly increasing. At the end of August they aggregated over $40,000,000, and that sum was increased, we understand, during September. This fact, however, need not cause alarm. Most of the municipalities are borrowing against incoming taxes, and it is quite possible that within the course of a month or two the municipal loans will show a material contraction.

One of the leading bond houses in Toronto drew the attention of The Financial Post to the fact that practically all the municipalities in Canada were economizing very strictly. The result was that the crops of bonds for the next year or so would not be heavy. At the present time the great pressure is from the larger municipalities, but with one or two notable exceptions new expenditures have ceased. When, therefore, the present supply of bonds in sight is diminished it will not be substantially added to by new issues during the next year. What new issues are sanctioned will be on a smaller scale. Meanwhile ratepayers are turning down by-laws wholesale. New Year elections will no doubt see many proposals defeated.

THE CAMPAIGN OF WIDE-AWAKE WALKERVILLE

"Keep the Dollar at Home" is the keynote of a patriotic campaign instituted by the Board of Trade, Walkerville, Ontario, which in its practical results, bids fair to be of considerable importance.

The Walkerville Board has entered on this campaign in a thoroughly business-like manner, adopting a pictorial trade-mark, also a patriotic slogan, which they invite other Boards of Trade throughout Canada to adopt.

Walkerville's Patriotic Trade Mark.

The secretary of the local Board of Trade has received from the Walkerville Board of Trade a copy of their trade-mark, a cut of which appears herewith, also copies of the patriotic Proclamation, which has been sent broadcast through Canada by the Walkerville manufacturers and wholesalers.

This Proclamation is very handsomely printed in four colours and is headed as follows:

"The Dominion of Canada has a clear duty and well defined course in defending the Mother Country; What is your patriotism worth?

"Remember that Canada's best contribution to the defence of the Empire is to keep hard at work providing food and other necessities of life. Let's forget our little quarrels and show our patriotism by hard work."

Such well known firms as the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd., Hiram Walker & Sons, distillers, Parke Davis & Company, Peabodys Company, Limited, and others, have sent these Proclamations at their own expense to their dealers throughout the Dominion with the request that they be posted simultaneously in the windows of retail stores and elsewhere.

This campaign is a purely unselfish one, and is based on the theory that it is the patriotic duty of the manufacturers to keep their employees at work, full time if possible, during war time.

Also, that the manufacturers can do this only if the consumer in Canada will spend his money for Canadian-made goods.

CATS AND DOGS ARE REFUGEES FROM ANTWERP

PARIS, Oct. 16.—Human beings are not the only refugees from the war zone now harboured in Paris. Homeless cats and dogs from Belgium and the stricken cities of Northern France followed their homeless masters and mistresses and have added thousands to the canine and feline population of the city. They gave plenty of trouble to the pound keeper, whose war reduced staff had enough to do to collect the thousands of animal pets abandoned during the exodus of Parisians when siege was threatened. The pound keeper became so overwhelmed that Le Figaro took cognizance of the situation in the following article:

"The horrors of war do not prevent lovers of animals from continuing sensible to the sufferings of their proteges, especially cats and dogs, for the poor horses are no longer a question in our cities.

"We have received complaints from certain animal lovers who feel compassion for the cruel treatment of which these animals have been the object at the pound.

"We have made inquiries. Let sensitive persons console themselves.

"In these last weeks the exodus of the unfortunate populations of the north brought to Paris a certain quantity of stray cats.

"Dogs were also 'Belgian refugees.'

"And then there has been the dispersion in Paris of cats and dogs abandoned by their masters at the time of the panic the beginning of September. And it is thus that the pound has had to receive five times as many prisoners as usual. Mobilization reduced its personnel by two-thirds, and its waggons have been requisitioned. The animals have consequently suffered, and the care of them has perforce been insufficient for some days.

"But now all goes well. Order has been re-established at the pound. The dogs are again almost happy. The cats also."

U OUGHT TO HEAR DR. GORDON AND HIS ARTISTS AT ST. PAUL'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH MONDAY NIGHT

Says Germans Are, At Any Rate, Satisfied With Their War Taxes

Preparedness For Conflict Gave Physical Proof War Taxes Had Been Well Spent—Solemnity of Sorrow, But Not Despair, is the Spirit Now Pervading the Country.

Frederick H. Leonhardt, a New York chemist, recently returned from Germany, has described some of the details of how the Kaiser's troops went to war.

His first visit to Germany in six years found Mr. Leonhardt in Hanover when war seemed still only remotely possible. His declaration made it necessary for him to remain there longer than his plans had contemplated, and it came about that he saw much of the inner workings of mobilization. Old friends among the officers remaining in Hanover gave him glimpses of things that others did not even suspect.

"A complete scheme of mobilization embracing every possible contingency is worked out by the General Staff each year," he said yesterday. "It is changed each year not only because new men come to the staff in the regular routine, but because it is an obvious precaution that it should be. But as the new schedules are drawn up they cover everything, and if the impossible should have happened and Austria should have turned against Germany, there would have been a schedule for that, just as there was for the movement of troops to the French frontier and to the Russian frontier.

"I recall an illustration of the amazing extent to which these preparations are carried. It was told me by an engineer in the railway service. Six or eight years ago some new high-speed locomotives were being built for one of the lines. They were ready to leave the shops for the final tests, when notification came from the General Staff that their stacks were too high by an inch or two.

"Before these engines could be taken out these stacks had to be changed, despite the other changes that were necessary because of the difference in draught that resulted. And why Because in some out-of-the way corner of the empire there were tunnels these stacks would not have cleared, and under some contingency it might have been necessary to send these locomotives through these tunnels; perhaps only one of them, but still preparation was exacted.

"When I was finally able to get away from Hanover for Berlin on a thirty-car train that was carrying reservists in, I was able to note two other evidences of this attention to detail.

Equipment All New.

"The thing, I think, that impressed me most was the fact that on the troop trains which passed us with the Berlin guards aboard there was not a piece of equipment that was not brand new. Uniforms, accoutrements, helmets, the very harness of the horses, had, it was plain to be seen, never before been worn. Rifles, of course, were not new, but everything else was, and it gave one a wonderful sense of preparedness to see this.

"And this, I may say, did more than anything else to sweep away what little of anti-militarism there might have been left in the empire. There was evidence for every one to see that the war taxes, which are the life of the arguments against militarism, had been spent for the purpose for which they were imposed and for nothing else.

"The helmets of the men that passed us were covered with the customary cloth shields. These shields or covers, have woven into the front of them the regimental number, but on these troop trains the covers were turned inside out, so one might look ever so closely, but he could not say what commands were going by.

"Except that they were bound for the French or the Russian frontiers, the men themselves did not know where they were bound. When the orders to move came not even the commanders of corps knew where they were bound. They were told to take their men to such and such a place, and there entrain. When the trains moved they knew where they were going, but not before.

"Since 1870 the German army has been moved—in war manoeuvres heretofore, and now in actual warfare—under sealed orders, such as have been used in the navies of the world from time immemorial. When a commander himself does not know where he is bound, it is not likely that advance information can be bruited about.

"I suppose that even now there are soldiers in France who do not know more definitely than that where they are. It is certain that their friends at home do not, for when the soldiers write home they may not say where they are. The mail passes through offices established at the front, and to these offices the mail in return comes. The only address that can be given is that of these offices, and all matter is handled through them.

Eagerness for Battle.

"I spoke a moment ago of the soldiers that sang as they went to the front. Many of them had given freer rein than that to their eagerness. On the outside of their carriages now and then could be seen scrawled in chalk: 'Fast Express for France.' William, Emperor of Germany and Russia,' and jests of similar character. I saw under one window a square marked off in which had been printed 'Further declarations of war received here.'

"It is not the soldiers only who sing. I was able to go through the great factory in Leipzic where uniforms are made. Most of the work—which, by the way, is done under the most modern conditions—is done by soldiers who in civilian life are tailors and who spend so all their service except what is necessary to give them their elementary training.

"Buttonholes, however, are not made by the men, but by girls, who use, by the way, American sewing machines. As we entered the factory building we heard singing, and when we reached the fourth floor we found it was these buttonhole girls. Hymns and patriotic songs sounded above the hum of their machines all day long.

"That spirit is all over Germany. At the very top notch of the nation's prosperity and progress this war has come, but it is being met bravely and smilingly. I think the best proof of this is the attitude the Socialists have taken. You may recall that at the meeting of the Reichstag on August 4th they waited, for the first time, for the cheers for the Emperor, and they went, too, to the rostrum to shake his hand. Then, when they had gone out, they voted half the funds of their treasury to the Red Cross.

Preparedness for Emergencies.

"While I was in Hanover I came across one other example of the efficiency of Germany's preparation for emergencies. Across many of the roads that were being or might be used for military purposes on foreign soil, heavy wires, cables in some instances, were stretched just high enough to catch a man's neck as he drove by in an automobile. Except at sharp turns in the way, or in some deeply shaded place, these contrivances would be effective only at night, but with a machine going at top speed, you may imagine what fearful havoc they would work.

"A very simple device was worked out to thwart them. Beginning just below the lamps of the automobile strips of steel were fastened. They curved back over the bonnet of the engine until, just above the driver's head, they joined, and went on to the rear of the car in a single strip. The edges of these strips were sharpened to a tool edge, and for certain distances they were serrated, so that any cable that might strike them would be cut as though it were thread.

"It is hardly necessary for me to speak of the other details of the German army organization—of the regiments of railroaders that are attached to each corps, so that lines can be built and operated wherever an army may go; of the various engineer detachments; of the aeronautic corps; of the perfection of the organization of the commissary and the quartermaster's departments. Even through the haze of misrepresentation that has been cast over everything German these things have become known.

"I believe that Germany to-day is satisfied that her army is worth all it has cost, and more. It has been the most powerful educational influence in the empire. It has brought out of mountain villages into the centres of progress men who would never perhaps have gone there. It has given them breadth of vision; it has given them desires for better things; it has shown them the way to better things.

"It has made a German nation—a nation whose advancement along all lines has not even been approached by any other nation during the present generation. Germans know this to be true, and they are well content. As for the truth about the war, I believe they are willing to wait until a clearer vision and truer understanding is possible."

Face And Hands Covered With Sores

Zam-Buk Worked Complete Cure

Mrs. P. Watson Drummond of Thetford Mines, P.Q., writes: "Every fall for three years, as soon as cold weather set in, my daughter's face and hands would be covered with rough watery patches, which before long would turn into nasty sores. These would itch and smart terribly, and she would suffer in this way from fall to spring Nothing we could get did her any good until I started using Zam-Buk. This wonderful ointment quickly relieved the irritation. We persevered with Zam-Buk, and to our great delight it worked a complete cure. I have also used Zam-Buk for cuts and burns, and think there is nothing to compare with it."

For eczema, piles, abscesses, ulcers cuts, burns, bruises, or any skin disease or injury, Zam-Buk is unequalled. As soon as applied, it commences its work of healing, quickly alleviates the pain, and builds up new healthy tissue.

At all druggists and stores, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, 50c. per box. See the name on the box and refuse all substitutes.

NO ALUM

IS APPOINTED TAX COLLECTOR

Mr. W. B. Anderson Receives the Appointment at a Meeting of the Council of North Monaghan

THE RELIEF QUESTION

A meeting was held at May's school house Thursday night, when the members of the North Monaghan Council were present. Mr. Ha Rush and Mr. F. Miller, a deputation from the City Patriotic Association, waited on the Council in regard to making arrangements with the Township for the caring of certain persons in the Township. Mr. H. Rush said that the City had been assisting some three or four women and their families, their husbands having gone to the war.

Mr. F. Miller, City Relief Officer, dealt with the cases individually, and after he had concluded Reeve Howden said that the Township had supplied the families in question up to the time they had received their husbands' pay fro mthe Government.

W. B. Anderson Appointed.

The various applications for the position of Tax Collector were then dealt with. The Council, after considering the numerous applications for charity, decided it was advisable to appoint some person to act as tax collector and township relief officer. It was moved by Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Dobbin, that Wm. B. Anderson be appointed tax collector and relief officer, at a salary of $100.

May Erect Poles.

A communication was received from the Peterborough Utilities Commission asking permission to erect poles, etc., and to carry on their electric light and power business. It was moved by Mr. Forster, seconded by Mr. Robson, that permission be given, but that all poles, etc., erected must be in accordance with directions from the municipal council.

Accounts Passed.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid: Sawyer-Massey Co., crusher, $1,331.50; less 5 per cent. discount, $66.57; less expenses of Howden and Young to Hamilton, $17; balance due Massey, $1,247.93; C. P. R. freight, $1.44.

A communication was received by D. W. Dunbbs in regard to the signing of T. Hurley's plan, passed at a previous meeting. It was moved and seconded that the motion passed at a former meeting authorizing the reeve and clerk to sign their names and attach the seal of the township to Mr. Hurley's plan be rescinded until such time as all interested parties come to an amicable settlement.

Road Repairs.

Mr. Howden reported that the Brinton Carpet Co. had applied to him to have the road leading into their factory repaired. The Council, after considering the request, decided there was no money to do any work this fall.

It was decided by the Council that Township Relief Officer Anderson investigate all hospital bills and applications for charity, and orders for provisions only may be granted and only to those whom he thinks deserving, by his application to the reeve for an order for the same.

The clerk reported that the township rate fixed at the last meeting of 3 1-4 mills would be much easier and more accurately made up if the same was in tenths instead of quarter mills.

It was moved by Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Forster, that the Township rate fixed at the last meeting be rescinded and that the same be changed from 3 1-4 mills to 3 3-10 mills.

It was moved and seconded that the clerk look after certain poles along the road which are dangerous to traffic, the road having fallen away into the creek, something of a temporary nature to be erected to keep vehicles from dropping into the same.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

EMPRESS HOTEL A HOME ON THE ROAD

Beautifully and Comfortably Furnished—Running Water in Every Room, Thirty of Which Have Baths Adjoining—Grill Room, Barber Shop, Billiard Room and Other Big Hotel Features.

A new industry with a staff of forty employees will be opened in Peterborough on Monday. This is an assertion respecting the Empress Hotel, which will pass unquestioned when one regards it simply from an industrial standpoint. In commercial circles it will soon be known as one of the coziest, most commodious and best appointed hotels in the province. It has been laid out and furnished with one object in view, the comfort of the travelling public, and the proprietor, Mr. George N. Graham has had the necessary experience, knows the desires and fancies of travellers, to guide him in the planning of this new home. The Empress is surpassed only by some of the big city hotels, and then but quantitively. None of them has a monopoly on good taste, on that expression of quality that is entirely independent of bulk and and a tendency to scrape the sky.

The revolving doors of the Empress will respond to the first guests and visitors on Monday, and the new register will receive its first impressions. Incidentally, there are going to be pleasant surprises to those who see the new house in its first brightness and freshness. Throughout the entire four floors there are ideas carried out that are found only in the metropolitan hotels. To do justice to all the care and attention, to say nothing of the money which has been expended in the making of the Empress, is impossible, but a few details can be mentioned to indicate the effect accomplished.

Hot Water Everywhere.

There are thirty bedrooms with baths and bath connections, seventy rooms with running water, hot and cold, seven suites, each comprising two bedrooms and a bathroom, six public bath rooms and five toilet rooms. Judging the hotel on its least pretentious rooms it stands high. Each room is furnished with a splendid brass bed, mahogany furniture, including dresser, table, couple of chairs, and in many of the rooms big comfortable rest chairs. Hot and cold water in every room with baths attached to thirty of them. Shining towel racks and tumbler holders of nickle plate are part of the appointments. And all these furnishings are new. Several of the rooms have shower baths with marble floors and walls. The Empress has new carpets throughout. The bedrooms and halls are padded with the deep and soft designs received from the Brinton Carpet Company. In many of the rooms there has been worked out a harmony of colours that is decidedly restful and pleasing. Each room is lighted by the indirect system. Out on the west wall there is a sign, "A Home on the Road," and to the visitor this appears to be no empty promise. Each room will not only be a home, but it is a new one, well lighted, well heated and tastefully appointed. Everything new, neat and comfortable.

Of course the rooms are graded, those of the suites and with bath rooms attached have received special attention. Mahogany and brass, a quiet but ample lighting effect, comfortable chairs and so on; a Bible, too, on every table. And by the way, it might as well be mentioned here, a telephone in every room connected with the Empress switch board in the office.

Barber Shop, Too.

Including the basement, there are four floors to the building. In the basement at the rear are store rooms, boiler rooms and the usual provision of space for similar purposes. In the front section leading down from the rotunda is a billiard room with a table for English billiards and two pool tables, all new and provided by the Brunswicke Balk Company. There are trunk rooms and further on a two chair barber shop, specially fitted for Messrs. Jack Riley and Joe Donoghue, lately engaged with Mr. Jas. Lewis.

The Sample Rooms.

On the ground floor there are ten sample rooms, and with five in the basement and several upstairs, the Empress affords every accommodation for the representatives of the big wholesale houses.

Dining Room and Grill.

At the north-east corner of the ground floor the dining room is located. It is connected with the grill at the south of it by very wide folding doors which will enable the two rooms to be used as one at the regular meal hours, when necessary, and the grill separately from 8 p.m. to 12 p.m. The dining room is finished in light cream tones with ivory finishings. The ceiling is panelled with heavy beams, a mission design, and supported by marble pillars. The designer has effected a decidedly pleasing harmony of colours. The windows have pretty curtains with chintz draperies, and at the top of each is a semi-oval of coloured glass in appropriate patterns. The tables are round and are four seaters. On the west side the dining room opens upon the rotunda, and the whole three rooms, including the grill are tiled with one general design.

The dining room is lighted indirectly, the reflectors being decidedly effective.

The grill is finished in a dark green blended effect. The ceiling is heavily beamed, and the complete scheme of its decoration is heightened by the pretty lights employed.

The Rotunda.

In no section of the hotel does the decorator's work show to better advantage than in the rotunda. The principal tone is a rich brown obtained on the walls by a leather paper of brownish blend. The ceiling, heavily studded, the panels being finished in harmony with general theme. The floor is tiled in a quiet, decorative design. To commence with, the rotunda is expansive and an abundance of room has been provided for this forum of the Empress. On the west side is a cosy writing room furnished with turned oak desks. It is deeply carpeted, restful and quiet.

Around from the writing room, the office stands out prominently with its rounded counter, its telephone switchboard accommodating one hundred 'phones throughout the hotel, the usual room rack and register. The Hotel World ledger and room rack system is employed. Provision has been made for a special telegraph wire in to the hotel and this facility will be added in a short time. Between the writing room and office is a big fire place yawning out upon the rotunda ready to provide its cheer to the other home-like touches with which the Empress abounds.

Marble Stairs.

A finishing touch is added in the splendid stairs ascending from the rotunda to the first floor. They are all in white marble with brass banister and a tiled wainscotting. Another rich touch is lent by the purple velvet velour hangings at the entrance to the ladies' reception room off the rotunda. It is beautifully furnished and with fire place and lighting indicates the special attention paid to the demands of guests of the gentler sex.

The rotunda chairs represent the last word in comfort. They are of domed oak, upholstered in leather and generous in supply. Flowers and plants are found on every hand and are another pleasing feature of the Empress.

A large room has been set apart for the men's lavatory and wash room. It is all in white marble and tile, with a shoe shine stand installed.

The Kitchen.

The kitchen is elaborately planned to effect simplicity. It is well lighted and airy. In addition to the windows there is a large glass expanse in the ceiling, affording an abundance of light, as this section is only of one story. The Lang system of three ovens and one fire is used for the principal cooking apparatus, but there is also a big broiler, a steamer, a stock pot and similar facilities necessary in the kitchen of a large hotel. There is a battery of hot water and coffee urns, a milk, cream and ice cream ice chest and a steam warming apparatus that provides for everything on a menu that requires to be kept hot after cooking. A large new Monitor refrigerator has been installed off the kitchen, with one compartment for meats alone and another for other foodstuffs. The G. S. Blakeslee dish-washing system is employed, and is too detailed for description.

Mr. E. Comtes, late of the Waldorf Hotel, Hamilton, is the steward of the Empress, with Constantin Dikta as chef. With Dikta as first chef of the Empress, the dining room and grill are assured of special menus. The bar is on the west side of the ground floor and is handsomely furnished. Mr. P. Carroll will be chief wine clerk, and under his supervision the Empress bar should be in good hands.

Reception Room.

The main reception room is on the first floor leading from the balcony over the entrance. Two drawing room suites, one of them of mahogany, a new Mason and Risch piano, a beautiful carpet, etc., give this room a fine appearance. The family apartments on the north-east end of the first floor have the finest appointments in the house. On the various floors there are cosy corners to be fitted up. There are one or two small reception rooms. The ladies' toilet room on the first floor, has not been stinted. Liquid soap and paper towling are modern features provided.

Some of the Staff.

The Empress clerks are Arthur Graham and Harry Tarr. Miss McGregor of Toronto, is in charge of the dining room. Of course, Mr. George N. Graham, the proprietor, requires no introduction in this new hotel. He is as well known among travelling salesmen and other knights of the road as any hotel man in the country. In his big electric sign he has made the name Empress stand out prominently, and his claim of "a home on the road" will likely be fulfilled to the letter in the Empress.

Bought in Peterborough.

The furnishings of the Empress Hotel were purchased from local merchants as far as possible. The silverware for the dining room and grill was secured through Alex. Gibson. The linen was bought from A. W. Cressman & Co., the window hangings and other goods from the J. C. Turnbull Co. The Brinton Carpet Company supplied the carpets. The furniture was bought from J. D. Craig; the flowers from the Peterborough Floral Co. The Peterborough Furniture Co. made the tables for the dining and grill rooms. The plumbing was done by Brenton, plastering by Saxby, painting and decorating by Geo. Duncan, carpentering by Ephgrave, and so on down the list to the minor work and purchases.

The Empress will offer a special business man's lunch between 12 and 2 o'clock, and dinner at 6 o'clock.

MRS. LOCK'S RECITAL AT CONSERVATORY

The piano and vocal recital at the Conservatory of Music, last night, was of a character to well repay those who were present. They were delighted with the intrinsic musical merit of the contributions of Mrs. Lock, and gratified with the addition of another strong and cultured element to the musical resources of the Conservatory and the musical forces of the city. Mrs. Lock showed a highly developed musical instinct, and an artistic facility of method. Both as a pianiste and as a vocalist she demonstrated her claim to a high place in musical efficiency and finish.

Mrs. Lock will hereafter be connected with the teaching faculty of the Conservatory. She was assisted in the programme very satisfactorily by Miss Laura Logan, violiniste, another member of the Conservatory staff, whose numbers were marked by very capable execution, performance, and taste and feeling. Mrs. Lock's accompaniments were supplied by Miss Pearl McKee, and Miss Logan's by her mother, Mrs. Logan. The following is the programme so excellently presented:

Piano—Automme; Etudes de Concert No. 2—Chaminade.
Vocal—Solvieg Song—Greig.
Piano—Sonata in A b op: 26 (with Funeral March)—Beethoven.
Violin—Legende—Bohm.
Vocal—"With Verdure Clad," (Creation)—Haydn.
Piano—Etudes in G b Major—Chopin.
Violin (a) 'Une nuit Etoilee' Chaminde; (b) Scotch Lullaby—Von Kunitz.
Vocal, Valse Song —Ch. Gounod—(Romeo and Juliet).

STILL GOING

James Robertson has been six months going to the station to pay an old fine for drunkenness. He was going last night, but was again subdued by liquor, consequently he incurred another $3 debt this morning, and is still "going".

John Moher was fined a like sum for the same offence.

Normal Students Were Guests of Epworth League

Young People of the George Street Methodist Sunday School Entertained Normalites Last Night

The Epworth League of the George Street Church, last evening, held a reception for the Normal students. The entertainment was highly successful and reflected credit upon the officers of the League. After the opening numbers, the President, Mr. Thompson, extended a hearty welcome to the students on behalf of the society. The musical part of the programme pleased every one. Miss Telzmann and Mr. Weller were each obliged to appear a second time, in response to prolonged encores. The programme was as follows:

Chairman — Rev. R. G. Peever, B.A., B.D.
Hymn—"All Hail the Power" etc.
Prayer—The Lord's Prayer.
Welcome—C. S. Thompson, B.A., President.
Vocal solo—Miss E. Whytock.
Piano solo—Miss Lowe.
Vocal solo—Mr. M. Weller.
Violin solo—Miss M. Telzmann.
Social features.

The social features included a "Conversat," which served to get one another acquained. An amusing event was a peanut race, participated in by a number of volunteer Normal students. There was also a guessing contest, which proved interesting. Toward the end of the evening an enjoyable social half-hour was spent.

CROSSLEY MEETINGS NEARING CLOSE

The Crossley and Clarry meetings in St. James' Methodist Church are nearing the close, as only three more days of meetings remain.

Last night's address was one of the best of the series, and the results were especially fruitful. "Seven Royal Proclamations" was the theme. These were given to Backsliders, Christians, Parents, Young Men, Drinkers, Unconverted husbands, and to all deferring decision.

Mr. Crossley sang what he called his Muskoka song, "Flee as a bird," and also "He lifted me."

Sunday will be a full day. At 11 a.m. an acrostic sermon on the Scriptures will be given; at 2.30, an address to the Sabbath School; and at 7 p.m., "Wrong Views of Hell" will be discussed. Special solos will be rendered at these services.

POLICE COURT

The evidence in the case of John McGarvey, charged with stealing $85 from Harry Hamilton, concluded yesterday afternoon. His Honour Judge Huycke found that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant a conviction and forthwith dismissed the case. Mr. Widdifield appeared for the defence.

Special Meeting of No. 13 I. O. O. F. To-night at 8 o'clock to make arrangements for the funeral of the late Brother Douglas Robertson. By Order, G. LACHEUR, N. G.

THE PLEASURES OF READING

By F. M. DELA FOSSE

A few days since I was looking over a shelf-full of books relating to Philosophy. They were mostly works of old authors and the dusty condition of the covers was sufficient evidence that they were not at the present time, if they ever had been, particular favourites with users of the Library. And as I looked, a saying of the poet Coleridge came to my mind —"If you are not a thinking man to what purpose are you a man at all?" It was a disquieting, even an humiliating thought, for I could not help realizing to how great an extent we mortals are slaves to Unreason and what an incalculable number of hours wasted in idleness and lack of reflection can be cast in the balance against the sum of the world's philosophical and ethical labours.

We are so prone to consider ourselves reflecting beings, however, that the chances are that any of us would be highly indignant if charged with being void of the faculty. But the fact remains, that apart from a few select souls who give themselves over to serious meditation and study there are none who seem to desire to adapt their brains to sustained and coherent reasoning.

Hundreds of people have passed and re-passed those musty-looking tomes since the Library was opened and probably not one in a hundred has bestowed more than a careless glance at the titles of the books and the names of the authors. Yet, it is largely owing to the labours of those very men that civilization to-day owes its advancement, showing it in a clearer outlook on life and in greater nobility of individual and national character.

The lives of these writers were passed in the quiet and seclusion of their libraries. They took no part in the active affairs of their respective countries, but, notwithstanding this, they wielded more influence than the astutest of statesmen, the mightiest of warriors, the most eloquent of orators. They were enabled to do this by the power of their pens and because a certain percentage of thinking men and women saw the wisdom of their words and acted as evangelists of their doctrines. Surely, no truer remark was ever made than that by Sir Arthur Helps, author of the once well-known book "Friends in Council" when he wrote the words "The millstreams that turn the clappers of the world arise in solitary places."

The outbreak of the great European war furnishes a very apt illustration of the power of Philosophy. Nine-tenths of the present vast Germanic army have probably never read or heard of the works of their countrymen Trietschke and Nietzche, but the other tenth has and unfortunately it is this tenth that has had the power to inflict its will on the balance of the people. Both these men preached the dogma that Might is Right, and this idea carefully and systematically disseminated throughout the empire has produced its ghastly harvest of misery and bloodshed. Luckily, there is a philosophy of Peace as well as of War, a philosophy that preaches that Right is Might, and if History is any criterion there can be little doubt as to which will emerge triumphant from the present conflict.

It would be foolish to advise everyone to read Philosophy. There are certain minds absolutely incapable of understanding the difference between inductive and deductive methods and whose intellectual powers would be brought perilously close to the breaking point in the effort to do so. But there are very many who only need a stimulus along the right path to enable them to take a really lively interest in such a study, and for whom it would prove a profitable and delightful occupation, if entered upon with discernment and humility.

It will be easily seen that these lines are addressed to those who have a natural liking for the more serious branches of literature. It is not probable that they will appeal to such as look entirely to fiction to rest their jaded brains, nor to the individual who thinks nothing of taking home two books on the Higher Criticism, one on Natural Science and one of sermons, as the weekly pabulum for himself and the family circle. Such a being is altogether beyond the domain of human direction and guidance. It would be an insult to him to cast a doubt on his ability to satisfactorily digest even throughout the whole course of the fall and winter months the amount of literature that he devours in one week. These words are not for such as he, but for those who possess finite minds and know it and are content to grow wise by degrees.

Dr. J. L. Gordon Coming To City Next Week

The Noted Preacher and Orator to Give a Series of His Plain Talks on "Christian Citizenship"

Peterborough is to be favoured with a visit from the renowned Dr. J. L. Gordon, the famous Winnipeg orator, who will open a two weeks' campaign on Monday evening, October 19th, in St Paul's church. On Sunday, Dr. Gordon will occupy the pulpit of St. Paul's church in the morning, and of the George Street Methodist church in the evening. The audiences are to be made further attractive by the soulful singing of Albert E. Greenlaw, the wonderful coloured soloist, and the celebrated Russian pianist, Edward Hesselburg.

This religious movement is under the management of local laymen, composed of influential members of all the churches in the city, and is purely undenominational. A feature of Dr. Gordon's work is his "Question Drawer," which has been productive of great good in his campaigns. There is to be no admission fee, only a free-will offering.

Dr. Gordon's talks are exactly what they profess them to be, "Plain Talks on Christian Citizenship." His campaign throughout Western Ontario this fall is intended to drive home the fundamental truths of life and religion; to give the people a firm grip on the great questions of life and eternity. He adopts nothing sensational in his preaching methods, holding that the most sensational doings on top of earth is to tell the people the bare truth. That his talks are convincing and helpful to his great audiences there is not a doubt, and the community should experience a great uplift as a result of the meetings.

All of the Doctor's subjects are of the intensely practical sort which deal with the vital problems of daily life.

In the singing of the noted soloist, Albert E. Greenlaw, who accompanies Dr. Gordon, Peterborough people are promised one of the greatest treats in years. The greatest vocalist that has ever been heard is the verdict of many people. Mr. Greenlaw is more than a vocalist. His life of consecration is made manifest in his sympathetic interpretation. Whether he is singing of the fine old songs that a message for every heart. His numbers include "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord," "The Holy City," "He Lifted Me," and many other songs whose very simplicity make them irresistible.

The services are run in clockwork order by Mr. E. O. Weber, in charge. Song service begins at 7.45. A prayer by a local clergyman is followed by a few words by some citizen of the town.

E. O. Weber, head of the Committee of Berlin business men, who organized Dr. Gordon's tour, is a marvel of enthusiasm and organizing ability. At home Mr. Weber is the head of one of Berlin's biggest industries. So thoroughly is he impressed with the importance of Dr. Gordon's work that at the present moment he is devoting practically all his time towards the management of Dr. Gordon's campaign. Dr. Gordon undertook the present tour at the suggestion of the men of Berlin and they have organized the campaign and have undertaken to relieve him of all details, devoting their time and money to a work which they feel it a privilege to be identified with.

To influence the citizenship of the various large centres for good, to strengthen the hold of their citizens upon the great fundamental truths of life, to accomplish this is a task great enough, and of such stupendous importance as to appeal to the imagination of any man. Some such dream was a leading motive in the decision of Dr. Gordon when a few months ago he acceded to a proposition from a number of prominent Christian men of Berlin to undertake an extensive campaign throughout the large centres of Ontario, giving his plain talks on Canadian Christian Citizenship.

DEMAND FOR HORSES

United States Investigators Declare There is Opportunity For Americans

WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 16.—During the next decade there will probably be an increased demand for American horses in the countries now engaged in the European war. The demand may even continue much longer, according to investigators of the United States Department of Agriculture, but when peace is restored, more will be needed for agriculture. Already European agents are said to be endeavouring to purchase horses in this country and Canada, and there is an increased interest in many sections in horse breeding.

To meet this increased European demand American farmers may well endeavour to raise well-bred horses, although the Department of Agriculture does not advise them to purchase a surplus of horses merely for breeding purposes. It merely advises that ordinary farm work should be done when ever possible by good mares which should be bred to good stallions. It also desires to emphasize the fact that only horses of high quality may be profitably raised to-day. Inferior horses are a drug on the market, and their production is to be discouraged as much as the production of good horses should be encouraged.

The United States has previously been drawn on to supply European countries at war. In the Boer war over 100,000 horses were bought here by the British government. It may be doubted whether a foreign government could now obtain a similar supply in this country, except at excessive cost. However, if farmers take pains to utilize their good mares during this winter to breed them to good stallions, in the course of several years (time enough for the foals to develop), America will be better able to meet the European demand.

It is natural that European countries should look to the United States for horses, as next to Russia it has more of these animals than any other country in the world. The United States and Russia possess 58 per cent. of the world supply. Strange to say, however, there were no horses originally on our continent and the present supply comes from stock brought over from Europe. Canada's supply is small compared to our own.

War as a Consumer of Horses.

The German army requires for a complete mobilization 770,000 horses, and the French army is said to require 250,000, which figure, however, probably includes only those for the cavalry. It is conservatively estimated on good authority that 1,000,000 horses are now engaged in the European war. As the great majority of these horses are not included in the permanent military organization but are used for farm work and are requisitioned by governments only when needed for military purposes, the countries of continental Europe will certainly face an acute shortage of farm horses before the next planting season which will seriously affect the price of horses the world over, as soon as peace is declared.

According to the best information horses in the countries of Europe now at war number as follows:

Great Britain	2,501,000
France	3,222,000
Belgium	260,000
Germany	4,800,000
Austria-Hungary	4,674,000
Russia	24,683,000
Total	39,965,000

In addition England has a supply of about six million to draw on in her various dependencies. Russia has about ten million in Asia and France probably 500,000 to one million in her colonies.

The rapacious consumption of horses in war is illustrated by figures from our own civil conflict. During his Shenandoah Valley campaign, Sheridan was supplied with fresh horses at the rate of 180 per day. In his report for the year 1865, the quartermaster general of the United States army stated: "The service of a cavalry horse under an enterprising commander has averaged only four months." During 1864 there were 500 horses consumed per day in the northern army, without considering those captured and not reported. During eight months of that year, the cavalry of the army of the Potomac was remounted twice, nearly 40,000 horses in all being required.

Our Own Army Desirable Market.

Our own army furnishes a desirable market for well-bred horses, there being under the remount system, at least 5,000 horses required annually to supply the army and the national guard. There are now about 20,000 horses in our regular army on a peace basis. In war, many more would be required before the first engagement. There is, therefore, a steady market for good horses independent of the European demand. Even the invasion of motor power which has reduced the number of horses on our streets has not influenced this demand. In fact, the price of horses has advanced along with other commodities during recent years.

DAIRY PRODUCE STILL PLENTIFUL

The damp weather and the soggy state of the roads kept many farmers away from the market this morning, those who attended report no changes in prices this week. Root crops are fairly abundant; turnips selling at 3 for 5c, parsnips and carrots, 5c or 3 for 10c. Celery was 5c each. Potatoes are still $1 per bag, cabbages 5c, and cauliflower 10c and 15c. Apples and grapes were still plentiful, the former selling at 20c a peck, and the latter 20c a basket.

There was a fair offering in the inside market. Eggs and butter were the same as last week, viz., 35c and 30c, respectively. Chicken were $1 per pair, ducks 70c each, and geese $1.40 each.

Frosts of Winter Hold No Terror For The Russians

(By Lieutenant Colonel Roustam Bek, in the New York Herald.)

LONDON, Oct. 16.—I have received letters from correspondents concerning the new phase of war which will begin with the coming of winter. I intended, of course, to deal with this matter in due time when the winter weather was nearer, but as I gather there is some anxiety about it, it may be well to do so now.

The winter will play a most important part for those countries only which are engaged in East Prussia, Silesia and in Galicia, where the frosts become sometimes very severe, especially in East Prussia, which is an open, flat country, situated on the coast of the Baltic Sea.

Strong icy north winds often blow ceaselessly for many days, and snow covers the whole country as in Siberia. The rivers, streams and lakes become icebound in Silesia.

In the second half of November Russia and East Prussia are, with rare exceptions, covered with snow, and very shortly afterward the winter begins in Silesia as well, where severe cold weather reigns from the middle of December to the end of January, and sometimes the beginning of February.

Of course, the German General Staff knows very well the great difficulties which the German army must undoubtedly face with the approach of winter, and it is hastening to achieve some positive success before this trouble comes.

German people, as well as French, English, Belgians and Italians, are not accustomed to extreme cold weather, except the inhabitants of East Prussia, who, comparatively, are not numerous.

In Germany as is well known, the winter is rather mild, and in the central part of the Kaiser's country frosts are very rarely harder than 25 degrees to 30 degrees below freezing point. The German army, therefore, has never had an opportunity of getting accustomed to really rough winter conditions, except a few divisions quartered in the northeast of the empire.

The military operations during the winter, even if it is mild, necessitate a considerable change of tactics, lightening some tasks on the one hand but increasing the number of ill among the soldiers on the other. The crossing of the frozen rivers is much easier, and the army is relieved of important operations necessary in other seasons, such as, for instance, the defence of the river crossings, etc.

Difficulties for Cavalry.

For cavalry winter brings many difficulties; the movement of troops in the snow is also more difficult, as well as the masking of the march of the army. The use of fires on the bivouacs or in the fortified positions, without which no army could exist during severe cold, also brings many disadvantages; it attracts the attention of the enemy and the fire of his artillery.

Napoleon's army on entering Russia experienced the Russian winter, and, in fact, was destroyed by what the Russians call the "red frost," which Germans fear more than Russian Cossacks or the new artillery, which has already instilled horror in our enemy. Any one who knows Germany, and has had an opportunity of seeing German towns, will remember how the Germans like a rather warm temperature, and soldiers' barracks throughout the country are extremely well heated. The slightest draught makes a German ill, and I was always very much surprised to see how sensitive the Germans are to a change of temperature.

When I was studying the German army my attention was attracted, of course, to the so-called "winter manoeuvres," which in reality are only tactical exercises, lasting not more than one or two days. Always after such manoeuvres the military hospitals were overflowing with ill men, and German officers complained of the "silly" custom of the authorities in ordering manoeuvres in such weather.

"When the war comes then we shall be able to bear everything, but in this way we ruin the health of our reservists," they often told me.

The war has come, and I can say positively that the German army is not trained at all to fight in a severe winter.

Now let us consider Russia. The Russian people like the winter very much. Russian poetry is full of poems singing the beauty of it, and the "Red Frost, the Red Nose" is the principal hero of them. The whole Russian population always looks forward to the approach of winter, and the more intense the frost becomes the happier a Russian is.

The winter in Russia is known as a "beauty in white sarafan" (sarafan is the national dress of Russian women). It is also called by peasants "our little mother winter," and many pet names are given to this great ally of the Russian might.

Russians Like the Winter.

Russian soldiers also like the winter; they become like new men, smarter and more active. From his childhood the Russian peasant is quite familiar with deep snow, temperatures of 100 degrees below freezing point, and the snowstorms of Russia, which are unique.

Let us remember the passing of the army of General Gurko through the Balkans in 1877 and 1878 during the Russo-Turkish War, and the celebrated winter battles on the Schipka Pass.

The famous painting by the great Vereshtchagin, "On the Schipka All Is Calm," immortalizes it. The Russian soldier can sleep in the snow with the same comfort as in his bed in barracks, and he is specially trained, as Russian sappers are, to manoeuvre in it.

In Russia there is a special period of winter manoeuvres which coincides with the hardest weather of the season, between January and the first half of February. These manoeuvres last three weeks or a month, and are ordered for the whole of Russia. Especially well trained in this respect are the troops of the Warsaw military district, which are now in contact with the Germans in East Prussia, and never after such manoeuvres have the Russian soldiers complained of them. On the contrary, they always preferred them to the summer grand manoeuvres and came back stronger and without the slightest signs of fatigue.

With regard to horses the same thing may be said.

A good illustration of how a Russian army can bear frost is the celebrated parade on the frozen Neva which takes place every year on January 6, when the temperature is usually 30 to 60 degrees below the freezing point.

This parade is commanded by the Tsar himself, and it is famous because the whole garrison is dressed in full dress without overcoats, and the whole army corps from six o'clock in the morning await the appearance of the Tsar from the Winter Palace, which often is only at twelve o'clock noon.

All military schools take part in this parade, and all the cadets are proud to stand the cold as long as possible. It must be noticed that no furs or thick linings are allowed either to the officers or the men.

The Address Of The Canucks

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Canadian soldiers, or such of them as have already arrived on Salisbury Plain, are immensely pleased with the look of their place of encampment, and one and all vote the place a huge improvement on Valcartier, to put it mildly. The Army Service Corps, the Highlanders, and a small portion of the infantry already have reached Salisbury, but it probably will be well on in next week before the camp is complete.

The correct address for letters to members is, "Headquarters Canadian Contingent, Bustard Camp, Salisbury Plains," with the members full name, rank and regiment.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many good watches are ruined for want of attention to this and other, and the result is, the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become cut and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to get it in proper condition again. The old saying "A stitch in time saves nine" holds good.

BOY'S HEAD A SIGHT FROM ECZEMA

In Blisters, Itched and Burned Badly. Had to Put Gloves On Child's Hands. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Healed.

10 Abbott Ave., Toronto, Ont.—"My boy had eczema badly all over, but his head was very bad and was affected most. It came out in blisters and it was a sight to look at. It itched and burned so badly that I had to put gloves on the child's hands. It came out first on his face near the ears, then went to his head and then on his body. His head was like a fish it was so bad.

"I used ——, also ——; and others, and nothing did him any good. I gave them up and tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used three cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and at the end of six weeks he was entirely cured." (Signed) Mrs. Carroll, Jan. 1, 1914.

Samples Free by Mail

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off this Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores. Sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. D, Boston, U. S. A."

A New Series.

"Thank heaven, those bills are got rid of," said Bilkins, fervently, as he tore up a bundle of statements of accounts dated September 1.

"All paid, eh?" said Mrs. Bilkins.

"Oh, no," said Bilkins. "The duplicates dated October 1 have come in and I don't have to keep these any longer."

War's Reality Worse Than Fancy Can Paint, Says Artist

(By Xavier Sager, well-known artist at the front with the French Army.)

I will take advantage of a few moments of repose to send you a few lines upon my impressions of this monstrous war, of which I am a witness.

My letter will contain no contraband utterances and will be sent from here to Paris in an open envelope in order that it may have a chance to reach you some day. I can relate to you only something in general.

The official statements have informed you that the combats fought upon the Marne were particularly keen and costly as regards human life.

By the time you receive these lines these little fights will be well over and forgotten here, and others not less heroic will be spread close to German soil this time I hope.

The war is in reality a very different thing from the fantastic idea that I had made of it for myself before it actually took place, for imagination and reality are two different things. Before now I could well paint from imagination some of these combats, with their wounded and their dead; but to see the fearful agony of these human beings, to hear the supplications of the wounded, to hear the whistling around one of the balls and shells and the thundering of the cannons in the distance is so terrible. One is more struck by the frightfully painful spectacle than by the danger to one's self.

No, do not think that the cinematographic screens of American films will present, however marvellously, any pre-arranged picture of a battle that can give you even the faintest idea of a real war, especially a war like this, which is a war of destruction.

Between the battles — for nearly every encounter is a battle—one changes places, one studies the positions. The night comes; each sleeps when he can, no matter where or how, for he never knows five minutes in advance it he is going to stay here or brusquely move on.

It is a perpetual state of qui-vive. There is no rest for us. In order not to suffer too much from the constant shocks and changes, it is necessary to have a new mentality which can adapt itself to existing circumstances and events.

As this exterminating war develops itself, its essential characteristic seems to be that we have to deal with a race that has the desire and the pretension first to destroy ours and then to plant itself on our soil.

This curious race hates ours for having so many gifts that it has not—good humour, wit, sociability, good taste, and human tenderness. It is not only that they want to destroy our modern possessions, but also our magnificent and far-reaching past. This race believes itself capable of effacing it all by shell and fire.

During peace there was a system of its possibilities of betrayal, from the workmen to whom we gave the means of earning bread to the artists and to writers whom we received as confreres. All have spied upon us; all have shadowed us. What secret fury was hidden by them!

To-day it has burst out and gives vent in howling rage, since there is no longer a need of hypocrisy. The German newspapers cry, "To the massacre!"

This is the return for French hospitality.

CRUSHING GRIP OF WAR BRINGS HUNGER TO PARIS

PARIS, Oct. 16—Paris is now firmly held by the crushing grip of war times which brings the pinch of hunger into homes and makes beggars of women and children whose husbands and fathers are at the front.

Now the dullest city in the world with cafes and theatres closed, a sombre background is furnished for the present life of the French capital by the new faces among the newspaper venders, the beggars and street singers.

One has always seen the "marchands de quarte saisons — the push cart people—but the war has brought on a new army of these street merchants. One sees young girls and boys pushing carts about loaded with cauliflowers, salads, potatoes, and fruits It is evident they are not accustomed to that sort of thing, but they are trying to make ends meet at home. With fathers and brothers under the colours and the dressmaking establishments where the girls worked closed down, something had to be done.

Street singers, who sell the words and music of the songs they sing, have always been a familiar sight here. But now one sees new singers. There are women and girls of refined appearance in mourning. They play on guitars, violins, and sometimes harps. Their voices quaver as they sing and then sell the music of their song.

There are more beggars than usual. General Gallieni, the military governor, has a softer heart, warrior though he is, than the city fathers have in time of peace. And there are women among these seeking aid. There are always women in Paris who borrow or "rent" babies and wear poor clothes to awaken the pity of passer-by by pretending to be endeavouring to make an honest living by selling papers. Now there are real mothers making a real effort to earn money. The babies they hold in their arms as they sell papers are their own.

In addition to the women, neatly dressed boys and girls have replaced to a large extent the dirty men and husky "cameleta" of peace times as newspaper merchants.

Paris has settled down to war times Business generally is at a standstill, and money is scarce among the poorer classes. Much is going out and little coming in. In the great department stores the few clerks—mostly women and girls—have little to do. There is not much buying. What money the people have is going to the grocer.

The contrast with the hurry and rush of a month ago with the gesticulating crowds and crying of newsboys, Paris is now the quietest city in the world. After nightfall there is scarcely a sound. The newsboys and news women sell their papers, fut crowds of purchasers are gone. The venders have quit shouting, as General Gallieni put a stop to that. There is little more life during the day. Streets are quiet and old timers scarcely realize that this, after al, is Paris.

Montreal Man Thought to Be a German Spy Arrested

PLYMOUTH, Oct. 16.—The Canadian contingent has arrived in England to-day. Britain's mighty power on the sea was shown in its full reality, when the great fleet sailed. The passage could not have been pleasanter for the troops. The most exciting incidents were the arrest of a supposed German spy, and two burials overboard at sea, one of a man from one ship, and another who died of exposure after a rescue. The name has been unascertainable as yet. It is supposed the spy was a private in a regiment from Montreal, said to be of Dutch nationality. He spoke several languages. The brigade commander's suspicions were aroused by persistent questions about the disposition of various Canadian troops, and he ordered the man's arrest, which was very smartly done. A State letter and code were found in the man's clothes. A secret officers' inquiry was held, with the result that the man will be kept in custody till further orders.

A great reception was given at Plymouth by warships, merchantmen, and other ships, who lined up their vessels, while thousands of people cheered to the echo each Canadian ship as it passed up the river, where it weighed anchor for the night.

A Boxing Bout.

October 12 was enlivened by a ten-round boxing contest between Sergt. S. H. Blake, 5th Royal Highlanders, and Tommy Dyer, a well-known London professional, employed on the boat.

The troops watched the fight from different points of vantage. Blake opened at a terrific pace, boring in with repeated body punches. Dyer was unable to withstand the fierce rushes, and the third round saw both men cautioned by the referee, Capt. Grier, A. S. C., who disqualified Blake in the fourth round for a foul. Those who followed professional boxing say the foul was not intentional and was brought on by Dyer's methods. Blake was bitterly disappointed and straightway challenged Dyer, who appeared unhurt, to fight the remaining rounds there and then. Dyer, however, refused.

Minor Bouts.

The winners of several preliminary contests were Private F. J. Reid, Royal Highlanders; Private Lucius who won on a foul; Private W. Tru, whose display, outside of the main feature, was considered the finest in the tournament.

SUGAR HAS ADVANCED IN MARKETS

The Canadian Grocer deals with the grocery market situation in this week's issue as follows:

Publication Office,
Toronto, October 15.

The advance of 50 cents in the price of sugar announced at the week-end and affecting all Canadian refineries with one exception, is the outstanding market feature of the week. The Canadian trade had been warned that such an advance was the natural trend of the mrket, but nevertheless it may appear somewhat illogical in the face of weakness in the American situation which during the past few weeks has amounted almost to demoralization.

The New York refiners to-day, with one exception, are selling at $6.25 less 2 per cent. The one exception is the Federal, which is quoting $6 on moderate quantities. The American basis at the moment is $1.25 to $1.50 under the high record mark of $7.50. It is now evident that there was heavy speculation in the United States markets owing to the heavy buying in Britain at the outbreak of the war. The United Kingdom is in the position of having the European market cut off and of being forced to buy 20,000 to 25,000 tons monthly of refined to meet deficiency between consumption and capacity of refineries. But the United Kingdom demand has been satisfied for the time being. At the same time United States merchants and consumers were buying heavily and there is now a falling-off in domestic requirements as well.

There is some talk of a revival of United Kingdom demand, which might help strengthen the [illegible] American market at the moment is undergoing a violent reaction. Prices advanced there on speculation, while Canada continued on a more moderate basis. The American beet sugar crop is also a factor in weakening the situation.

The Canadian situation is different. To-day prices are above the American level, but they have not been advanced until the time when orders have been caught up. Raw sugar is being delivered at the moment at prices which almost equal selling price of refined. This is due to the fact that refiners were forced into a bull market to buy. Canada buys largely in preferential markets, which were closed for a short time when war was declared by an embargo. Result — United Kingdom bought heavily through arrangement between Government and merchants and Canada had to go into open markets and pay higher prices and higher duties. Ordinary duty of 40¾ was advanced to 1.37½, which is an advance of 96c, and in itself means an advance of almost 1c per pound.

There has been some improvement in the situation as regards imported fruits. A prominent member of the trade predicts that prices for early deliveries will be higher than the market, but that there will be generally lower prices prevailing for deliveries after the 1st of the year. Some shipments have been made from Smyrna of figs and raisins. On the former there is an advance of 10 per cent. demanded on contracts for higher exchange, and there will be increased freight and insurance of more than 5 per cent. Raising should not advance materials. Mediterranean shipments are also coming forward. Demand for these lines is not strong. California fruits are heavy, and where increases were made buying is about over. Peaches are cheap on account of price of apples, and prunes and apricots are dull with export markets cut off.

Tea situation is somewhat improved by announcement that shipments have been resumed from the East, but to what extent is not known. However, although demand is light, the fact that supplies were cut off for five weeks promises to keep prices firm. There is also some trouble with shipments from Japan. Coffees are heavy with Brazil forcing sales on account of financial depression while European market is cut off.

NEWEST NOTES OF SCIENCE.

The Russian Government has been convinced by a number of Swiss engineers that it is perfectly feasible to bore a 16-mile tunnel through the Caucasus mountains to join the Black and Caspian Seas.

A wrench that its Ohio inventor claims will replace the monkey wrench and that will handle pipe as well as nuts of all shapes, has a milled wheel, adjusted by a spring clip, in place of the lower jaw.

French scientists are puzzling themselves over the fact that the black spot at the end of a snail's tentacle seems to be an eye when examined microscopically, yet is used for feeling, and never for sight.

By the use of a delicate instrument for cutting tiny slices of wood from living trees and examining them by microscopic, Wisconsin scientists are able to guide lumbermen in the selection of standing timber.

Russia's annual production of salt, which a government monopoly controls, exceeds 2,100,000 tons.

ALF. HARDY DEFEATED JACK FORBES IN TWO STRAIGHT FALLS

England triumphed over Scotland last night at Brock Street rink, when Alf. Hardy, the English featherweight, defeated Jack Forbes in two straight falls in 54 and 9 minutes respectively. The match was an aftermath of the bout between the two last Saturday in which Forbes failed in trying to throw Hardy twice in an hour. Forbes then challenged Hardy to a finish match, and the two got together last night. It was another beautiful match Forbes and Hardy worked at top speed and the crowd was on its feet all the way, as the two struggled with honours even for over fifty minutes. Hardy's coolness won the fans. He never lost his composure even in tight corners, while Forbes was inclined to get excited, and this told against him. Both men showed great cleverness in in defence and the bout was a great to watch. From the manner in which they tore themselves out of dangerous holds, it looked as if they might be still wrestling at midnight. The end came very suddenly. Hardy suddenly sprang to his feet and, lifting Forbes head down, whirled him around two or three times and then hurled him with a thud to the mat. The Scottish lad lit on the side of his head and was knocked out completely. He could offer no resistance and Hardy had no trouble in rolling him over for the fall.

After a rest the two came back and the battle was resumed. Forbes seemed to have recoverd from the fall and for a few minutes the going was fast. Then Hardy clamped a toe-hold on Forbes which the latter could not break. He struggled in agony for a minute and then conceded the fall to the Yorkshire lad, ending the match.

Joe Dwyer was referee and D. Buckham time keeper.

To the Examiner this morning Forbes said he was not satisfied with the result. He complained that he had half a dozen boils on his body and was not in shape to do himself justice. Forbes would like a return match, and if nobody will promote one he will wrestle Hardy in private.

SUCCESS OF MARANVILLE AND RUDOLPH A BOOST FOR ALL SMALL PLAYERS

The great showing made this year by "Rabbit" Maranville and "Dick" Rudolph of the Braves, will be a great boon for the diminutive minor league ball players who have big league ambitions.

Maranville has convinced the baseball world that size is not a necessary asset of a shortstop, and Rudolph has demonstrated that a pitcher with a small phisque can pitch just as well and just as often as a giant.

When Maranville joined the Braves in the latter part of 1912, and the baseball world found that he was only 5 feet 5 inches tall, and weighed in the neighbourhood of 130, everybody assured everybody else:

"Maranville won't last; he's too small."

And when Rudolph, discarded several years ago by the Giants because he was too small, being only about 5 feet 9 inches tall, joined the Braves the "wise ones" in baseball said the same thing about him as they did about Maranville.

Maranville ranks to-day as one of the greatest shortstops that ever played the position. His smallness seems to have made him as speedy as chain lightning. He covers more ground than any man who ever handled the short stopping job for the Braves in many years. And, although he is small, he can shoot the ball over to first from deep short with the speed of a rifle bullet.

Maranville is a fast man on the bases, and many of his steals have resulted in runs for the Braves. In addition to this Maranville is a timely hitter. His drives are surprisingly long for a little man. Time and again he has smashed the ball to the far corners of the field.

And because Maranville has done these things, the big league managers have begun to think that other small infielders can do the same. In future it is likely that fast infielders, who have been passed up because of their tiny size, will be given big league trial.

Rudolph's physique is not imposing. He's not exactly tiny as the average human goes, but he's small in comparison with the average big league pitchers. Big league managers during the last ten years, have come to believe that a small pitcher can't stand the gruelling pace of a big league campaign. They felt that a small pitcher couldn't stand the exertion of pitching once in every four days.

They didn't think that way any longer, for Rudolph has come along and pitched on an average of every third day. Sometimes he has pitched every other day. And he has come through the season with a wonderful pitching average and in splendid

"It isn't how much you weigh, or how tall you are that counts," said Rudolph recently. "It's what you've got concealed in your wing."

And "Rudy" is right.

PITCHER JAMES

The crack pitcher of the Boston Braves who won the second game of the World Series by air-tight pitching. Not a run was scored from his delivery and the game was won by score of 1 to 0.

HOW WILL JOHNNY McGRAW BUILD UP A NEW OUTFIT?

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—McGraw has a dead team on his hands. The only certainty in the Giants' future is that very, very shortly the Little Napoleon will resort to extreme measures to reanimate it.

What changes will be made, what trades or purchases will be engineered between now and the spring mobilization at Marlin are known only to McGraw. Announcements at this time that so-and-so will surely be with another club next year, but that Matt's sig-name will be retained are based solely on more or less clever guessing. McGraw has never been in the habit of making his plans public and is not forsaking the policy of a lifetime at this late date.

It is a safe bet, however, that what happened to the Giants after the 1908 sliver wasn't a marker to what will happen this winter. So many of the stars of former years have drifted back to the common herd; so many of them have lost just the fraction of a second in speed in batting from base to base that marks the difference between a .300 batting average and mediocre stickwork that the reorganization can not stop short of a complete overhauling of the entire system.

When the Critics Hollered.

When McGraw set out to reconstruct the team that potted but on him in 1908 his first move was to inveigle Boston into a trade which earned him the adverse criticism of every critic in the country. He gave up Dan McGann, in his day a brilliant first baseman; Bill Dahlen, once the leading shortstop of his day; George Brown, a wonderfully fast outfielder, and baserunner who won real stardom, though never a heavy hitter; Frank Bowerman, Matty's old battery mate, and Cecil Ferguson, a pitcher of the eternal temptation type.

In exchange he received Al Bridwell, a clever fielder, but a slight hitter; Fred Tenny, supposed to be on the wane, and Catcher Tom Needham. The Bunion King never did become an important cog in the Giant machine, but Bridwell and Tenny played leading parts in the 1908 dash. Bridwell developed into one of the most dangerous swatters in the National league, and Tenny was a brilliant success for more than two years.

When McGraw engineered that trade the critics took particular delight in demonstrating through many a column of records that Colonel John J. had succeeded in absolutely wrecking beyond all hope of salvage, a great ball club. They had all the vital statistics bearing on the case in their favour—but McGraw's rebuttal on the ball field crushed every argument.

They May "Come Back."

He had seen his starts wane and fade—just as he has seen the brightest flicker and grow dim. And in their day the old stars shone with as great brilliancy as the athletes upon whom his axe is now soon to fall. He knew they had reached the crest and had passed beyond it; he recognized their failure to live up to old performances as the inevitable dying out of their earlier genius, though most of the critics looked up it as just a slump.

It may be that Meyers, Merkle, Doyle, Marquard, Bescher, Demaree, Grant, Fromme, Stock and Murray have merely all picked the same year in which to backslide a little, and all will be back again next season playing championship ball and confounding all their enemies. It may be but in more than one instance it is pretty nearly certain that McGraw does not intend to risk anything of any account on that "may be!"

The Giants' shortcomings have been so many this season that it is impossible to lay all the responsibility for their failure to any one department. The pitching staff has been blanned, yet just as many games have been lost by the infield as ever were tossed off by the heavers, and the catching has been uniformly below championship standards, while Bob Bescher, Jack Murray and Davy Robertson have all fallen short of expectations by many a long disappointing mile.

On the entire season's play, these men have been failures this year. Some have hit fairly well in the averages, but not in the pinches; Doyle and Merkle, two of the club's most potent bats in the old days, have hit next to nothing in comparison with their records in other campaigns. Is it that age, or what passes for age in baseball, has taken hold of them? Or is it that they are simply suffering an off year together? Doyle and Meyers both experienced long batting slumps last year as well.

May Gamble on Youngsters.

It develops now that the loss of Tilly Shafer and Charley Herzog at the same time was a body blow indeed, one from which it may take the club years to recover. Stock and Grant have both given McGraw a lot of good baseball this year, but only in streaks. Neither has been a dependable batter, though Harvard Eddie rates high in the averages.

There are two courses open to McGraw—to trade off his failures for seasoned men now pastiming in other pastures or to develop a new team from the ranks of his rookies, Dick Kinsell and the rest of his scouts have sent up to him. There are said to be more than two or three real promising young men in the lot. Catcher Smith, First Baseman Wanke, Second Baseman Brainerd and Pitchers Ritter, Huenke and Erickson among the rest.

Decision to gamble on his youngsters, however, will involve waiting until next spring to secure a real line on his material. On this account it is assumed, and probably safely, that McGraw will try his luck in the open market and, as after the 1908 collapse, remodel his machine with the assistance of what talent he can separate from rival managers.

He may experience considerable trouble in this endeavour, for practically all the men likely to be concerned in any future trading are signed to long term contracts at high figures, contracts which other clubs may be mighty bashful about taking over. Conditions being such, McGraw will undoubtedly have to pay heavily for any relief he may find. Hence the belief that before next February's snows are falling the National League will witness some of the fanciest trading it has been blown to in many a year.

THIRD-BASEMAN DEAL

The utility third-baseman of the Boston Braves who was playing regularly during the World Series for Smith whose leg was broken. Deal's timely hit won the first game of the Series and his batting in the remainder of the games was on a high percentage.

FOOTBALL.

The King Edward School team continue their winning streak.

Yesterday afternoon the King George and King Edward School teams played a well contested football game on the King George School grounds. Although the teams seem very evenly matched, the King Edward boys won by the score of one goal to nil.

Mr. M. Park refereed the game very satisfactorily.

The following were the teams:

King Edward — Goal, Parkins; backs, Blondon and Killingbeck; half backs, Martin, Hunt, Evans; centre, Fairbrass; left wings, Jubb and Jackson; right wings, Cranfield and White.

King George — Goal, Stevens; backs, Record and Liggett; half backs, Evans, Anderson, Hagerman; centre, Armstrong; left wings, Legge and Hill; right wings, Maniece and Lipsett.

CLOSE DOWN FOR REPAIRS

It is said by Mr. E. W. Bailey, superintendent of the Canada Cement Company here, that in view of the business situation the Company will not in all probability operate their works here next year. Only three of their mills will run through the winter. Their two mills at Belleville, one at Calgary and one at Exshaw, now operating, will close down for the winter for repairs on the first of November.

DRINK AND UNEMPLOYMENT HAND IN HAND

When the test comes and the factory and office forces have to be cut down, drinkers are the first to be let go. This falls hardest on their wives and families, for the man who has the whisky or alcohol craving spends so much on it that there is nothing laid aside.

Alcura stops the craving for drink and helps the man help himself in his desire to get away from the drink disease and keep his work. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction or money is refunded. Alcura No. 1 can be given secretly by wife or mother, and will render drink distasteful, even nauseous. Alcura No. 2 is the voluntary treatment.

Can be had at our store, $1.00 per box. Ask for free Alcura booklet.

CARD TO THE ELECTORS

THE ELECTORS OF EAST CITY.

I have been a resident of the City of Peterborough for many years, and am well known to the residents of the East Ward. I feel therefore, that I have a right to become a candidate for Alderman in the East Ward, at the request of many Electors.

My platform will be, that greater efforts should be made to induce the Street Railway to enter the East Ward, by the Hunter Street Bridge, and I would strongly urge a revote to be taken on the Dalhousie Street Bridge, in order that an outlet might be given for the workingmen of the East Ward, to get to the factories, without coming up to Hunter Street to cross the river.

You are aware, that the streets and sidewalks in East City have not received the attention to keep them in a proper state of repair. This should be remedied, and by an energetic campaign, which I can give, East City needs will be brought to the attention of the Council, and sufficient appropriation obtained, to keep the East Ward in a proper state of repair. This is the main thoroughfare for the whole traffic coming from East Peterborough, and from the North side of Peterborough County into the City of Peterborough, and we are entitled to a larger proportion of the city's monies to be expended for the benefit of East City, which will result in the ultimate benefit to the merchants and business men of the City of Peterborough.

If elected, I assure the residents of East City that I will make every effort to see that the affairs of my Ward are properly conducted and taken care of, that the street lighting is installed to properly light East Ward, and that East City will not have the grounds to complain, by reason of neglect, at the hands of the City Council.

I remain,

Yours truly,

G. L. HAY.

DR. WALMSLEY HAS CLOSED 7 YEARS IN PETERBOROUGH

Was the Pioneer Osteopath Here and Has Won Recognition For the Profession

Dr. A. G. Walmsley, osteopathic physician, begins to-day his eighth year of practice in Peterborough. He came to this city in 1907 as the pioneer osteopath of this section of Ontario, and in completing his seven years' service has won a widespread recognition for osteopathy. His practice has grown to such an extent that a few months ago he found it necessary to secure larger offices. He is now in the Case Life Building, corner of Hunter and Water Streets, where he has a splendid suite of rooms.

Few of the citizens knew anything about osteopathy when Dr. Walmsley came here seven years ago. To-day nearly everybody is familiar with the word and has more or less knowledge of the treatment. The extent to which osteopathy is practised in the country was illustrated by the attendance of 2,000 osteopathic physicians at the annual convention of the American Osteopathic Association held in Philadelphia in August. They assembled from nearly all parts of the world.

Dr. Walmsley is a member of the American Association and is trustee of the Ontario Association of Osteopathy. In the United States there are now seven colleges of osteopathy, which have graduated between 8,000 and 9,000 osteopathic physicians. There are now 2,000 students in these colleges.

The American Association has established a Research Institute in Chicago for the purpose of examining and proving the merits of old as well as new theories and methods of treating disease. It is the only research institute in the world supported solely by the members of the profession it represents.

AN APPEAL TO CANADIANS TO GO TO FRONT

Col. the Hon. James Mason Shows What Success of the Allies Will Do

Colonel the Hon. James Mason, whose military experience has been lengthy and varied, has issued an appeal for further Canadian contingents. When a very young man he served for several years in the ranks of the Queen's Own Rifles, and afterwards attained command of the Royal Grenadiers. Since then he has had command of a brigade of infantry for ten years at the Niagara camps; also saw active service when a captain of the Royal Grenadiers during the Northwest Rebellion.

Pointing out that the first contingent is only a beginning, Col. Mason says:

"If Lord Kitchener is to have his million armed men to fight autocracy and to defend the liberties of our people throughout the world, it will strain every nerve and fibre of the British people to get the men, to train them for the field, to feed the wastage of war, to meet the long drain upon the resources of the United Kingdom, of the whole Empire, of the allies, which the final and complete destruction of German power must involve.

"Everything indicates our duty, our privilege, our obligation in the premises — the despatch of a force that will rank as an army in Europe, that will be worthy of our pretensions as a British nation in America, that will prove our talk, our sometimes boastful attitude, to be no mere lip-loyalty, but the expression of a genuine faith in British ideals and unity, in the value and importance of British liberty and power. What England would suffer — what millery the people of Shakespeare's 'Inviolate Isle' would see — what a catastrophe to human liberty and life in its highest and best embodiment would follow upon a German invasion of the United Kingdom is almost impossible to describe. The destruction of the shrines and universities, the homes and churches, of Belgium indicate faintly what would happen if the embittered and brutalized, but triumphant German soldier once set foot on British soil—and then on that of Canada."

In order to bring home the terrors of such an invasion, Col. Mason quotes from the following letters: To G. M. Black, Winnipeg, showing that German officers cut wrist tendons of Capt. Buckle of Royal Artillery to disable him permanently; to James Petrie, Guelph, relating the chopping off by Germans of hands of Belgian girl of 8 and younger brother; to Mrs. Cheeseman, Winnipeg, telling of Germans clubbing and bayonetting wounded and hacking off their hands; to Andrew Dods, Toronto, showing that German Uhlans put out a soldier's eyes. He quotes Miss Hanson, daughter of the pastor of Erskine church, Montreal, as bringing word of thirteen English nurses having their hands cut off. Harold M. Sewall, ex-Minister of U. S. to Germany, is quoted as describing offences against women as "beyond description in their inconceivable horror."

"To us," Col. Mason continues, "British and French success in this conflict means everything. It means safety for our commerce on the seas of the world, safety for our shores from the iron heel of ruthless invasion, safety of our homes and families, security for the rights and liberties of a free people, continued immunity from the alarms and perils, in the financial disasters and personal sufferings of war, protection for all those cherished ideals for which we boast so greatly, of a Christianity and civilization, which the oppressive and hopeless German philosophy and militarism would destroy. It means probably also immunity from the devastating and ruinous expenditure involved in the maintaining of vast armies and navies."

UNCOVERING THE HEAD.

There is a discussion in the Philadelphia Ledger on the question, "Should a gentleman uncover his head in an elevator where there are ladies?" One man favours it firmly; another opposes it utterly, while a third languidly upholds the courtesy act, but thinks it is no more required in an elevator than in a trolley car. Two of the disputants declare there would be no difference of opinion upon this question if the ladies themselves exhibited a gentle demeanaour at all times. This they don't always do. Some are the very opposite and these the men remember and are consequently remiss in their courtesy.

Were all real ladies there would be no controversy, for then the natural instinct of a gentleman would be constantly on duty. But the lapses of the women from a kindly recognition of a man's courtesy are so often in mind that he is slow in showing his good manners. But that does not suggest the true rule about this matter. The rule is that a man should defer to a woman because she is a woman and not because she is perfect in her own conduct. But this deference is made so easy and agreeable when a man sees he has extended it to a sweet and gracious lady. But if she happens to be the other kind, which are so very few, his courtesy should neither cease nor weaken.

"Do animals possess the sentiment of affection?" asked the school teacher of the little girl.

"Yeth, ma'am; almoths alwayth."

"Good," said the teacher; "and now," turning to a little boy, "tell me what animal has the greatest natural fondness for man."

The small boy considered carefully and finally answered, "Woman."

ALLIES CHECK ADVANCE ALONG THE SEA COAST

London Press Bureau Says That the British Have Driven the Enemy Back Thirty Miles--Desperate Fighting Around Arras.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Sunday was an eventful day along the fighting line in France. With the allied front resting on Nieuport, a Belgian town near the coast, and thence southeastward to Ypres, the effort of the Kaiser to swoop down on Dunkirk has missed fire. Between the German hosts and Dunkirk is a formidable army composed of French, British and Belgians. Up to the present the fighting in this zone has been between cavalry for the most part, but both infantry and artillery have come up on both sides, and a stubborn contest is under way.

Ostend in the last point to fall into German hands, and it is not believed that their advance along the coast can continue further until a major operation takes place. It is probable that British warships will participate in the coming engagements near the shore line, the powerful guns of the fleet being able to command a radius of several miles.

The British official press bureau issued the following announcement last night: "The British troops have made good progress during the last few days. In the northern area the allies have driven the enemy back more than thirty miles."

The official communication issued by the French War Office last night says: "During the course of last night (Saturday) two violent attacks were attempted by the Germans to the north and east of St. Die. These were repulsed with serious losses to the enemy.

"No other report of any importance has yet been received on the operations of the day."

The French official statement issued yesterday afternoon says; "The Belgian army in Belgium has vigorously repulsed several attacks by Germans at crossings of the River Yser.

"On our left wing, north of the Canal La Basse, the allies occupy a front on Givenchy. Allies from Fromelles have retaken Armentieres.

"To the north of Arras Saturday was marked by a notable advance on our part.

"Between the region of Arras and the Oise we have progressed slightly at certain points.

Arras is again the centre of a great contest. The French have made important advances in the neighborhood of that town, pushing the German line eastward, and taking a number of strong positions. They have taken Fleurbaix and the approaches to Armentieres.

From Rheims to Soissons the situation remains comparatively quiet, the Germans holding only forces sufficient to maintain their lines along the centre. Considerable numbers of troops have been taken from this region to bolster up the assault on the allied front further west and in Belgium. Snow is falling around Ardennes, which will add to the difficulties of the German centre.

Little information came through yesterday concerning the French movement against the crown prince's army, and practically none at all of the operations toward Metz. It is stated that desultory fighting has occurred in Alsace, two recent reports from Basle, Switzerland, telling of German reverses in that province. From Berlin it is stated that the French fortress of Belfort, on the eastern frontier of the republic, is now on fire from German mortars.

The crown prince's army was beaten Saturday in the vicinity of St. Mihiel, following an attempt to check the French advance. The armies of the republic have captured several positions within ten miles of Metz and an attack on that fortress seems imminent. A considerable force is engaged in an assault on Etain, the key to the crown prince's line of communications. The Kaiser's heir is almost isolated on his eastern front and it is thought that he must quickly retire from St. Mihiel, his most advanced position. Otherwise, huge reinforcements will be required to hold that town, where stubborn fighting is in progress.

The fighting in the region of Laventie is extremely sanguinary and it can be positively stated that all efforts of the Germans to advance have met with repulses. In fact, along the entire 360 mile front of the allies, extending from the sea coast to the Swiss border, the situation is satisfactory.

Patience and determination will win for most of us nine battles out of ten.

A Tragic Scene in the Firing Line of the French Army—This picture illustrates the remarkable spirit of the French troops. A soldier tries to aid a wounded comrade and with grim determination continues his unceasing fire at the enemy.

ATTACKS ALL FAIL

Germans Are Defeated in the First Stages Along the Vistula When They Tried to Cross

20,000 LOST

PETROGRAD, Oct. 19.—The London Telegraph's special correspondent says: "So far the battle of the Vistula has gone in favor of Russia. The Austro-Germanic armies at all points have failed to force the passage of the River Vistula. Everywhere the enemy has been compelled to assume the defensive. There is nothing to justify the assumption that anything like a finally decisive result has been attained. The enemy retired in god order, without forfeiting any integral portion of his strength. The Germans made a very determined and pertinacious fight to get a footing on the right bank of the Vistula. With an enormous mass of artillery they kept up a terrific bombardment day and night. Under cover of an incessant rain of projectiles attempts were made to throw pontoons across the river at no fewer than eighteen separate points. However, all efforts were in vain. The Germans were repulsed everywhere. Large quantities of bridging material were destroyed. The enemy's losses must be very heavy.

"The attempts of the Germans to cross the Niemen, near Druskeniki, cost them about 20,000 men. On the East Prussian front the operations have taken the character of a siege, the Germans offering a stubborn resistance along a carefully prepared line of retrenchment. They had been reinforced from East Prussian garrisons. The recent fighting in this region has been of a most determined and sanguinary nature. The difficulties of the troops had been rendered much more severe by the torrential rains which fell during several days and nights almost without intermission. Many bogs, in which the region abounds, have been transformed into lakes. Those portions of Suwalki government which were occupied by the Germans were completely denuded of all means of subsistence, so it is impossible to rely on local supplies."

Von Kluk Deposed?

LONDON, Oct. 19.—That the leader who has baffled every effort of the allies to get around the German right is not Gen. Von Kluk but Gen. Sixt Von Arnin, is the statement made by German officers now prisoners in England. It is asserted that Von Kluk was deposed two days after the battle of the Marne, when he was thrown back from Paris. One of the German officers, who vouches for this story is Lieut. Von Arnin, said to be a nephew of Gen. Von Arnin, and now in the hospital at Netley.

HONOURABLY MENTIONED

Gen. French Calls Attention to Conspicuous Work of Individuals.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Gen. French in his report to the Minister of War gives a long list of officers, non-commissioned officers and men who have been recommended for special mention by army corps commanders and heads of departments.

Gen. French expresses his agreement with these recommendations and draws attention to the valuable service rendered by Generals Sir Horace Smith-Dorren, Sir Douglas Haig and Wm. Pulteney-Pulteney, commanders of the First, Second and Third Corps respectively.

Of Major-Generals E. H. H. Allenby and Hubert de la P. Gough, Gen. French says:

"The undoubted superiority which our cavalry has attained over that of the enemy has been due to the skill with which they have turned to best account the qualities inherent in the splendid troops the command."

Mention is also made of Gen. Sir David Henderson, commander of a flying corps, Gen. Sir Archibald Murray, chief of staff, and other officers.

Capt. Frederick Edward Guest of the East Dorset Regiment; Lt.-Col. H. C. Lowther of the Scots Guards, former secretary to the Duke of Connaught, Capt. T. R. Traill, Lieut. Prince Maurice of Battenburg and Major Prince Arthur of Connaught also come in for honorable mention.

Of Prince Arthur of Connaught he says: "His intimate knowledge of languages has enabled me to employ him with great advantage on confidential missions of importance."

FOR DISTINGUISHED SERVICE.

Britain To Issue Medal For Notable Work In Lower Ranks.

LONDON, Oct. 19. — The Official Press Bureau last evening issued the following statement from the Admiralty:

"King George has been pleased to approve the establishment of a medal, to be called the Distinguished Service Medal, to be awarded to chief petty officers, petty officers and men and boys in all branches of the service of the royal army, to non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Marines and to all other persons holding corresponding positions in his Majesty's service afloat, for distinguished conduct in war, in cases where the award of conspicuous gallantry medals would not be applicable.

"His Majesty has further approved of an award of the Conspicuous Service Cross, to be designated in the future the Distinguished Service Cross, to all officers below the rank of lieutenant-commander, in addition to the officers previously eligible for this decoration."

NOTED OFFICER DEAD.

Maj.-Gen. Hubert Hamilton Reported Killed In Action.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The name of Major-Gen. Hubert I. W. Hamilton appears at the head of the latest casualty list, as killed in action. The names of ten other officers come under this category, and twenty-five others are listed as wounded.

Gen. Hamilton was 53 years of age, and had been mentioned in despatches by Field Marshal French during the fighting around Mons. He served in the Egyptian and South African campaigns, and was military secretary to Lord Kitchener when the latter was commander-in-chief of the forces in South Africa. He held the same post when Lord Kitchener was commanding in India.

Gen. Hamilton was in command of the North Midland Division since 1911. He was 53 and a son of Lieut.-Gen. Henry Mead Hamilton.

Berlin Claims 200,000 Prisoners.

BERLIN, Oct. 19. — The Minister of War publishes the following list of prisoners up to and including Oct. 1: French, 2,050 officers and 123,000 men; Russian, 2,150 officers and 92,000 men; Belgian, 470 officers and 30,250 men; British, 130 officers and 8,600 men—a total of 4,850 officers and 254,450 men, or 259,300 in all.

DESTROYERS ARE SUNK

British Cruiser "Undaunted" Assisted by Destroyers, Sinks Four German Hornets of the Sea

31 SURVIVORS

LONDON, Oct. 19. — The British navy has accounted for four more German destroyers, which was encountered off the Dutch coast Saturday afternoon by a British cruiser and four torpedo-boat destroyers were engaged and sunk.

According to a statement made by the Secretary of the British Admiralty, the British vessels in the action were the light cruiser Undaunted and the torpedo-boat destroyers Lance, Lennox, Legion and Loyal.

Thus the British sailors have taken a quick revenge for the sinking by a German submarine on Thursday of the British cruiser Hawke.

The sinking of the warships Saturday makes six torpedo-boat destroyers that have been sent to the bottom of the sea by British gunfire since the beginning of the war, and seven when the torpedo-boat destroyer which was sunk by the submarine E9 is counted.

In this number and without counting the converted merchantmen, such as the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and the Cap Trafalgar, the score now favors the allies, they having sunk six German and one Austrian cruiser and seven German torpedo-boat destroyers, while there have been unconfirmed reports of the sinking of several Austrian destroyers in the Adriatic Sea. The Germans have sunk eight British and one Russian cruiser, while Australia has lost a submarine by accident. The Russians also claim to have sunk two German submarines, but this the Germans deny.

Up to this afternoon Berlin had not heard officially of the sinking of the British cruiser Hawke, which indicates that the submarine which accomplished it has not yet returned to port.

The cruiser Undaunted was commanded by Capt. Cecil H. Fox, who commanded the cruiser Amphion, which, after sinking the German armed cruiser, Koenigen Luise, was itself destroyed by a German mine on Aug. 6. The Undaunted, a vessel of 3,800 tons, carries two 6-inch and six 4-inch guns.

Opening For Canadians.

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.—Imports from Germany to South Africa amounting to $17,000,000 per annum are cut off by the war, according to the Canadian Trade Commissioner at Cape Town, and some of the things Canada could now supply South Africa are asbestos manufactures, brushware, clothing, cotton manufactures, hosiery and underwear, condensed milk and fencing wire.

Don't parade your troubles before the world. Bury them as a dog does old bones, and growl if anybody offers to dig them up.

SUNDAY WAS BUSY.

General Liveliness Pervaded Canadian Camp at Salisbury.

LONDON, Oct. 19. — Sunday has been anything but a day of rest on Salisbury Plains. The camp begins to wear the aspect of great liveliness. The weather has been rather chilly so far. There has been no rain, thanks to its situation, though even weeks of downpour would not render the camp permanently uncomfortable. The general health among the contingent is excellent. A few minor casualties have been reported, chiefly among the men handling horses. The steeds were all tethered in the open and badly needed grooming.

Every department is working smoothly, the men having an ample supply of wholesome food and comfortable bedding.

The Sunday papers contained many appreciative references to the arrival of the Canadians as well as photographs, though the photographer so far has had a rather lean time among the Canadians where the man with the camera who ventures near the dock approaches has about as short a life as a rat in a crowd of terriers. A small regiment of camera fiends journeyed especially to Plymouth, eager to glorify the first Canadian to step ashore, but all such hopes were dashed by policemen impregnably supported by the incurable attitude of the superintendent towards press representatives of every kind, despite the official intimation that descriptive accounts of the landing of the Canadians would be welcomed.

The Weekly Despatch cartoonist has a happy effort yesterday depicting Germany and Austria as babes in the woods with the Canadian robin bringing a maple leaf to assist at their burial.

One Sunday paper writer observes: "When the troops were landed, one of the things that struck the onlooker was the freedom of good fellowship among them. On the shore the officers and men fraternized, and some were seen arm in arm, but when on duty the discipline is of the strictest kind."

More Stringent With Spies.

LONDON, Oct. 19—The authorities are taking more stringent measures against alien enemies who remain undetained in England. Yesterday afternoon the police raided a large restaurant owned and managed by Germans and Austrians. These were taken to a detention camp.

The agitation against permitting natives of hostile countries to continue their vocations here is growing as reports come in of alleged operations of German spies in Antwerp before that city fell.

Caronia Takes Tank Steamer.

HALIFAX, N.S., Oct. 19. — The steamer Caronia has arrived here with the oil tank Brindilla, from New York, with articles supposedly contraband of war.

The Brindilla formerly was a German steamer. The Washington Prize Court will decide on the contraband question.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightful by reason because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

"DARKNESS AND DAWN"

By Geo. Allan England

He took the torch from her and minutely examined the leaden casket.

It stood on the concrete floor, massive and solid, about three and a half feet high by five long and four wide. So far as he could see, there were neither locks nor hinges. The cover seemed to have been hermetically sealed on. Still visible were the marks of the soldering-iron, in a ragged line, about three inches from the top.

"The only way to get in here is to cut it open," said Allan at last. "If we had any means of melting the solder, that would be better, of course, but there's no way to heat a tool in this crypt. I take it the men who did the work had a plumber's gasoline torch, or something of that sort. We have practically nothing. As for building a fire in here and heating one of the aeroplane tools, that's out of the question. It would stifle us both. No, we must cut. That's the best thing we can do."

He drew his hunting knife from its sheath and, giving the torch back to Beatrice, knelt by the chest. Close under the line of soldering he dug the blade into the soft metal, and, goring with it, soon made a puncture through the leaden sheet.

"Only a quarter of an inch thick," he announced, with satisfaction. "This oughtn't to be such a bad job after all!"

Already he was at work, with infinite care not to shock or jar the precious contents within. In his powerful hands the knife laid back the metal in a jagged line. A quarter of an hour sufficed to cut across the entire front.

He rested a little while.

"Seems to be another chest inside, of wood," he told the girl. "Not decayed, either. I shouldn't wonder if the lead had preserved things absolutely intact. In that case this find is sure to be a rich one."

Again he set to work. In an hour from the time he had begun, the whole top of the lead box—save only that portion against the wall—had been cut off.

"Do you dare to move it out, Allan?" queried the girl anxiously.

"Better not. I think we can raise the cover as it is."

He slit up the front corners, and then with comparative ease bent the entire top upward. To the explorer's eyes stood revealed a chest of cedar, its cover held with copper screws.

"Now for it!" said the man. "We ought to have one of the screwdrivers from the Pauillac, but that would take too much time. I guess the knife will do."

With the blade he attacked the screws, one by one, and by dint of laborious patience in about an hour had removed all twenty of them.

A minute later he had pried up the cover, had quite removed it, and had set it on the floor.

Within, at one side, they saw a formless something swathed in oiled canvas. The other half of the space was occupied by eighty or a hundred vertical compartments, in each of which stood something carefully enveloped in the same material.

"Well, for all the world if it doesn't look like a set of big phonograph records!" exclaimed the man. He drew one of the objects out and very carefully unwrapped it.

"Just what they are—records! On steel. The new Chalmers-Enemarck process—new, that is, in 1917. So then, that's a phonograph, eh?"

He pointed at the oiled canvas.

"Open it quick, Allan!" Beatrice exclaimed. "If it is a phonograph, why, we can hear the very voices of the past, the dead, a full thousand years ago!"

With trembling fingers Stern slit the canvas wrappings.

"What a treasure! What a find!" exulted. "Look, Beta—see what fortune has put into our hands!"

Even as he spoke he was lifting the great phonograph from the space where, absolutely uninjured and intact, it had reposed for ten centuries.

A silver plate caught his eye. He paused to read:

METROPOLITON OPERA HOUSE.
New York City.

"This phonograph and these records were immured in the vault of this building September 28, 1918, by the Philavox Society, to be opened in the year 2000.

Non Pereat Memoria Musicae Nostrae.

"Let not the memory of our music perish!" he translated. "Why, I remember well when these records were made and deposited in the Metropolitan! A similar thing was done in Paris, you remember, and in Berlin. But how does this machine come here?"

"Probably the expedition reached New York, after all, and decided to transfer this treasure to a safer place where it might be absolutely safe and dry," she suggested. "It's here, anyhow; that's the main thing, and we've found it. What fortune!"

"It's lucky, all right enough," the man assented, setting the magnificent machine down on the floor of the crypt. "So far as I can see, the mechanism is absolutely all right in every way. They've even put in a box of te special fibre needles for use on the steel plates, Beta. Ever use on the steel plate, Beta. Everything's provided for.

"Do you know, the expedition must have been a much larger one than we thought? It was no child's play to invade the ruins of New York, rescue all this, and transport it here, probably with savages dogging their heels every step. Those certainly were determined, vigorous men, and a goodly number at that. And the fight must have been put up in the cathedral, defending their cache against the enemy, and dying for it, must have been terrifically dramatic!

"But all that's done and forgotten now, and we can only guess a bit of it here and there. The tangible fact is the machine and these records, Beatrice. They're real, and we've got them. And the quicker we see what they have to tell us the better, eh?"

She clapped her hands with enthusiasm.

"Put on a record, Allan, quick! Let's hear the voices of the past once more—human voices—the voices of the age that was!" she cried, excited as a child.

CHAPTER VIII.

"TILL DEATH DO US PART."

"All right, my darling," he made answer. "But not here. This is no place for melody, down in this dark and gloomy crypt, surrounded by the relics of the dead. We've been buried alive down here altogether too long as it is. Brrr! The chill's beginning to get into my very bones! Don't you feel it, Beta?"

"I do, now I stop to think of it. Well, let's go up then. We'll have our music where it belongs, in the cathedral, with sunshine and air and birds to keep it company!"

Half an hour later they had transported the magnificent phonograph and the steel records out of the crypt and up the spiral stairway, into the vast, majestic sweep of the transept.

They placed their find on the broad concrete steps that in the old days had led up to the altar, and while Allan minutely examined the mechanism to make sure that all was right, the girl ,sitting on the top step, looked over the records.

"Why, Allan, here are instrumental as well as vocal masterpieces," she announced with joy. "Just listen—here's Rossini's 'Barbiera de Seville' and Grieg's 'Anitra's Dance' from the 'Peer Gynt Suite,' and here's that most entrancing 'Barcarolle' from the 'Contes d'Hoffman'—you remember it?"

She began to hum the air, then, as the harmony flowed through her soul, sang a few lines, her voice like gold and honey:

Belle nuit, ô nuit d'amour, souris à nos ivresses!
Suit plus douce que le jour, ô belle nuit d'amour!
Le temps fuit et sans retour emporte nos tendresses;
Loin de cet heureux séjour le temps fuit sans retour!
Zéphyre embrasés, versez-nous vos caresses!
Ah! Donnez-nous vos baisers!

The echoes of Offenbach's wondrous air, a crystal stream of harmony, and of the passion-pulsing words, died through the vaulted heights. A moment Allan sat silent, gazing at the girl, and then he smiled.

"It lives again, the past!" he cried. "In you the world shall be made new once more! Beatrice, when I last heard the 'Barcarolle' it was sung by Farrar and Scotti at the Metropolitan, in the winter of 1913. And now—you waken the whole scene in me again!

"I seem to behold the vast, clear-lighted space anew, the tiers of gilded galleries and boxes, the thousands of men and women hanging eagerly on every silver note—I see the marvellous orchestra, many, yet one; the Venetian scene, the moonlight on the Grand Canal, the gondolas, the merrymakers—I hear Giulietta and Nicklausse blending those perfect tones! My heart leaps at the memory, beloved, and I bless you for once more awakening it!"

"With my poor voice?" she smiled. "Play it, play the record, Allan, and let us hear it as it should be sung!"

He shook his head.

"No!" he declared. "Not after you have sung it. Your voice to me is infinitely sweeter than any that the world of other days ever so much as dreamed of!"

He bent above her, caressed her hair and kissed her; and for a little while they both forgot their music. But soon the girl recalled him to the work in hand.

"Come, Allan, there's so much to do!"

"I know. Well now—let's see, what next?"

He paused, a new thought in his eyes.

"Beta!"

"Well?"

"You don't find Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March,' do you? Look, dearest, see if you can find it. Perhaps it may be there. If so—"

She eyed him, her gaze widening.

"You mean?"

He nodded.

"Just so! Perhaps, after all, you and I can—"

"Oh, come and help me look for it, Allan!" she cried enthusiastic as a child in the joy of his new inspiration. "If we only could find it, wouldn't that be glorious?"

Eagerly they searched together.

"'Ich Groll Nicht,' by Schumann, no," Stern commented, as one by one they examined the records. "'Ave Maria,' Arcadelt-Liszt — no, though it's magnificent. That's the one you sing best of all, Beta. How often you've sung it to me! Remember, at the bungalow, how I used to lay my head in your lap while you played with my Samsonesque locks and sang me to sleep? Let's see—Brahms's 'Wiegenlied.' Cradle-song, eh? A little premature; that's coming later, eh? Found it, by Jove! Here we are, the March itself, so help me! Shall I play it now?"

"Not yet, Allan. Here, see what I've found!"

She handed him a record as they sat there together in a broad ribbon of mid-morning sunlight that flooded down through one of the clear story windows.

"'The Form of the Solemnization of Matrimony, by Bishop Gibson,'" he read. And silence fell, and for a long minute their eyes met.

"Beatrice!"

"I know; I understand! So, after all, these words—"

"Shall be spoken, O my love! Out of the dead past a voice shall speak to us and we shall hear! Beatrice, the words your mother heard, my mother heard, we shall hear, too. Come, Beatrice, for now the time is at hand!"

She fell a trembling, and for a moment could not speak. Her eyes grew veiled in tears, but through them he saw a bright smile break like sunlight after summer showers.

She stood up and held out her hand to him.

"My Allan!"

In his arms he caught her.

"At last!" he whispered. "Oh, at last!"

When the majesty and beauty of the immortal marriage hymn climbed the high vaults of the cathedral, waking the echoes of the vacant spaces, and when it rolled, pealing triumphantly, she leaned her head upon his breast and, trembling, clung to him.

With his arm he clasped her; he leaned above her, shrouding her in his love as in an everlasting benison. And through their souls thrilled wonder, awe and passion, and life held another meaning and another mystery.

The words of solemn sacredness hallowed for centuries beyond the memory of man, rose powerful, heart-thrilling, deep with symbolism, strong with vibrant might—and, hand in hand the woman and the man bowed their heads listening:

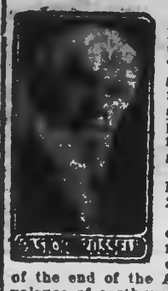
EARTHQUAKES IN BIBLE SYMBOLOGY

Symbolic Earthquakes--Revolutions.

CLOSING OF THE GOSPEL AGE

Significance of Earthquakes—The Part They Played in Nature—In Grace—Their Association With the Reign of Sin and Death—Grand Results to Be Expected—Stability of the New Order of Things in the Messianic Kingdom—Dark Hour Preceding the Millennial Morning of Blessing.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]



October 18. — Pastor Russell's text to-day was, "There shall be great earthquakes in divers places, and famines and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from Heaven." (Luke 21:11.) He said:

It is far from our thought that in itself an earthquake is a sign of the end of the Age; but the prevalence of earthquakes since the beginning of this twentieth century properly enough attracts our attention to "What say the Scriptures?" upon this subject. Our text is from the Master's own lips—a part of His description of the trouble coming upon the world in the close of this Gospel Age, preparatory to the inauguration of an Millennial Age and its glorious manifestation of righteousness under the King of kings.

The Master was answering a question asked by His disciples respecting the End of the Age and the signs which would mark its close. In the context our Lord had told them that they might expect to hear of wars and tumults, but not to be terrified; for although such things would occur; they would not be indications that the end of the Age was near. Then, coming to the events to be expected at the close of the Age, He used the words of our text. He also declared that before these terrible indications of the End of the Age, His disciples would suffer persecutions in the synagogues, churches, etc., for His sake and for the Truth's sake.

Our Adventist friends have also been calling attention to Scriptures predicting great tribulation upon the world in the very near future; but our message is a very different one from theirs and is used for a very different purpose. Their message is that the convulsions of nature now due will results in "a wreck of matter and a crush of worlds"—in the utter destruction of our race and the reduction of this earth to a mass of cinder; and they use this message as a club to drive the wicked to seek protection of the Lord.

Be it noticed how different is our reference to these calamities. We hold with the Scriptures that "the earth abideth forever"; that cold and heat, summer and winter, will continue as long as the earth remains; and that God made not the earth in vain, but formed it to be inhabited. —Ecclesiastes 1:4; Genesis 8:22; Isaiah 45:18.

We have already pointed out that the fire of this Day of the Lord will be a symbolic one, just as the "fiery trials" of the Church throughout this Age have not generally consisted even in part of literal fire; and that the fiery troubles coming upon the world will overthrow present institutions—political, social, financial and religious—and will engulf the whole world in anarchy. In the Scriptures this is symbolically called in some places a flood and in others a consuming fire.

We have also pointed out that the passing away of present institutions, symbolically called "the heavens and the earth that are now," will be followed by the establishment of "a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness"—the reorganization of society along lines of Divine approval, intimated by the words of our Lord's prayer, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven."

We will not attempt to prognosticate the character of the frightful signs which belong to the closing of this Age; but they are very particularly mentioned by our Lord and were also foretold by the Prophet Joel, saying, "I will show wonders in heaven above and signs in the earth beneath, blood and fire and pillars of smoke."—Joel 2:30; Acts 2:19.

The Apostle Paul refers to the same thing in Hebrews 12:26-28. He alludes to the establishment of the Law Covenant at Mount Sinai and the wonderful manifestations which at that time caused Moses and all Israel to fear and quake. Then he tells us that those events were typical, or figurative, of the still more wonderful shakings, signs, etc., to be expected at the closing of this Gospel Age, when the Kingdom of God is about to be established and the New Covenant about to go into effect between God and mankind at the hands of the great Mediator, Jesus Christ and the Church.

St. Paul declares that the Word of the Lord upon this subject implies the removing of all things that can be shaken, so that only the unshakable things will remain; and these unshakable things he associates with God's Kingdom of righteousness. When with the eyes of our understanding open we look about us, we see very many things that evidently are not permanent, not right, not satisfactory to God and to all who love righteousness and hate iniquity; and when we reflect that the shaking will be such as to loosen and destroy all these imperfect things of the present time, we can imagine better than we can describe the severity of that shaking.

In the Revelation this same thought is expressed under the figure of a mighty earthquake, the like of which there has not been before and will never be thereafter. (Revelation 16:18.) Throughout the Apocalypse the term earthquake is used to symbolically represent revolution. What we are to expect then will be a great revolution, a great earthquake, the great shaking of the present institutions which will overthrow everything that is not of the Lord's establishment and approval.

In the Divine order there seems to be a harmony between the literal and the figurative; therefore the literal earthquakes have their part to play in the great Program. Not only are they to serve the Church as signs corroborating the prophecies respecting the approach of the great Time of Trouble which closes this Gospel Age, but they are to serve also another purpose—a particular purpose.

The Scriptures clearly intimate that our physical earth has not yet attained the grand perfection which the Lord designs that it should have, to be fit for the blessed ones whose home, as the Paradise of God, it shall be throughout all eternity. Be it noticed that the Scriptures clearly point out that the Little Flock, called of God during this Gospel Age to be the Bride of Christ, are to experience a change of nature from human to spirit, which will prepare them for Heavenly conditions, spiritual conditions. But for the remainder of mankind God's provision, according to His Word, is not the change of nature, but a restoration to the perfection of human nature and the development of the earth to that perfect condition which will make it as a whole the antitype of the Garden of Eden—the Paradise restored.

We have already called attention to the fact that the flood of waters in Noah's time was called by the breaking of the last of a series of rings that once surrounded the earth after the manner of the rings of the planet Saturn. Foreknowing the wickedness that would develop amongst mankind and the power that would be exercised amongst men by the giants of that day (Genesis 6:4), God had so timed the breaking of this last ring that the flood of waters would serve the purpose of overthrowing that order of things and making ready for the next feature of the Divine Program, the present order, which began after the Deluge, upon the coming of Noah and his family out of the Ark.

Similarly, the Scriptures teach, God has reserved for the appropriate time in the end of this Age certain great physical disturbances necessary to the development of the earth and its preparation for the Reign of Righteousness and blessing of mankind, so that the troubles incidental to this change will come upon the world as disastrous floods, etc., and will co-operate in the bringing of mankind into sore straits and trials of faith and patience, which will result in anarchy and the complete shaking, not only of the physical earth, but also of the social earth and the ecclesiastical, or "heavenly," institutions, in order that all unstable things may pass away and that the new order of things may be ushered in on a permanent basis, having the Divine approval, and meaning ultimately the grandest blessing for our race.

From this standpoint a certain class can read the signs of the times intelligently and with confidence; and this class the Scriptures call the Lord's Little Flock (Luke 12:32), counted foolish by the world, but counted of the Lord as "the wise" who are to "understand." (Daniel 12:10.) To these the Master Himself addressed these words, "There shall be signs in the sun, in the moon and in the stars; and upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." And again, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your deliverance draweth nigh."—Luke 21:25, 26, 28.

The Lord's consecrated people, possessed of His Spirit, cannot in any sense of the word rejoice at the tribulation coming upon others. Their rejoicing can be only in respect to the glorious things which they hope to experience, and which they know to be near by these outward signs. Their rejoicing is not merely on their own behalf, but also on behalf of the whole world; for they have the assurance of the Scriptures that beyond this Time of Trouble, which looms up as a dark cloud to cover the whole social world, there is a silver lining; and that shortly the glorious Sun of Righteousness will blaze forth, dispel every cloud and all the shadows of ignorance and superstition, and bring to the world of mankind the rich blessings of Divine favor secured through the precious blood of Christ.

From this standpoint the news of destructive earthquakes here and there appeals to us as incidental corroboration of the prophecies of Scripture which shew us that we are very near the long-threatened Time of Trouble. True, there may be a lull for a brief period; but we have confidence that our Lord's prophecy as recorded in our text has a meaning, and that the time for its fulfillment must be very near at hand. We are well aware that the natural man and his scientific leaders will consider the association of the facts of our day with the words uttered more than eighteen centuries ago as very foolish. We are aware that they will say, as the Apostle Peter declared they would, that "all things continue as they have been from the foundation of the world," and that such changes have been going on, and will continue to do so, without any relationship to our Lord's Second Presence and the Time of Trouble with which this Age will end. (2 Peter 3:3, 4.) This is their view—the reverse is ours.

The Word of God teaches us that at this time of transition from the Gospel Age to the Messianic Age we are to expect wonderful contortions of nature and some radical changes in the earth's condition, in order that it may be the better adapted to the wants of man throughout eternity. It is God's own declaration that He will make the place of His feet glorious—the earth, His "footstool."—Isaiah 60:13; 66:1.

Evidently great and wonderful changes will be effected, some of which will be brought about gradually. For instance, we all know of the gradual change of the temperate zones, its extension further and further toward the poles. We notice also the increasing moderation nearest the [illegible]. Those who recognize the [illegible] God can have full confidence that He is able to perform all the [illegible] Word respecting the [illegible] conditions of this [illegible] of mankind during the Age and the ages to follow.

As already intimated, [illegible] heavals are pictured in the Word of God under the symbolism of earthquakes, "mountains carried into the sea," etc. Similarly, uprisings of the social elements in anarchy are pictured as tidal waves engulfing the "mountains"—governments. This is one of the most forceful pictures used, not only in the Psalms, but also in the Revelation and in our Lord's symbolical reference to the great Time of Trouble which is near at hand. Of this time the Prophet Daniel has declared that it will be "a Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation"; and our Lord, when quoting this prophecy, adds, "No, nor ever shall be."—Daniel 12:1; Matthew 24:21.

Let us not be misunderstood to be advocating anarchy or revolution of any kind. On the contrary, we are giving heed to the Master's injunction that all who are His true followers seek peace and pursue it, and so far as possible live peaceably with all men; that like Himself they should not resist evil with evil, force with force, but should rather commit their way unto the Lord, seek to walk in His paths, and rely upon Him for the results that will be to their profit and His glory.

So far from counselling anarchy, we hold and teach that even the meanest and poorest form of government is superior to anarchy; and in all sympathy and kindness we counsel those who are tending toward Socialism that they are unsuspectingly "hatching cockatrice eggs"; for under present conditions Socialism is absolutely impossible. The rich will not give up their advantages without a struggle to the death; and this, as soon as Socialism shall have gained the power which it is seeking, will spell anarchy for the world. For those now starting in with Socialistic hopes will find those hopes vain, and will become so angered, so disappointed, that they will be soured, embittered, mad, with the deceptions of their theories and the impossibility of carrying them out, as they intended, along the lines of benevolence. As a result they will be drawn to the desperate methods of the anarchist.

Would that all could see with us what the Scriptures so clearly indicate, namely, the Divine foreknowledge of past, present and future conditions, and the Divine arrangement of these for the highest welfare of all who seek righteousness, all who hearken to the voice of Him that speaketh from Heaven! Such the Lord urges to take His yoke upon them and learn of Him; that they accept of trials and difficulties incidental to loyalty to Him, and thus be counted worthy of a share in the highest and best of all God's gifts—to be sharers with our Lord Jesus in His Throne, in His nature and in the power which shortly He will exercise in the blessing of all mankind with Restitution.—Acts 3:19-21.

We urge all who are the Lord's to seek more and more to understand His wonderful Plan of Salvation, to glorify Him with their bodies and their spirits, which are His, and to wait for His time and His manner of bringing in the blessings which all see are so much needed by the poor "groaning creation." Meantime, all such should cultivate the graces of the Holy Spirit or, as the Apostle puts it, "put on Christ." His character, His meekness, patience, long suffering, brotherly kindness, love, against which things there is no law. Respecting these graces St. Peter declares, "If ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 1:10, 11.

These cannot be shaken out of the Lord's hand by any tumult. Indeed, if they be in the disasters of literal earthquakes they will be able to rejoice even in tribulation, knowing that all things work together for good to those who love God.

Salvationist Song Popular.

The story of a Salvation Army song carolled on the fighting line by members of the corps, which are such a familiar scene in every big city, comes in the news from the front. These are the words:

"I'm a child of a King,
I'm a child of a King,
With Jesus my saviour,
I'm a child of the King."

They were sung by a wounded soldier going to the rear in an ambulance, taken up by a few of his comrades and gradually the chorus swelled until a whole army joined in.

A motor-driver said:

"After the chorus had been sung twice over I heard it taken up by other salvationists, and presently from many parts of the camp came the old salvation song."

Had No Power Over The Limbs

It would be easy to tell you how not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous symptoms. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures locomotor ataxia and derangements of heart and nerves, but it may be more satisfactory to you to read this letter.

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D. 3, Sombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could vous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbours of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Sleeplessness.

A favorite dictum of the physiologists, emphasized in their latest works, relates to the dangers of sleeplessness. "Sleep is more important to life than food, and insomnia kills sooner than starvation," to quote the exact words of one. This has been a kind of fad in medicine and is reiterated again and again in these books without any real evidence, so far as I know, to support it. Taught to every medical man of older generations and to every medical fledgling of today, it finds its way to general public acceptance, begetting in the lay mind terrors of insanity and death which haunt every unfortunate victim of insomnia. The fear of not sleeping is one of the commonest causes of insomnia. Yet I do not know of any medical evidence anywhere of disastrous results from insomnia and have myself never seen any harm arise from sleeplessness apart from the harm done by the fears and worries associated with the condition.—Atlantic Monthly.

Making a New Nose.

In a German medical journal Professor Max Joseph of Berlin describes a method of making a new nose when the original member has been destroyed by disease or accident. An arm is fixed above the head and encased in plaster of paris so that it cannot be moved. A piece of the skin oval in outline is then cut partially free from the arm and sewn to one side of the nose. After it has taken root in this new position the flap is cut free from the arm, which is now removed from the plaster of paris encasement, and sewn to the other side of the nose by its remaining edge. This gives sufficient skin covering. The nose is now built up by strips of bone taken from the shin and a straight profile is obtained.

"Master Humphrey's Clock."

There has just come into the market the famous old relic which gave Charles Dickens the title of his story, "Master Humphrey's Clock."

It is a grandfather clock, inscribed with the name of the maker, William Humphreys, of Barnard Castle, and the date, 1829, with a dial of brass and silvered metal, in a tall case of Dutch lacquer, with architectural top.

William Humphreys was the son of Thomas Humphreys, a watchmaker of Barnard Castle, whose shop was opposite the King's Head Inn, where Dickens spent six weeks in 1838 while studying the Dotheby's portion of "Nicholas Nickleby."

The clock remained in possession of its maker until his death, when it was acquired by the father of the present owner.

England's Shortest Ministry.

England can beat France in the competition for the shortest Ministry on record. On Feb. 10, 1746, the Earl of Bath came into power and on the 12th of the same month went out, having merely achieved for his Government the historic nickname of the "short lived" administration. The average length of an English Ministry has been variously estimated at five, five, and six years, but Walpole managed to remain in power for twenty-one years and Pitt for eighteen.—London Chronicle.

POEMS IN WAR TIME.

Tennyson's Charge of the Light Brigade Helped to Win Inkerman.

Perhaps no poem which ever issued from the press was more eagerly bought and read than Sir Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake." In palace and cottage it was devoured with the eagerness of an exciting novel, and even on the battlefield it was welcomed as an augury of victory. When the first copy reached Wellington's famous lines of Torres Vedras—it appeared in 1810, right in the middle of the Peninsular War—Sir Adam Ferguson was posted with his company on a very exposed spot raked by the enemy's fire. The men were ordered to lie flat on the ground, and while they kept this attitude their captain read to them the description of the battle in Canto VI. of the poem. So excited did it make the prostrate soldiers that every time the enemy's heavy shot struck the bank above, the reading was interrupted by a shout of triumph from the listening soldiers. Surely never was poem read in more dramatic circumstances.

Yet if the oft-told story of Wolfe reciting Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard" is true, it beats the foregoing, as the Yankees say, "to a frazzle." Think of the dark and silent highway of the St. Lawrence River, the boat containing General Wolfe and his officers, the muffled oars silent as the flight of an owl, and the low, distinct, thrilling voice of the man who was indeed going to victory and death and immortal glory speaking the lines:

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour—
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Like all good stories, this has been strenuously denied, but there is much evidence for its truth, and for the General's comment when he had finished: "Gentlemen, I would rather have written that poem than I would take Quebec to-morrow."

When the news of the famous charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava reached England the imagination and patriotic fervor of a great poet was stirred, and Alfred Tennyson, in a white heat of inspiration, penned his immortal ode:

Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die.

When the poem in its turn reached the frozen plains of the Crimea its effect upon the war-weary soldiers was electrical. It acted upon them like the blast of the bugle and the rolling of drums, and put new courage into an army worse provisioned and worse housed and clothed than any other army in history. It might almost be said that the poem won the battle of Inkerman.

Laundry Lines.

When boiling soiled clothes try putting a slice of lemon in the pot and boiling it with the clothes.

If lace is rinsed in milk and ironed while still damp it will have just a little body, and this is quite desirable.

One ounce of epsom salts added to a gallon of water makes an excellent rinsing mixture for colored blouses and washing dresses.

Colored handkerchiefs should be soaked in cold salt water for a short time before they are washed. This will prevent the colors from running or fading.

WELL KNOWN MUSICIANS WILL ASSIST DR. GORDON TO-NIGHT

Dr. J. L. Gordon, the Winnipeg orator, opened his meetings here most auspiciously last night at the George Street Methodist church. His address was eloquent, forceful and inspiring and everything indicates that his meetings will be largely attended, and therefore very successful. To-night he will not only have Mr. Gresshaw, the celebrated bass who delighted local congregations here yesterday, but Edour Hesselberg, the famous Russian pianist will also be present to assist.

...acul, the flat watermarked kind looks so much like breadfruit, probably stands first for making the all round fur garment, even those that are rather intricate in cut, for furs now are no longer considered fashions apart, but are used exactly on the lines of the afternoon and evening coat. If a coat is intended for afternoon wear it is a little more tailored perhaps in appearance. Its lining is not plain, however, but of some brightly printed taffeta or satin. The design is either stripes or bright landscape, futurist or mottled satins.

In the evening fur coats linings are much more elaborate, wonderful Chinese and East Indian printed designs on crêpe or even panne velvet, which is used now not because it gives the warmth, but because it is now made so it seems more like a heavy satin.

Coats for evening are of ermine, with the tails for fringe; Hudson seal, chinchilla, taupe and sable; for afternoon, kolinsky, seal, beaver or caracul.

Kolinsky is used for trimming; also monkey fur. The fox furs are still in style and the kit fox, little used here, is said to be used more this season on the models that have been brought over to America.

Even more noticeable this season than the furs are the fur trimmed garments. Nothing seems to escape the touch of fur, and very deep bands, sometimes twelve and fourteen inches, are used to edge the redingote hems or tunics. Cuffs are a flat fur band of about five inches depth. Collars on coats of tailored suits are either bands like on the cuffs, if they have the high round neck, or a rolled over collar lapel on the modified Medici lines, if the coat has the usual V in front.

The long cloth or velvet afternoon coats have the skunk or kolinsky fur hem border with fur collar and cuffs. These are the most practical afternoon garments by far. Some of them, instead of a yoke, have a high Directoire waist line and the large sleeves set in triangularly. The result is a new fitted look, though the arms are a bit restricted in movement.

The round, small barrel muffs are the novelty of the hour. They will not, however, become popularized this season. There is an in between fashion, a sort of long barrel shaped muff, not as small as the new model nor so large as the flat pillow of last season, that will probably be the choice of the conservatively stylish woman.

Pink Underwear.

It is curious how steadily the vogue for pink underwear has been growing, so much so that it has replaced white with some women. Nightgowns reasonably priced are of pink lawn, batiste, China silk or crêpe de Chine or the new American pussy willow texture that has the finest grain possible.

Crêpe de Chine is the principal material used; it washes well, though it does not, of course, stand rough handling. Women like it because, besides being pretty, it can be easily washed out every night, does not need any starch and can be ironed without any fuss by a little electric iron such as every one now possesses. These pink crêpe de Chine combinations, pantalons and chemises are generally trimmed with Val. lace; the more elaborate are a mass of crinoline insertions which make the garment of almost cobwebby lightness. The petticoats have the same Val. lace, a wider kind being used.

The envelope chemise is one of the newest shapes to be found in the shops. It is really a long chemise with an extension band in the centre of the back lower edge that is buttoned over to the front edge, so that it forms a sort of divided skirt.

Another combination that looks well on the figure is princesse shaped to just above the knees; from there it changes into pantalons by adding two ten inch ruffles which form the pantalons. Sometimes this model has a high Empire waist line with a little narrower satin ribbon interrun than the one that heads the ruffles.

SAGE ADVICE FROM MIRANDA.

By Elsie Carroll.

MIRANDA had been considering the subject of an opera box for the winter.

"Did you ever notice," she said, turning to me, "how few, how very few people seem to know how to sit in an opera box?"

"No," I replied. "I don't believe I ever gave the matter any consideration."

"They all," said Miranda, "seem to want to squeeze to the front of the box and brace their knees against the front of it. Why, the very merit and pleasure of a box is the privilege one has of sitting easily about, as though in a reception room."

"Perhaps," I suggested, "they are afraid if they sit back somebody won't see them."

Miranda ignored the interruption. "I have seen extraordinary postures in the orchestra also," she said. "People that greatly enjoy music often lose themselves to such an extent that they look as if they were in the throes of catalepsy—eyes closed or cast up to heaven, arms tense or head cast back—utter abandon is not well expressed in the opera house."

"I will try to remember, dear papa," I quoted.

"Don't be silly," said Miranda; "you know what I mean, that no woman can afford to forget herself for one moment in a public place. If she does, inevitably she will make herself ridiculous."

"The worst thing a woman can do in a public place," I said, "is to rearrange her toilette, take out her vanity case, adjust her coiffure and powder her face."

"No gentlewoman," said Miranda, "would ever think of doing such a thing, and we are not discussing other kinds of women. Though even they would not step into that breach of good form if they knew how men laughed at them for it."

"Another thing," I said, "that I have seen even well bred women do, and a thing that to my mind is execrable, is to look into the mirrors in an elevator."

"Yes," said Miranda, "that is unfortunately a universal American failing."

"Miranda," I asked, "what do you think of this habit so many have of cigarette smoking?"

"It is not smart," said Miranda briefly. "But women will learn that only when they have ruined their teeth and come to grief in some other direction from it."

"I recall being at tea at one of the hotels last season with young Mr. Ardmore," I said. "He offered me a cigarette and I was duly provoked. But he was equal to the exigency. 'I'm sorry,' he said, 'but nowadays one never knows whether one is insulting a woman by offering her a cigarette or by not offering her one.'"

"That was quick on the trigger," said Miranda. "After all, quickness is the vitality of conversation."

"There is not one woman in two hundred," I answered, "that can talk."

"I beg to take exception," said Miranda. "All women can talk, but scarcely one knows how. Hare Watterson once said, 'Let women talk.' And the comment made thereon was a graceful sort of bow to the inevitable."

"In my opinion," I ventured, "a woman should spend as much time getting her conversation arranged for the evening as she does her gown."

"Yes," said Miranda, "conversation is a dead art. Women ought to read the newspaper for the sake of a general basis. Why do men prefer the company of apparently uneducated young girls to that of well bred women? Simply because the former can talk and they put vivacity and charm into conversation as well. Many women simply dribble through a dozen platitudes so hampered by the fear of overstepping conventionalities and end by being bored and bored."

"So that," I said, "corresponds to the reason why men always have so much better a time together than women do?"

"Yes," answered Miranda. "Because their mentalities are always capable of meeting on the line of expression."

"The unpardonable sin," I said, "is to laugh in the wrong place."

"Yes," said Miranda, "to laugh at any one. Even a well bred servant knows better than to indulge in that social crime."

"Don't you think that it is very impolitic to talk of one person behind her back to another?"

"It is indeed," said Miranda. "I know one woman who makes one always gauge what her hostess will say about her when she leaves by what they say of absent others."

"I suppose," I hinted, "that it is a lack of tact."

"One of the best rules for tact," said Miranda, as she turned to her desk, "is contained in a rather crude old Swedish proverb. 'Never speak of rope in a family that has lost a member by hanging,' it reads."

"I don't entirely agree with that," I said. "I argue that the Queen Mother, Alexandra of England, is tact in stating that the greatest art is to take hold of a situation delicately and directly. In short, to ignore nothing."

"Tact," said Miranda, "is the instinct for social salvation that must be reborn to be possessed. It is an inside, for it consists in adjusting a method which has slipped out of social grace."

"Tact, then," I said, "is knowing that every awkward situation has an exodus."

"Um!" said Miranda practically, "and now I hope to see you for the first of the dinners of the season, so you can talk any more."

KIDNEY TROUBLE AFFECTED HIS SPINE

Suffered For Forty Years Until He Used "Fruit-a-tives"

BROWTE, ONT., OCT. 31st. 1913.

"For about forty years I was troubled with Lame Back brought on by Kidney and Bladder Trouble. I was never confined to my bed with the trouble, but it affected my spine and I had to rest for a time. I took advertised remedies which never did me any good. Then I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised and decided to try them. They did me more good than any other remedy.

My son suffered from the same trouble and frequently had to leave off working, but "Fruit-a-tives" remedied it for him. I would strongly advise anyone suffering from Kidney and Bladder Trouble to use "Fruit-a-tives".

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Knowlton's Thanksgiving

(New England Homestead)

By Ella H. Stratton

"THERE, those fish will help out your Thanksgiving dinner," he growled, throwing three small trout into a pan. "That is more'n I expected to get. I saw Ben Adams, and he says Snapum has already bargained the farm away to a stranger. I'm thankful none of the town folks will have it, anyway."

"I'll get right up and fry the fish for your supper," she said briskly, ignoring his last words. "You must be hungry and cold. It looks like a terribly raw day out, and I wouldn't wonder if we had a big storm."

"You needn't mind cooking the fish for me; I couldn't eat none of it if you did. I suppose the horses and cows and hens will have to eat as long as there is anything left for 'em," he muttered ungraciously as he started for the barn.

"When a man like your father once gives up, he is the most unreasonable and ungrateful being in the whole world, Nellie," she said, looking after him as she went on with the preparations for supper. "Now he'll make a good meal of those fish and some nice fried potatoes, but he'll grumble all the while he's eating 'em. Some folks are made that way, and it's no more use to try and change 'em than it is to try and change the spots on a leopard—not one bit. Set the table, daughter, and we'll have supper all ready when he comes in. He'll relish it."

That was just what he did do, while his wife sipped her tea and ate nothing, and Nellie played with the food on her plate. Snapum's name was not mentioned, but the reproachful glances cast at his daughter told very plainly what was in James Knowlton's mind. After the meal was over he took his paper and sat down to read it, while his wife knitted in silence.

Suddenly a loud knock at the door startled them. Had Snapum come to gloat over their misery? Knowlton stole across the floor and opened the door quickly without waiting to light the lamp. There stood there, with snowy coat, outstretched hands, and eager eyes Knowlton looked at the bearded stranger curiously, but the mother's eyes were keener. She knew her boy.

"Jimmie, my Jimmie!" she cried, joyfully, then she threw her arm around him and laughed and cried as she kissed him again and again, holding him at arm's length between whiles to trace her boy's likeness in the unfamiliar bearded face.

"I didn't know you, son; indeed I thought—" the father began, then stopped abruptly. He could not tell his son what he thought.

"I'd have known you anywhere, father," laughed Jimmie happily. "You're not a day older than you were when I last saw you—not a day. Oh, it is good to see you both and the old home again, though I have a home of my own now, and a wife and two babies."

"My little Jimmie, and I'm a grandmother! Why didn't you write and tell us? Why didn't you let us know where you were? We—we thought you might be dead, Jimmie," said the mother with gentle reproach.

"Well, I didn't like to write until I was successful, and then—then there was so much else to think of that I kept putting it off. I didn't think, mother, truly I didn't, but I see now that it was a wrong thing to do. I had no right to add anxiety and uncertainty to your other troubles," he admitted, laying his strong hand upon hers with a loving pressure.

Then they told the story of the mortgage, little by little, and he listened with a smile that puzzled them.

"Snapum says he has sold it already, Jimmie," she said forgetting that her visit was to be kept a secret, but her husband did not notice the words. "He has sold our home to a stranger."

"So he has—he has sold it to me, mother," cried the son with a glad shout. "He didn't know me, and I took good care not to tell him my real name. I had to buy it in the name of my wife's brother, but he will deed it to you. That mortgage will cause no more trouble. I'll attend to that. I could not get it in any other way, you see, Snapum would never have sold it to James Knowlton, Jr."

"How did you know about it?" asked the father.

"I saw the foreclosure in the paper and didn't let the grass grow under my feet until I had possession of that mortgage, I can tell you. It took me less than fifteen minutes to start for home after I read it," he laughed. "I have taken the home paper, under another name, for years, just to keep track of the town."

"But, Jimmie, my boy, can — can you afford this? That mortgage cost you quite a little sum. I haven't reckoned up the interest lately — I couldn't," questioned the mother anxiously.

"I rather guess I can," was the confident reply. "I'm not a millionaire, but I can put enough in the bank to keep you and father from worrying when I go back to the ranch. I met Nellie out here with Jim Brown, and they didn't know me. Is that it? Well, he used to be a decent sort of a boy. I have hoped for you to sell the farm and come and live with me. You will be welcome, I can tell you that. It is a great country out there—a great country. Our ranch is as large as this whole town, and there is plenty of room. I've a Jimmie, too, and a little Mary, mother, and they both want to see you. But if you'd rather stay in the old home, you shall, and we'll visit once a year. We can decide that later. Just now I want to know what you've got for dinner to-morrow. I'm hungry for one of the old-time Thanksgivings you used to get up, mother. My wife is a fine cook, can't be beat, but every woman gives a different taste to her victuals, and I'm just hankering for yours."

James Knowlton and his wife looked at each other questioningly. They could not tell him that their Thanksgiving dinner was to be plain, everyday sausage.

"You shall have it, Jimmie, you shall have it," said the mother after a pause. "But we'll have to get up early and work right lively to get it ready. We—we didn't plan for much this year, you see."

"No, we didn't exactly plan for much of anything," admitted the father with a flush on his cheek, and his eyes fell before his son's steady gaze. "But it isn't too late yet. The turkeys and chickens are just as fat as they were yesterday, and the horses can go to town just as quickly as they could last week. I'll be up at four o'clock and we'll have the Thanksgiving of our lives, for we have a right to be thankful for, mother."

It is strange how prosperity will seem to change a man's very nature, isn't it? James Knowlton was at peace with himself and the world! The dinner next day was a triumph of culinary skill and no one enjoyed it better than he. But the mother feasted her eyes on her son's happy face, trying in vain to make him look like the Jimmie of ten years before. She was content and thankful for the blessed privilege of waiting on her loved ones. There is little need to add more, for the end is easily imagined. Snapum's rage, when he found out the deception, was useless, his revenge had gone for ever. James Knowlton gained influence and respect when it was known that he had a comfortable sum in village bank. Nellie was married at Christmas, and, as Brown went west to settle upon the next ranch to his brother-in-law, the father and mother have decided to go also and be near their children. A cozy home, just large enough for two is being built for them, midway between the two others, where the may find rest and comfort for the few years of their days.

DIET AND GOOD HEALTH.

Food Should Be Carefully Selected and Properly Varied.

The eminent American physiologist Lusk says that nature, through the device of appetite, usually provides against the use of improper food, but that reason must play a part in food selections. A glass of milk and a piece of pie are poor materials for the brain of an active business man whose sedentary life requires 2,500 heat units or calories to maintain his body machinery.

We need also water, salts, proteins and certain newly discovered substances called vitamines. All these materials are to be found in milk, beans, bread and other great fundamentals of nutrition. Solutions of cane sugar or of glucose are not the exclusive mainstays of life, and yet glucose taken alone yields 2,500 calories at a cost of 4 1-6 cents, and 2,500 calories in the form of cane sugar cost 8 1-3 cents.

Glucose is the cheapest food fuel known, but, like cane sugar or butter fat, is not a complete food in that it does not contain everything necessary for life. Commercial glucose is absolutely harmless. A man must have sufficient calories in his diet if he is to live properly and perform labor satisfactorily.—New York World.

MONTENEGRO AN ODD LAND

Scratch a Native There and You Will Find a "Superintendent."

Montenegro is one of the oddest countries in the world. There the women are the producers, clothes make the man, the king is greater than the ministry, the chamber or the constitution, and a man may be imprisoned for eating hedgehog. A man who is struck may kill the striker provided it be done at once. If he delays he is punished as a murderer.

A Montenegrin's habit is as costly as his purse can buy, and there the apparel proclaims the man. The baggy blue trousers are the same for the king or the peasant, as is the bright sash which holds the invariable revolver. But from the red jacket and the red-lingote one connotes whether the wearer be a man of substance and consequence or not. Among the women there are slighter distinctions.

The women engage in the productive pursuits, and yet the man has capacity and when taken from his bellicose environment of his mountain home becomes one of the best of workers. His 500 years of freedom have given the Montenegrin a fine sense of order, and it is a current saying along the Dalmatian coast that when a Montenegrin applying for a job is asked what he can do he invariably answers, "Superintend."

Respect for age is enjoined by law, and in the articles regulating public conveyances it is provided that the traveler may have the seat indicated by his ticket, but it is added, "The deference due by youth to age requires that the former yield the better place to their seniors." Another article declares the equality of all before the law and lays down the democratic principle of the universal ownership of land and the equal right of all to hold office.

Took Her Breath Away.

A very talkative little girl, who had been chattering away like a magpie all morning, suddenly became silent when a lady, dressed in the extreme of the fashion, called on her mother. Wishing to be amiable, the visitor said to the chatterbox:

"Have you lost your tongue, my dear?"

"Oh, no, ma'am," was the reply; "only my breath."—New York Tribune.

Vast Forests of Alaska.

We hear much concerning the rapid disappearance of our forests. The vast timbered area of the eastern and central portions of the United States is fast being transformed into a wooden country, becoming very thickly populated, and doubtless will never grow much timber again. In Alaska, which is one of our territories, the timber area is estimated to be somewhere near 80 per cent of the entire land, and there is considerably more than 100,000,000 acres of good woodland, with timber that is of such a value its real worth cannot be estimated. It will require years to even make any marked impression on such a vast forest.—Philadelphia North American Mamma's Kiss.

This pretty child story is from the French:

A mother tells her little girl that because she has been naughty she will not kiss her for a week. Before two days have gone by the child's fine hunger so for her mother's kiss that she begs her not to punish her any more.

The mother says: "No, my dear, I told you that I should not kiss you and I must keep my word."

"But, mamma, mamma," says the little girl, "would it be breaking your word if you should kiss me just once tonight when I'm asleep?"

Wedding Presents.

Wedding presents originated in a feudal tribute from the vassals to their lord. When feudalism ceased the presents became voluntary. In the days of Queen Elizabeth a pair of knives or scissors was a common gift and symbolized the cutting of unfaithful love.

POSITION IS INSECURE.

Germans Are Reported To Be Retiring From Ostend.

NORTHEAST FRANCE, Oct. 19.—A report is current in this district this morning that the Germans are retiring from Ostend and its neighborhood. It is added the town was not occupied in great force. It is impossible here, and at the time which this message must be despatched, to obtain any verification of the report, which, however, comes from what I think is a fairly reliable source. I am informed in another quarter that the Germans now regard their general position in Belgium as a not quite satisfactory one.

It is straggling and open to attack, and in great danger owing to the continued progress of the allies. Farther south good progress, it is added, is being made by the allies in Belgium, and in military circles high hopes are entertained that a notable advance will be registered during the course of this week. It, indeed, is confidently anticipated that the advance will be achieved by a victory which will also have considerable effect on the position elsewhere.

The machinery never arrived, the factory never started and no workers came, but its situation dominates Edinburgh and the prepared position, jutting into the sea, would enable big guns to hit the Forth bridge."

THE APPLE CROP WILL BE LARGE

Clarence W. Moomaw, Office of Markets, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture

According to investigations conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, it is estimated that the commercial apple crop of 1914 will be much larger than that of last year, but not so great by several million barrels as in 1912. Present indications are that the problem of distribution will be rather complex, owing to the heavy yield and uncertain conditions resulting from the European war.

The United Kingdom and the Continent in the past have taken only a small percentage of American apples, less than 2,000,000 barrels annually from the United States, and little more from Canada, but the influence of those markets upon prices of the better grades of market apples has been potent. It is desirable that growers and shippers optimistically prepare for disposal of Europe's usual portion in other ways, and relieve their minds of any idea that the prosperity of the apple industry is dependent upon open markets across the Atlantic.

Buyers Are Uneasy

The chief effect of the war upon the apple market is a feeling of uneasiness among dealers who have been accustomed to buy for export, or for distribution at home through the winter. Another factor is the influence upon credit, which makes it more difficult for growers and shippers to finance the deal.

Ocean transportation has been seriously crippled, but latest announcements of steamship companies indicate that fairly regular schedules will be maintained between America and the United Kingdom. However, granting that transportation can be satisfactorily arranged, America can not expect Europe to draw her usual portion. It will hardly be possible to reach Germany, and even where markets are open, the demand for apples will be greatly curtailed owing to the fact that fruit is somewhat of a luxury, and consequently its sale is seriously affected in hard times.

No Cause For Gloom

The conclusion is that America must either consume her apples or find new markets for the surplus. It should be remembered that the home markets, which always have consumed practically the entire crop, are still open, and that with judicious handling from orchard to consumer the demand can be stimulated and the crop marketed with relative success to all, even granting Europe does not draw a single package. It would appear that simple confidence and good sense are required for solving the problem of distribution.

As to just what constitutes judicious handling, the Office of Markets strongly urges:

That growers pick and handle the fruit in such condition as to insure it against deterioration.

That all inferior grades be eliminated from the green-fruit markets, and diverted as far as possible to cider mills, canneries and evaporators.

That only long-keeping, standard-packed varieties be placed in cold storage.

That a special effort be made to fully supply small towns by direct sales, for the purpose of securing equitable distribution and avoiding the congestion of large markets.

That all growers, operators, dealers and associations early reconcile themselves to the conditions, and arrive at an estimate of true values in order to assure quick movement of the crop from producer to consumer.

Pick In Uniform Condition

In explanation, it is suggested that growers should not attempt to harvest the crop at one picking, but rather should glean the trees for only such fruit as is ready to come off, repeating the process until the crop has been picked in uniform condition. The advantage is that the shipping period may begin earlier and last longer, thereby securing greater time for effecting distribution. Furthermore, if all the fruit is harvested at the same time, it is to be remembered that shipments represent extreme stages of maturity, ranging from ripe to green in the same package, and that frequently toward the end of the season over-ripe condition of a portion of the crop results from a desire to take off at once only what is in condition for harvesting.

Careful handling from orchard to cars is necessary to prevent deterioration. It is not difficult to understand why a lot of fruit does not arrive in the market in prime condition if it is picked and piled on the ground in the hot sun, placed in packages in a heated condition and finally hauled without cover and springs over rough roads. With proper facilities, apples picked to-day should not be packed until to-morrow. For this purpose shelter should be provided in order that the fruit may be packed in a cool, dry condition. Growers who have no packing sheds should either build such or arrange to use their barn floors. The wagons should be equipped with springs, and cover provided for protection from the elements.

Pack According to Law

In preparing the fruit for shipment, it is desirable that both the optional and mandatory laws be observed; first, for the sake of avoiding trouble, and second, for the good effect such observance will have in establishing confidence in the markets among dealers and consumers.

It has been a custom in some States to ship a large portion of the crop in bulk. Such fruit, as a rule, is handled as an "orchard run" without respect to grades. Those who ship in bulk should exercise especial care this year to eliminate such stock as is likely to affect results for really good fruit.

As to Price

What will more largely affect the situation than anything else are opening prices in the primary markets. If the growers and operators hold for arbitrarily high prices, the crop will not pass readily into consumption, and before conditions could be adjusted congestion would undoubtedly occur throughout the channels of trade, with disastrous results to all concerned. Both in the primary and secondary markets the fruit should be offered at prices that will assure early trading and a quick movement, so as to avoid abnormal accumulation at shipping point and in the market. Such accumulation not only causes a depression in values, but, due to delay, over-ripe condition frequently arises and the trade finds itself dealing in partially decayed fruit at ruinous prices.

THE ALLIES DRIVE THE GERMANS BACK IN THE NORTH

DESPERATE FIGHTING IN VICINITY OF LILLE

ALLIES SCORE SUCCESS IN NORTH BELGIANS DRIVE THE GERMANS BACK

Fighting Near Lille on Which Point the Allies Are Advancing is of a Desperate Character---Advancing From House to House Says Official Paris Communication.

FAVOURABLE PROGRESS IS REPORTED

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, October 19.—The allies continue to drive the Germans back in the north. This was emphasized in the official communique telegraphed from Bordeaux at three o'clock this afternoon, and made public at the military headquarters here. In Belgium it is officially stated, the Belgian forces who have been concentrated along a new line inside of the frontier, have driven the German forces before them to Roulers, thirteen miles northeast of Coutrai. The allied left wing is advancing toward Lille and is encountering some severe fighting in the neighborhood of La Bassee, 10 miles north west of Arras, and in the small villages of Ablain, and St. Nazaire, in the vicinity. It is stated that the German opposition that is being encountered is so formidable that the allies are compelled to advance "literally from house to house." There has been incessant fighting for ten days around Arras and a desperate German counter attack has been repelled at Chaulnes.

LONDON, October 19.—That the British forces have again straightened out the line of battle in France by hard fighting, is admitted to-day. That, it is stated, is the real meaning of last night's announcement that the Germans had been driven back thirty miles. The British by a series of heavy engagements, in which the fighting was continuous, have prevented General Von Boeck's army from attacking Dunkirk from the south. The Germans following the arrival of their fresh reserves a week ago, pushed their way steadily westward from Lille to St. Omer. Because of the weight of numbers it was necessary for the British to fall back. When St. Omer was reached however they were reinforced by two French armies and another driving movement was begun which only ended after Armentieres thirty miles to the eastward, had been occupied in force. The allies are now back to their original line, extending almost due north and south from the vicinity of Ostend, south through Armentieres.

LONDON, October 19.—Additional anti-German riots are taking place to-day in various parts of London and suburbs, and have kept the troops and police on edge. The chief centre of the trouble continues to be the Deptford District, where practically every shop operated by Germans or those of German descent, has been wrecked, and one at least burnt. The rioting has been led by the dock workers, many of whom are now out of work. The chief complaint of the rioters is that the police have been inactive in stamping out espionage. Denials by the high government officials have been disregarded and the temper of the mobs is becoming increasingly bitter. It is feared that the riots will spread to other cities.

JAPANESE CRUISER SUNK

TOKIO, Japan, October 18.—The light Japanese "Takachiho," has been sunk by striking a mine while patrolling the coast off the harbour of Kiao-Chau, the German concession on Shan Tung peninsula.

Three hundred and forty-four of her crew were lost with her. Only thirteen survivors were rescued by the warships which went to her rescue. The "Takachiho" was one of the oldest of the Japanese cruisers. She was built in 1885, was armed with eight 6-inch guns, two 6-pounders, and fourteen machine guns. She was remodelled in 1900.

TO-DAY'S MARKETS

LOSS OF 193 IS ADMITTED BY GERMANY

Most of the Officers of Four Destroyers Were Drowned When Their Craft Were Sent to the Bottom

MORE FOR "UNDAUNTED"

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Oct. 19.—It was officially admitted to-day that 193 men, including practically all of the officers, were lost when the British cruiser Undaunted and a flotilla of four British destroyers sunk four German destroyers off the Dutch coast. The destroyers who were sunk, were all built and put into commission in 1910.

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 19.—It is stated here unofficially that the Cruiser Undaunted, which on Saturday sunk four German destroyers, to-day captured a German mine layer near the British coast, and is thought to have sunk a German submarine.

England Expects That Every Man This Day Will Do His Duty!

To-morrow night is the eve of one of the greatest of British victories, the Battle of Trafalgar.

To-morrow night in Peterborough an effort is being made to swell the fund (none too large) which has for its object the care of the wives and children of the brave men who are fighting for their country.

The Peterborough Choral Society have been working hard to put on the oratorio, "Judas Maccabaeus," a work full of inspiring martial music. The principals are giving their services gratis for this occasion. Messrs. Turner & Sons have also given the Opera House free for this night.

Peterborough's representatives in both Dominion and Provincial Houses will be present; also His Worship the Mayor and the City aldermen. There should not be a vacant seat on Tuesday night; so secure yours now. Remember, Peterborough expects that every man will do his duty.

ALLEGED HORSE THIEF TAKEN

Mr Thos. Dann of the Saskatchewan Provincial Police, was in the City to-day, for the purpose of claiming Manuel Hanna, charged with horse stealing. Hanna was arrested by P. C. Servante on Thursday last, following a description sent to the local Chief. It is alleged that the accused stole a team some time ago in Saskatchewan and sold them in Ontario. Officer Dann left this afternoon with his man.

This year's sugar crop of the Philippines promises to be the greatest in the history of the Islands.

30,000 MEN TO BE KEPT IN TRAINING

And Contingents of 10,000 Canadians Will Be Sent to the Front as Often as They Are Needed--Recruiting Will Be Commenced at Once For Second Contingent.

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Oct. 18.—That a force of 30,000 men will be kept continuously in training in Canada, and that contingents of 10,000 each will be despatched to the front at regular intervals is the gist of an announcement made by the Government to-night.

This outlines the whole plan governing the rendering of aid by Canada to the Mother Country in the present crisis, and will not be changed unless the War Office so advises. The first 10,000 men will likely be sent in December, and further instalments of the same number will be despatched at regular intervals until the War Office advises discontinuance. The place of each contingent of 10,000 sent to the front will be taken by another similar body of men enrolled for training, so that there will always be 30,000 men under arms in the Dominion. The text of the official statement is as follows:

"During the past week the Government have continuously had under consideration the organization of a second contingent. The Prime Minister, the Acting Minister of Militia, and the sub-committee of the Privy Council had a lengthy conference on Saturday with Col. Gwatkin, chief of the general staff, and Col. Denison, adjutant-general, respecting the following questions:

"1.—The defence of Canada against any probable raid or attack by land or sea.

"2.—The training, equipment and despatch of expeditionary forces.

No Question of Men.

"There is no question about the officers and men available. Many thousands throughout Canada are eager for an opportunity to go to the front. The response to the call of duty throughout the country has been most inspiring.

"Two considerations have to be taken into account in connection with the despatching of further expeditionary forces; (a) the provision of rifles, guns, ammunition, and other equipment; (b) the ability of the British Government to receive further contingents and give them the necessary final training having regard to the enormous force which is being organized and trained in the British Islands.

"All these and many other matters were discussed at length, and after the conference the following conclusions were announced by the Prime Minister:

"The first concern of the Canadian Government is the defence of our own territory, including our ports and harbours. For this purpose about 8,000 men are now under arms in Canada, and are serving on garrison, or out post duty from the Atlantic to the Pacific. At important points on both coasts the defences have been strengthened and guns have been mounted. Other coast and harbour defences, the nature of which it is not desirable to give to the public, have also been prepared. Expert military advisers of the Government advise that this force could be very rapidly increased from the active militia at a few hours' notice, and they consider that every reasonable safeguard against successful attack has been provided.

Expeditionary Forces.

"To the organization and despatch of further contingents the following conclusions have been reached:

"1. From the present time until the end of the war, or so long as the war shall deem it advisable, Canada will keep continuously in training and under arms (in addition to the eight thousand men above mentioned) 30,000 men.

"2. As soon as arms, guns and equipment can be provided for a force of ten thousand men, that force will be despatched to Great Britain, as the first instalment of a second expeditionary force. Thereupon additional men will be enlisted so as to keep the number under training continuously at 30,000. This process will continue from time to time; that is to say as soon as each force of 10,000 men is armed, equipped and despatched another force of 10,000 will be enlisted to take its place and to bring the number in training up to 30,000.

"3. It is anticipated that the first force of 10,000 men will be despatched in December and thereafter at regular intervals similar forces will be continuously sent forward as rapidly as they can be armed and equipped. [illegible] including the forces on garrison and out post duty we shall thus have [illegible] arms or in training about 40,000 men in Canada and until the end of the war or until the War Office advises that further expeditionary forces are not required, a steady stream of reinforcements will go forward from our shores to the seat of the war.

"5. If the expected communication from the War Office should make any modification in the above arrangement necessary, that modification wil be announced at a later date.

Limited by Possibilities.

"6. The Government is informed by its military advisers that it would be impossible to supply arms, guns, and equipment on a arger scale than laid down in these proposals.

"7. Pending advices from the War Office as to the composition of the second contingent, which has not yet been received, infantry to the number of 16,000 or 20,000 will be immediately enlisted and the organization and training of infantry units will be proceeded with throughout the Dominion from Halifax to Victoria.

"As soon as the expected instructions arrive from the War Office immediate arrangements will be made for enlisting such cavalry, artillery, engineers and administrative units as the War Office may advise.

"9. The organization of these units and the forces contemplated by these proposals will be under the direction of officers commanding divisions and military districts and will be carried out by them."

The Mission At St. John's Church

Mission and Instructional Services at St. John's Anglican Church

Dr. Bidwell is a fluent and forcible teacher and a thorough churchman. He will not adopt any sensational methods, but will present some devotional thoughts on the principles of our Faith. It will be a course of instructions rather than a mission in the ordinary sense. The Bishop is a very earnest man and it is anticipated that his visit will be productive of much spiritual good.

These services will take place on the afternoons of Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, at 4:30 p.m. and on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, at 8 p.m.

On Sunday next there will be services at the usual hours, at which the Bishop will preach. He will also administer the Holy Communion at 8:30 a.m., and after the evening service a reception will be held in his honour in the St. John's School house. Members of any denomination will receive a cordial welcome at any of these services.

The Value of Bible Study

Subject of Address by Mr. H. B. Cowan Yesterday

Sunday afternoon the Boys' Department held their annual Bible study rally, when a large and appreciative audience of boys listened to Mr. H. B. Cowan speak on "The Value of Bible Study." Mr. Cowan's talk to the boys will be one that will be long remembered by them, and the advice and instruction they received from the address will be a great help to them in the making of the all round man, physically, mentally and spiritually. There are Bible study groups for the Collegiate, Intermediate, Business Boys and School Boys, all taught by competent teachers.

This week the boys of the city will have the privilege of seeing the work done by the Association for the boys of the city. The rooms will be open from to 6 in the afternoon and 7:30 to 9 p.m. in the evening to visitors. All boys of the city will be made welcome and shown through the building by the staff.

The membership campaign is in full swing now and the boys are working so as to increase their membership by one hundred by the first of November.

Story of The Feat Of The "Undaunted"

Swift British Cruiser and Her Flotilla Had No Trouble in Rounding Up the Four German Destroyers--Quickly Got the Range and Completely Outclassed the German Marksmen.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., October 19.—Superior speed won for Britain Saturday's naval clash off the Dutch coast, when four German destroyers were sent to the bottom by the cruiser Undaunted and her accompanying flotilla of destroyers.

The first story of the battle was brought here to-day by the crew of the steam trawler United which witnessed the fight. The German destroyers were on patrol when they were located by the outlook of the Undaunted. The Germans put on full steam and frantically attempted to escape. But they were no match for the cruiser or the British destroyers, who had from th[illegible] to five knots advantage in speed. According to the crew of the trawler the British flotilla had no difficulty in rounding up the Germans. The latter were completely outclassed as marksmen. The British craft speedily got the range while nearly every shot fired by the Germans went wide. The whole engagement lasted less than an hour. With the German war craft all at the bottom of the sea, the British rescued the few survivors floating in the water.

WASHINGTON, October 19.—The intention of the administration vigorously to oppose the seizure of the Standard Oil tanker Brindilla at Halifax by the British converted cruiser Caronia, but to leave the question of the Brindilla's alleged contraband cargo to the Admiralty court for decision, was evidenced here to-day.

THE WAR AND THE NEWSPAPERS

Cost of Production is Enormously Increased, Points Out the Montreal Star

The readers of newspapers have only a very faint idea of what the war means to the newspapers. With the war telegrams and incidental expenses the war means fully one thousand dollars a day to a paper like the Montreal Star.

The cost of chemicals entering into the manufacture of printing paper have risen immensely in price because the supply from Germany is completely cut off.

The newspapers of England and Scotland have in many cases reduced their size by one half. Many American newspapers are finding the burden of increased cost too heavy to bear, and are cutting down their staffs.

In Winnipeg the daily papers have increased the subscription price to five dollars a year.—Montreal Star.

JUDGE'S DECISION WAS REVERSED

The case re Mr. Hugh Ferguson and the Canadian Cordage Company came before Mr. Justice Lennox in Toronto yesterday. Mr. S. T. Medd of this city, for the liquidators, appealed from the decision of His Honour Judge Hoyeke. On the 22nd of August the case was heard here and Judge Hoyeke ruled that Mr. Ferguson's name be struck off the list of contributories, as the statute of limitation was six years.

In Toronto yesterday Justice Lennox ruled that the statute of limitations in this case (being a specialty contract) was not six years, but twenty years, and Mr. Ferguson's name will be again placed on the list, and he will no longer be released from liability as a shareholder.

As the point on which the case turns was not taken either before Justice Lennox or before Judge Hoyeke, the liquidator was adjudged costs against the contributory only down to and including the order appealed from. The remainder will come out of the assets of the company.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill acted for the contributory.

Creditors Agree On Distribution

A meeting of the creditors of the insolvent Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Co., Ltd., was held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers on Saturday afternoon. At the meeting a satisfactory arrangement for the distribution of the company's assets were arrived at. Mayor Buller is the assignee.

WELL KNOWN MUSICIANS WILL ASSIST DR. GORDON TO-NIGHT

Dr. J. J. Gordon, the Winnipeg orator, opened his meetings here most auspiciously last night at the George Street Methodist church. His address was eloquent, forceful and inspiring and everything indicates that his meetings will be largely attended, and therefore very successful. To-night he will not only have Mr Greenlaw, the celebrated bass who delighted local congregations here yesterday, but Edgar Heaselberg, the famous Russian pianist will also be present to assist.

FALL WAS A SERIOUS ONE

The many friends of Mrs. L. Sarginson will be sorry to learn that she is seriously ill as a result of a fall in the Union Station, Toronto, a few days ago. Mrs. Sarginson, in descending the stairs at the station slipped on a banana peeling and fell heavily, sustaining a fracture of the collar bone and a bad shaking up. Her condition is still serious.

TO APPOINT POLICEMAN

At five-thirty this afternoon the Police Commission will meet to appoint a policeman to take the place vacated on account of the death of the late P. C. Wm. Patterson.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

MONDAY, OCT. 19, 1914

THE CALL TO DUTY.

The Patriotic Fund is to be regarded as the measure of the patriotism of the people of Peterborough. It is none too large now; but an opportunity is afforded on Tuesday night to do our duty more fully by plentifully patronizing the presentation of the splendidly militant oratorio to be produced by the Peterborough Choral Society, Judas Maccabaeus.

The attitude of the people towards this undertaking should, if necessary, partake of the spirit of sacrifice; sacrifice of a few hours' time, sacrifice of engagements and possibly pleasures of a comparatively minor character. Let us imitate the sacrifices and contributions being made by others to provide an addition to our patriotic fund. The conductor and members of the Choral Society have sacrificed—if they count it a sacrifice—many hours every week for weeks to make themselves proficent.

The Conservatory orchestra have given their time, like the chorus, free of charge.

Messrs. Turner and Sons have given the use of the opera on the same gospel terms.

The soloists — from Toronto — as well as the local soloists, are giving their services free.

Can we not imitate them? Can we not catch the magnificent spirit of duty, aroused anew by the virtual coincidence of the patriotic Oratorio with the anniversary of the great battle of Trafalgar, when British tars responded victoriously to the dying call to duty of the immortal Nelson, "England expects that every man this day will do his duty." Are we of the breed of the eighteenth century sea dogs? Shall we hold back where they triumphed, by failing to do our duty on Tuesday night next?

In patronizing and making a success of the concert we shall in this regard be doing our duty to our conscience, to our city, to our country, to our empire, and to humanity. We shall be doing our share in waging the war in which our 33,000 fellow subjects and neighbours have enlisted, prepared to sacrifice everything even to life in the cause of humanity. We shall be doing a duty to the waiting anxious wives and children thousands of them on the way to widowhood and orphanage by being at the concert.

Let us do our duty to-morrow night—do it individually and not contenting ourselves with saying, "my neighbour will be there, and I shan't be missed." If everybody, or even a considerable minority, takes this view the outcome of the first patriotic concert will be repeated.

Let us do our duty and retrieve the credit of Peterborough.

GREATER FORCES THAN FORCE.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, though out of office, and beyond the span of years allotted to man, is still a great national force, still serving the interests of Canada and the Empire. He has not only the prophetic spirit—the quality of the true statesman—but he has the happy faculty of pithy saying, putting great truth in a few words, that grip and appeal. At the beginning of the present century he made the strikingly prophetic statement:

"The twentieth century belongs to Canada."

We have not only seen this forecast fulfilled in our sight, but its progressive fulfilment unfolding before us. Canada has marvellously developed in the first fifteen years of this century, and if our progress is maintained at a corresponding rate till its end, the shades of present living Canadians, if permitted to return to earth, would not recognize the Canada of the nineteenth century. Another of Sir Wilfrid's prophetic utterances is being fulfilled from day to day. Mr. L. T. Marechal, a prominent Conservative, speaking at the great recruiting meeting for the French Canadian Brigade in Park Sohmer, Montreal, last Thursday night, related in praise of Sir Wilfrid, that at the banquet given the Dominion premiers on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee in 1897, Sir Wilfrid in speaking to the toast of the Dominions said:

"If the hour of danger to the Empire comes, you will see the colonies in all quarters of the world fly to the help of the Mother Country."

The world has never seen a more magnificent fulfilment of a more noble prophetic utterance. From every part of the Empire; from the isles of the sea; from the Southern Cross to the Klondyke, we see the sons of the Empire rallying to the aid of the Empire. Thirty-five thousand Canadians, the vanguard of a greater force, are in arms on the soil of the Mother Land ready to give as they will give, as brilliant service as they have given in South Africa and Northern Africa. Canada's participation in this great struggle for the maintenance of the supremacy of the Empire, and for the cause of humanity, is a living demonstration of the truth of another happy slogan originated by Sir Wilfrid in the Canadian Parliament:

"When Britain is at war Canada it at war."

The bond that unites the dominions and colonies to the central power is a silken bond, but it is more binding than links of steel or of "blood and iron," the tie that tyrants trust to and are vainly trusting to to-day. We see in a way that makes the world wonder, the realization of the splendid truth that when Britain is at war, Canada and all the other broadcast dominions and colonies of the Empire are at war. We see in this evidence of the marvellous loyalty of the British people to the great principle of fair play and even-handed justice, that makes friends of foes, and even lately conquered peoples, active elements in the campaign that sends forth the British Empire, conquering and to conquer—in the name of civilization, human right and human justice. Verily there are greater forces than force.

HEARING FROM OUR BOYS.

The announcement that the War Office, with the assistance of Hon. Mr. Perley, is to establish a Canadian record office from which information relating to the Canadian soldiers at the front will be sent to to relatives in Canada, will be gladly received here. This office should greatly relieve the strain and anxiety that must of necessity be experienced by the friends and relatives left at home.—Ottawa Free Press.

TRADE RECOVERING.

The world's foreign trade is rapidly recovering from the first shock of war. Our own imports and exports are showing qualifying gains over August and September. In imports the increase was $9,436,000, and in exports $45,831,000 over last month, the excess of exports in September being $16,900,000, against an excess of $19,400,000 in imports during August. The large orders received by American concerns for military supplies will serve to materially swell shipments abroad. In August and September our cotton shipments fell off about 1,000,000 bales. This loss will be partly made good when the sterling exchange situation is resolved and arrangements are made for financing the crop. The world is still suffering more from financial dislocation than from the war itself, and the rapid improvement made in London finances is greatly aiding progress here. The Lancashire cotton trade must also begin to resume ere long. The world outside of the war will still want vast quantities of cotton goods, and the present paralysis cannot continue indefinitely. British exports in August fell to £24,000,000, against £44,000,000 a year ago, while imports dropped in the same period from £58,000,000 to £42,000,000. In September, however, there was an increase of nearly £3,000,000 in imports and £2,500,000 in exports compared with the preceding month. German foreign trade has, however, suffered severely owing to the practical elimination of her merchant marine. Russia and Austria have also lost much of their foreign trade. Ultimately the war will greatly stimulate American foreign commerce.—Weekly Bulletin, Henry Clews & Co., New York.

HOW CANADIANS LEARNED THE ART OF SHOOTING STRAIGHT

Valcartier is undoubtedly a marvellous place for a large military encampment. With a splendid level plain of large extent, for drill and exercises, with a beautiful river for bathing, with natural scenery unsurpassed in Canada, with plenty of hill, dale and broken ground for manoeuvre, it possesses qualities unsurpassed and unsurpassable, to which must be added a light soil which quickly absorbs a rainfall. Eden itself had at least one drawback, and the dusk at Valcartier is somewhat trying, but, after all, this is a small demerit in comparison with its many advantages.

What nature so lavishly granted, the hand of man has already greatly improved. Railway sidings, electric lights, a water system, sidewalks, roads, all these have been added, but the great marvel of all is the rifle range.

Just fancy a range three and a half miles long, equipped with fourteen hundred and twenty-seven targets, all of them of the simple wind-mill type, with a splendid dry, safe trench for the markers and a thousand yards of distance available at some points.

We think we are correct in saying that this is the largest and best range in the world. Thousands of men have used it in a single day, without confusion, without accident, and to the satisfaction of all.

Lord Kitchener is reported to have said of his new levies, "Never mind whether they know the right foot from the left, but teach them to shoot straight." Colonel Hughes, whether he agrees with the first injunction or not, has certainly adopted the latter, and the Expeditionary Force has had a wonderful opportunity for rifle practice, considering its large number, and the shortness of the time to be utilized. Up to September 20th, more than two million rounds had been fired, a good proof of the activity displayed. Of all the good work done in connection with Valcartier, and its sum total is enormous, nothing ranks higher than the performance in musketry.

Even given so wonderful a range, this marvel in rifle practice could not have been accomplished without excellent work on the part of those officers in charge, and it is only fair to acknowledge that the work of Lt.-Col. Helmer, Director of Musketry, ably assisted as he has been by Major Hutcher and others, is worthy of the very highest praise. Colonel Helmer is one of the quite type of soldier dear to the heart of organizers like Kitchener, the man who says little, but, without fuss and feathers, DOES THINGS.

The writer recently visited Camp Valcartier, and conversations with many officers and men all bore testimony to the very general satisfaction felt for the work of the musketry staff.—Canadian Military Gazette.

"THE DAY"

By Henry Chappell.

(The author of this magnificent poem is Mr. Henry Chappell, a railway porter at Bath. Mr. Chappell is known to his comrades at the "Bath Railway Poet." A poem such as this lifts him to the rank of a national poet.)

You boasted the Day, and you toasted the Day,
And now the Day has come.
Blasphemer, braggart and coward all,
Little you reck of the numbing ball,
The blasting shell, or the "white arm's" fall,
As they speed poor humans home.

You sped for the Day, you lied for the Day,
And woke the Day's red spleen.
Monster, who asked God's aid Divine,
Then strewed His seas with the ghastly mine;
Not all the waters of all the Rhine
Can wash thy foul hands clean.

You dreamed for the Day, you schemed for the Day;
Watch how the Day will go.
Slayer of age and youth and prime
(Defenceless slain for never a crime)
Thou art steeped in blood as a hog in slime,
False friend and cowardly foe.

You have sown for the Day, you have grown for the Day;
Yours is the Harvest red.
Can you hear the groans and the awful cries?
Can you see the heap of slain that lies,
And sightless turned to the flame-split skies
The glassy eyes of the dead?

You have wronged for the Day, you have longed for the Day
That lit the awful flame.
'Tis nothing to you that hill and plain
Yield sheaves of dead men mid the grain;
That widows mourn for their loved ones slain,
And mothers curse thy name.

But after the Day there's a price to pay
For the sleepers under the sod,
And He you have mocked for many a day—
Listen, and hear what He has to say:
"Vengeance is mine, I will repay."
Watch how the Day will go.

The Reasons Why Great Britain Can Hold the Trade of the World

The New York Commercial, in a recent issue, discussed the question how the United States might secure a fair share of the foreign trade of which Great Britain has long had a virtual monopoly, and discussed it in a tone somewhat invidious. Evidently some intelligent Americans, though they know their own nation is to blame for its present commercial position, begrudge the commercial and financial prosperity of another nation that owes its good fortune to the adoption and maintenance of a common-sense system. The new shipping law and the new currency law passed by Congress may help to improve the nation's position, but, after all, they are not a substitute for the freedom of trade which is Great Britain's most potent instrument for the development and security of her financial pre-eminence among the nations of the earth.

By a curious perversion of reasoning American publicists and politicians seem to think Britain does half the carrying trade of the world simply because she has the ships with which to do it; the truth is that she has the ships because she gets the carrying trade, and she gets the carrying trade because she has removed all obstruction out of the way in the shape of customs duties. In the last anaysis this is the correct sequence of cause and effect, and until the American people throw away their customs-tariff impediment Great Britain will enjoy her commercial and financial pre-eminence, no matter what collectivisit experiments the United States may try in the hope of being able to secure a larger share of international trade.

There have always been British publicists who have expressed a desire to see the American markets thrown open to British manufacturers. This is not merely a futile but a senseless aspiration. Great Britain's commercial and financial pre-eminence will be challenged with some hope of success for the first time when the customs tariff of the United States is made to conform in its essential features to that of the United Kingdom, when protectionism is frankly discarded by the national Legislature, and when the whole body of the people leave themselves exposed to the unimpeded and undirected operation of the law of supply and demand as completely and unflinchingly as they now submit to the law of gravitation.

The present war shows conclusively that free trade, operative in absolute fullness of effect for three-quarters of a century has not developed a nation of weaklings. If one asks why at the present moment the whole civilized world turns instinctively to Great Britain for leadership in the promotion of human progress, the answer is to be found in her policy of "free trade" and all that is related to and implicated in that expression. To free trade she owes her colonies, her commerce, her export trade her profitable carrying business, and her influential financial position. Her most formidable rival never was Germany; it always was the United States, but from the latter she has nothing to fear in competition so long as Americans are so unwise as to hamper and hinder their political and economic evolution by a system of bondage of their own devising and imposition.

A STATEMENT FROM MR. SPRING

To the Editor of The Examiner.—

Dear Sir—I am again seeking for a small space in your paper which I hope you will kindly grant.

Having lost one of my sons by death last December, namely Hubert H. Spring, for whom we felt the loss very much, but the memory of our late bereavement is at present aroused in a most unusual manner by false rumours, having their starting point at the C.G.E. works, some time ago by a supposed-to-be friend, which run as follows: That I George W. Spring was not financially able to give my late son a proper burial, and the above mentioned friend claims to have borne the expense of the same.

I desire for the public to know that the above is false, at which I hereby protest against any such statements, as I myself was fully able and capable of not only giving my late son a proper burial, but of keeping him had he lived, and also my house was well supplied with everything necessary to entertain friends from a distance; there was no need of them being entertained elsewhere. My sons who are grown up came forward to bear the expenses of their brother's funeral (not of necessity but to make us feel their sympathy), and I wish to assure any who may be interested enough to read, that I have always been able by the help of a good and Heavenly Father to support and raise to manhood my four sons, without the aid of any relative whatever. We are a people who think some of our future life to come. There are other falsehoods which have come from the same quarters concerning other members of my family which I consider an insult to myself, but I have confidence that such cannot be believed. If this were the first offence of the supposed friends, we would take it more calmly, but it is an often repeated crime against which my long suffering cannot last.

Thanking you for past favours, I remain, yours sincerely

Signed on behalf of my family

GEORGE W. SPRING.

PHILOSOPHIC DOUBT.

To the Editor of the Manitoba Free Press.

Sir,—One of the leading city ministers preached a sermon recently on the subject "Nietzsche or Christ." He showed quite forcibly how wide is the cleavage between the Nazarene and the German expounder of the Superman. He contended that the cult of Nietzsche among German officers and professors did much to bring on the present war. It would be interesting to consider how much harm was done by Carlyle in the same direction by his doctrine of hero-worship.

I observe that many preachers are very inaccurate in the use of great words such as "rationalism," "salvation," "atonement," etc. They should read John Morley's work on "Compromise." Words seem to be so used that they may be interpreted in one way by radicals and in another way by the orthodox.

The word "rationalist" seems by many to be confused with the word "atheist." Surely every thoughtful man is a rationalist. It was rationalism that stopped the killing of supposed witches, once so common in England and Scotland. A rationalist may be a man of strong religious and moral convictions. In the same way, the man who rejects the older view of the supernatural is branded as a materialist.

This is decidedly unscholarly and unjust. We need clearer thinking and greater courage in the pulpit. It is a striking fact that new ideas in religion come to the masses chiefly through novels and not through sermons. Surely it would be wiser to have this task performed by specially trained men than by laymen.

Again, as I glanced through the Sunday announcements in your Saturday paper it struck me that the preachers are following the people rather than leading them. Progress in science and philosophy was possible because groups of classes of men gave great effort to limited divisions of reality. The princes of the pulpit followed the same method and created a believing body of hearers.

Limitation is the only law of thoroughness. Is there such a thing as religion or is there not? Morality is not religion much less sociology or politics. Let not the Church compete with clubs and societies on their own ground. Plain men will conclude that religion is a delusion and will go to secular societies for politics and sociology, leaving the Church stranded. Those who are dealing with secular aspects of the war may also take note.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

COLLEGIATE TEAMS BROKE EVEN SATURDAY

Seniors Beat Lindsay 23 to 12 While Juniors Were Badly Defeated by T. C. S. Seconds--Double Header at Nichols' Oval on Saturday.

The Peterborough Collegiate Rugby teams broke even in their games at Nichols Oval on Saturday, the first team beating Lindsay Collegiate by 23 to 12, while the seconds were swamped by Trinity College School Seconds by 50 to 2. The junior teams played first. The Collegiate youngsters were scheduled to meet the third team of Trinity College School, but the Port Hope visitors proved to be the second team and they were too big and heavy for the locals, bucking them all over the field and tearing holes in the line or dashing around the end at will. They had the score 40 to 1 at the end of the first half, but the home kids did better in the second period, at least they succeeded in holding the score down.

Following were the line-ups:

T. C. S.—Flying wing, McLoughlin; halves, Bruce, Johnston, Read; quarter, Sutherland; scrimmage, Copeland, Clark, Smith, inside wings, Haultain, Kelk; middle wings, Chappel, Rice; outside wings, Harstone, Campbell.

Collegiate II.—Flying wing, Soward; halves, Skuce, Frost, O'Brien; quarter, O'Connell; scrimmage, Byers, Lyle, Williamson; inside wngs, Cunningham, Austin; middle wings, McClellan, Common, outside wings, Lafferty, Simpson.

The senior game was a more even battle and produced some good Rugby. Both Lindsay and the local Collegiate have lost a number of good men since last year, and are hardly up to last year's strength, but there is plenty of fine material on both sides. The local collegiate won because they kicked better and had more speed than the visitors. The latter were better in line plunging, but they made the mistake during the first half of continually trying extended passes and end runs which the Collegiate smothered effectively. In the last two periods they switched the line bucking, and were enabled to hold the local Collegiate in check in much better style. In the first quarter, Lindsay were the first to score. A fumbled pass at Peterborough's 40-yard line gave a Lindsay wing man the ball and he romped over for a touchdown unopposed. A rouge gave them another point, while Collegiate evened up shortly after with a songe and then a touch-down.

Peterborough won the game in the second quarter when they adopted a kicking game. Long's punting was better than any of the Lindsay kicking, and as the visitors handled the long punts very badly, the homesters kept them on the defensive and two trys and a rouge were quickly added, bringing the score up to 17-6 before half time.

In the second half Lindsay's bucking tactics kept the play more even, each team scoring six points.

Long's kicking and running helped the local Collegiate a lot. Knapman did fine work at quarter and McNeilly and Eastwood were prominent on the line. Carewe, Tolmie and Wilford starred for Lindsay.

Following were the line-ups:

Lindsay—Flying wing, Gregory; halves, Carewe, O'Loughlin, Kerr; quarter, Tolmie; scrimmage, Crossen, Conley, McCrimmon; inside wings, Maunder, Burgess; middle wings, Bigelow, McDougall; outside wings, Flavelle, Wilford.

Peterborough—Flying wing, Eastwood; halves, Jobbitt, Smythe, Long; quarter, Knapman; scrimmage, Crawford, Tully, Stevenson; inside wings, Canniff, Kirn; middle wings, Austin, Huycke; outside wings, McNeilly, Carmichael.

Athletics Due For Shake-up Stars Cannot "Come Back"

Oldring Knows Axe is Falling---Baker Talks of Retiring and Plank and Bender May Go Too

Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics are due for a shaking up, is the belief of the leading baseball critics. Paul H. Shannon of the Boston Post, points out the Mackmen's weak points, although he is not the first to predict a big change in the line-up next year. The following from the Boston Post is Shannon's criticism:

"It can be set down indisputably that changes in Connie Mack's team are coming. The line up of 1915 will most likely miss the burly form of big Rube Oldring, of the veteran Eddie Plank and some few of their team mates. Mack must begin and rebuild or share the misfortune of Frank Chance, who allowed a great team to die suddenly upon his hands.

Oldring himself knows that the axe is coming; in fact, he told the Boston rooters that same thing Tuesday afternoon. While the Braves were pounding Shawkey in that fatal fifth and the crowd were chaffing the Philadelphia left outfielder Oldring took occasion between safe hits to tell his tormenters that he was nearly done.

"This is my last world's series and my last ball game," said the Rube. "You'll never see me in a uniform again. I'm done with baseball, and I'm glad of it. We are up against a great team, and we realize it. We were not looking for this opposition, and it's proved to much for us."

Very likely the Rube himself, who had been a terrible disappointment in the series, and whose failure to come through with his usual long hits had been one of the weaknesses of the Philadelphia attack, had felt the unspoken criticism of his mates.

At any rate, the Rube has delivered an alleged ultimatum, and in the presence of hundreds of auditors. It may be that Connie Mack has given some hint as to his future plans, and that in consequence Oldring intends to anticipate any summary action.

May Can Pitchers.

Very likely, too, neither Plank nor Bender, chief reliances of Mack's pitching brigade in the past, the stars of three world's series, and active figures in two others, will be in next year's Philadelphia line-up.

Coombs cannot come back. He has been of no use to the Philadelphia team for two years and Mack has been carrying him ever since his injury in 1911, purely as a matter of sentiment. That reason can exist no longer in the demand for young blood and for players who can be of constant service to the team.

With regard to Plank and Bender it seems likely that Mack feels that with these veterans absent from his line-up he can devote more attention to younger and perhaps equally efficient pitchers. In Bressler, Shawkey Wyckoff, Rush and a few other recruits he has the nucleus of a fine pitching stable that will show to advantage in time to come.

Both Have Slumped.

Neither Plank nor Bender are anywhere as good as they were. Bender is by no means an oldtimer, yet he cannot come back as a winning pitcher should. The ability of Rudolps, James and Tyler to work alternately during the greater part of the season and then should the burden of a world series unaided has opened the eyes of big league managers and pointed out the folly in future of carrying a top heavy pitching staff.

Two years ago the Boston Red Sox won a pennant and a world's championship with five pitchers, four, to be exact. In other seasons the Giants have trailed along with wour or at the most, five pitchers working. What three men have done for the Braves four or five others ought to try to do and perhaps in 1915 we will no longer see from seven to 10 pitchers connected with each big league club.

Last Saturday night Eddie Plank could not raise his arm after the game was over. It was given out then that it would take him at least a week to come back and his re-appearance in the series was really out of the question. Had Bender been in anything like dependable form, Mack would have sent him in against the Braves on Monday or Tuesday. That he did not is evidence of his ability to go through with the task again.

The Weak Spots.

In the outfield and behind the bat and on the pitching staff, too, the Mackmen must be strengthened. "Home Run" Baker has also come forward with the prediction that he will not play next year and that he intends to retire to his farm. Baker may feel that he has begun to decline. If so, it may hurry his retirement.

Hugh Fullerton, who picked the Athletics to win four straight, Bill Peet of Washington, who made a similar prophecy, and Batchellor of Detroit, who figured that the Braves would never get the Mackmen out, are all agreed that the Athletics are beginning to go back. The coming winter will tell the story more clearly. The efforts Mack may make to sign up some of his string will show just how Connie feels about the matter.

Take a Lesson From The Braves When Obstacles Confront You

BOSTON, Oct. 17—Many here remembered Connie Mack's answer to an interview before the series started. Cornius was asked what he thought of the outcome. He replied:

"All I have got to say is that I hope to win in four straight, but if we one it I hope we lose it four straight, so the croakers don't get a chance to knock."

When Mack made that remark he undoubtedly was sincere about hoping for four straight Athletic wins, but he did not dream that the Athletics could be whipped in four straight games. Such a happening was classed among the things which can't be done.

The series was a wonderful object lesson to persons in every walk of life who figure they "haven't got a chance." Most everyone, except the team itself expected the Braves would look like boobs in the series. But they had confidence in themselves, and threw the biggest surprise of all the sporting upsets of this freak year of 1914.

As for the Athletics, they again proved that old axiom that if you carry the same old pitcher to the well day after day, year after year, you are bound to smash it sooner or later.

SOCCER RESULTS IN OLD COUNTRY

Some Surprises Recorded in Saturday's Figures

What a change has come over the soccer game in the Old Country this season, not only north of the Tweed, but also in the "Sassenach" country. Good old Hearts are having a bit of that luck which has so long been denied them, and the presence of the Tynecastle warriors at the head of the Scottish League table will be generally welcomed, especially in the west, if only for the doggedness which they displayed in times of adversity. But at their heels are Ayr United, who are playing a great game, and on Saturday sent the mighty Rangers home with another defeat to chalk up. Celtic are still well at the running, being level on points with Ayr, but it took the Parkhead team all it could do to beat Falkirk by a solitary goal.

On the English side Manchester City show the way in the premier league, with Sheffield Wednesday next and Oldham Athletic only a point behind. The country Palatinate wanted a lot of stirring up, and now with two clubs showing up so well doubtless the necessary tonic has been administered.

Scenes of Desolation

Soissons Lacks Food and Water —Champagne is Scarce

CHATEAU THIERRY, France, Oct. 17, (by mail to New York)—From Paris eastward to the frontier and northward to the meadows of Holland there is nothing but ruin.

In the hotel where I write this there is no gas and no electricity. I am writing by the flicker of a candle, for even candles are scarce. When I started out from Paris, an attache of the Ameican embassy said as a word of warning: "Take plenty of food with you; you probably won't be able to buy any for love or money where you are going. And take as much water as you will need. If you don't you will come back here with enough typhoid germs in your system to fill a dozen hospitals.

He wasn't exaggerating. Later, my food running short, I was forced to travel 35 miles southward, nearer the edge of the world's biggest battlefield to get something to eat. That is why I am here at Chateau Thierry, the point at which the British crossed the Marne when the Germans turned tail and ran from Paris.

Soissons Wanted no Strangers.

On the tottering walls of Soissons were such notices as this: "Food is lacking in Soissons and other necessities are equally hard to procure. Strangers and all persons not inhabitants of this city, are ordered to leave by noon to-day."

I had lunch in Soissons at what in peace times would have been a cosy little hotel. Now it was almost in ruins, German shells having battered down the bigger part of it. I turned the tap in the washroom to wash my face and hands. No water came. I went into the yard and tried the faucet of the hydrant there, the result was the same.

"There is no water in Soissons," the wife of the hotelkeeper said. "The bridge is blown up and the city water pipes crossed the bridge."

"Where do you get your water, then?" I asked. "From the Aisne?"

"For washing purposes, yes," she replied. "Our drinking water we must bring from a spring about a mile away. We would not dare drink the Aisne water; there are too many dead men and horses about."

I washed with water from the Aisne—just a little was given me, for the Germans were on the hill tops overlooking the river and sent shells down whenever they saw people approaching the stream.

Dynamited Bridges Everywhere.

Everywhere there are dynamited or shelled bridges; burned or shelled houses; trampled farms, deserted villages. From Soisons to CheateauThierry I tried to get something to eat. There was nothing to spare. What food there was was reserved for the inhabitants; for strangers there was nothing.

At one village only a wine shop was open. The keeper was a woman. There was nothing to eat in the shop, though the shopkeeper said I might have some coffee if I could drink it without sugar. When I asked if there was any brandy, the bar-woman laughed.

"The greatest armies in the world" she said, "have four times passed this village, The French retreating; the Germans advancing; the Germans retreating and the French chasing them. I've one bottle of Jamaica rum left which I hid. I take that in my coffee."

If the stories told me in the neighbourhood of Rheims, Epernay, Ay, and elsewhere, are half true, North America is going to find champagne hard to get pretty soon. They say the Germans took a special liking to champagne. Many cellars were emptied. Private stocks suffered with the rest. I saw green bottles everywhere. I saw them in the ditches by the roadside, in the fields, floating in the Marne, in the Grand Morin, and the Aisne.

Fresh bread is impossible to get, save in the larger towns. Each mile northward from Chateau-Thierry a stranger finds it harder and harder to get what he needs in the way of food.

French Eat "Bran Balls."

For two days just out of Rheims I ate with the soldiers and slept with them. Their food is plentiful and wholesome. The French solider's bread is delivered to him in a hard, round loaf, weighing about two pounds. This he calls his "boule de son—(bran ball). Twice a day he gets a hot meal, about 11.30 in the morning and around 6 o'clock at night. This meal is usually a stew composed of meat and beans, or a ragout done in huge boilers set on stones in the open. He sometimes is given hard tack, but not often, this being used only in emergencies. Nor is he used to preserved meat (singe, or monkey meat, he calls it) as huge abattoirs are almost always located just back of the fighting, where fresh beef is made ready for the army.

People living in this shattered fairy land are having a hard time. They are reduced to primitive modes of living; what food they have is of the simplest; oil and often candles cannot be had; milk is lacking for the children. It seems impossible that all over northern France, where everything is so pretty and fertile and green, that children go hungry, and no doubt, die, because men choose to fight and kill each other.

Stoney Lake Breezes

STONEY LAKE, Oct. 19. — The many Stoney Lake friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McKinney, of Pittsburg, will be pleased to learn that they have purchased property near Kawartha Park, and will thus become permanent residents of Stoney Lake. For fully twenty-five years Mr. and Mrs. McKinney have been holidaying in the Kawartha Lakes. For many years they were guests of Miss Bertha Brown, who conducted "Woodside" resort at Kawartha Park. Last season, in company with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McKinney, of Orange, N.J., they enjoyed the hospitality of the Victoria House, McCracken's Landing.

This fall they secured an ideal site from Mr. John Crane, situated opposite Mr. Crane's cottake and between the properties of Mr. H. W. Stock, and Mr. James Stubbs.

Mr. Fred Norish, of Lakefield, is at present erecting their ice-house. In the winter he will get out timber from the lot, which contains seven acres, for the cottage to be built in the spring. It will resemble the slab covered structure recently built by Dr. Barnes, Jr., on the Dummer shore.

The cottage will be of ordinary rough lumber, with slabs covering the exterior. A large broad porch will be the chief feature of the bungalow; the columns will be huge logs with branches enough left to serve as supports to the roof. The living room will be the full width of the house, and will have a large fireplace facing the porch. Rustic furniture will predominate, giving to the whole the true tone of a mountain home.

Mr. Stephens spent a few days recently in and around Stoney Lake, in his palatial cruising yacht, the "Darontal." The Randolph McDonald Co., of which he is chief engineer, were transferring their dredges from Hastings to Severn River, where they have a large contract for the completion of the Trent Valley Canal. The water is so low that the dredges were put through the Young's Point Locks with difficulty.

Mr. J. E. Shortt, of the "Toronto Globe," and his sons, Charles and Albert, spent a week on the lakes, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Stubbs.

Dr. Bell has secured the little island opposite Mr. Wesley Sherin's cottage, and will erect a boathouse and cottage next summer.

Mr. John Hunter has had a fireplace put in his cottage on the Dummer shore, near McCracken's.

Mr. Ira Lennox went down to Lakefield last week.

Mr. Alan Hunter has located in Lakefield for the winter, while his brother, Richard, has gone to Lindsay.

The "Empress" and "Islinda" are both tied up for the winter. The "Stoney Lake" is still making a few trips carrying freight, chiefly lumber to cottages where work is in progress.

Captain Robinson, of the "Empress," Mr. Brooks, of South Beach, and Mr. Thompson, of Mt. Julian, have gone to "Koshy" for a hunting trip.

The "Mollie" is scouring the lakes in search of dead heads.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. McBain spent a day at their cottage, "Bona Vista," last week.

Mr. J. W. Bennett, who has been spending the past month at "Bon Repos," returned to Peterborough on Saturday.

Dr. Zimmerman of Toronto spent a couple of days at his cottage, "Sum-R-Inn," during the Thanksgiving holidays.

Messrs. Stock and Hooper have purchased the point of land and island adjoining the Clear Lake light house, on which they will build next season.

Mr. Rathbone is having a cement pier constructed on his point in Mill Bay.

Mr. John Hunter has purchased from Mr. Bradburn his little Detroit "run-about" launch.

Mr. K. G. Lech proposes making an addition to the verandah of his cottage next spring.

Mr. T. F. Jones of Toronto, will make extensive improvements to his cottage on "Eagle Mount."

The road along the 15th concession line leading into Kawartha Park, is now in first class condition, thanks to the enterprise of the township council.

Vanvede's wharf and launch house have been placed in the deep bay to the east in winter quarters.

"Terah," the trim little launch that so proudly bore her owner, Mr. Oxley, over the bosom of Stoney Lake for so many years, has now a new owner, Mr. Blackmore, of Toronto. She is peacefully resting up on Mr. Blackmore's verandah, Kawartha aPrk.

The tugs Ajax, Beaver and Handy Boy are busy towing wood and lumber.

Mr. William Batten of Hall's Glen, is a shining light, no matter at what angle you look at him. As representative of the Massey-Harris Co., his name is a household world. In fact he is greeted on every hand, not by his own name, but by "Massey."

His sales are so large that every spring he holds a special function in Lakefield when delivery of machinery is made to the hosts of purchasers. This occasion is known as "Massey's Fair."

Along in the summer there is another well known day that claims his individual attention and not again till fall does he take his nose from the grindstone, when he becomes master of ceremonies at a monster excursion to Bobcaygeon, on the day of Bobcaygeon Fair. This jaunt is known as "Batten's excursion."

This year it took place on the third of October and a large crowd took advantage of the ideal weather.

Not a breath of air disturbed the waters, and some lovers (of nature) who were on board, declare the shadow pictures along the route could not be surpassed.

For the past month or two men have been in Lake Katchewanooka taking out "dead heads" and sunken logs and skidding them up on shore to dry. Mr. Christie of Lakefield, has purchased them from the Peterborough Lumber Co. and will have them sawn into lumber at Lakefield.

For handling freight cars at Cleveland a large railroad has installed electric locomotives which run on separate tracks and push the cars with side arms.

CHURCH FEDERATION DISCUSSED

A large assembly of people gathered at "Woodmen Hall" last night to hear Elder Johnston on the subject of "Church Federation." Looking at it from the prophetic standpoint he showed how that some time in the near future that such an organization would be effected. But the most alarming feature of such a system as this would be the supreme effort to control all in matters of religion and that only such religion as it saw fit to advocate would be the religion of the land irrespective of the fact that there may be others who would entertain other views and refuse to enter into such an agreement. It will be readily seen so the Elder declared, that when such a system is brought into operation, together with its power in controlling the law of the land, that the few honest Christians who may differ from the system would hereafter be the objects of hatred and persecution. The Elder quoted others outside his denomination who entertain views very similar to this. For instance, Bishop Fowler, who said that "if this federation should grow into a centralized power, under which the denominations lose their distinctive identity and nature perfect freedom, then we shall see despotism, cruelty and persecution by Protestants."

He referred to the efforts of the Lord's Day Alliance, who have been endeavouring for some time to secure the enforcement of religion by law. This is wholly foreign to the principles of Christ. Their method was to convince and persuade and get people of their own voluntary choice to be religious; for only willing service is acceptable to God. But the L. D. Alliance is endeavouring to compel, instead of persuading, and when such laws are enforced it will mean persecution by the L. D. Alliance should any hold views that are contrary to them. If the people of Canada are anxious not to revive the iniquitous, the best thing to do is to discourage the L. D. Alliance operations and worship God willingly without being forced; for force does not convert, but simply makes hypocrites. Christ wants no help from Caesar (or civil governments) and when ministers of Christ go to any earthly government to get religious laws enforced upon the people it surely seems as if they are depending on an arm of flesh. Christ never told us to tarry in halls of legislation until they became endued with power from the state, but rather, "Tarry in the city in prayer and supplications to God until they get power dromi on high." Thus when anyone goes to parliament to ask assistance of them it proves very clearly a lack of God's power.

GENERAL VON KLUK SAVED WHOLE LINE SAYS U. S. CRITIC

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—The Herald's military critic to-day says:

As the veil is gradually removed from the almost bewildering succession of manoeuvres concomitant with the operations of the extreme right of the German army in France and Belgium, it becomes more and more apparent that General Von Kluk was not forced to retreat when almost within striking distance of Paris for the reason that his forces were in danger of being enveloped.

While it is true that when the German commander's sudden movement in a south-easterly direction was observed by the reconnoitring aviators of the Franco-British forces, the commander-in-chief of the allies immediately threw out a strong flanking force with the object of taking the enemy in his flank and rear and dislodging his from his line of retreat, the real reason for General Von Kluk's manoeuvre was not then apparent to the allies General Staff. The flanking movement, however, was in part successful.

Off to a Good Start.

Just why did the splendidly mobile force of cavalry and light artillery of the Franco-British column fail to deliver a decisive and crushing blow upon the retreating German wing? In the first place, the Germans obtained a good start, having commenced their movements away from their extreme westerly position before the flankers rode out to cut them off. More important than all, in the light of events of the last few days, the greatest of all reasons, why the indomitable German commander should turn away from Paris when he believed the French capital was within his grasp, looms large.

Had to Save Rest of Line.

It was not any sudden manifestation of weakness in his own position that wheeled him to the left. It was weakness in the remainder of the German battle line, and it was General Von Kluk, with his general utility force, that was called upon to save the situation. It now appears that he not only accomplished this at tremendous cost to his own force, but was enabled, after he had reinforced the weak spots in the line and inspired a general feeling of confidence while the entire army dug itself into the entrenchments and threw up parapets, to assume a vigorous counter-offensive to the insidious movement to outflank the line.

Behind all of this is the fact that the French army, once it was able to get its bearings, drove into the all-confident advancing German line and stopped it completely. Even as Von Kluk battered the allies' left flank backward, so would the French have hurled back the German centre and left. They would have done this save for the timely arrival of the ubiquitous Von Kluk with the necessary reinforcements.

Got Enemy's Measure.

It was a disatrous manoeuvre on the part of the Germans in so far as maintaining a complete defensive was concerned. The outstanding effect on the entire movement was to give to the allies the complete measurements of the German strength, which hitherto had been an uncertain quantity. Ever since that time all attempts of the Germans to force any part of the Franco-British line to retreat has met with decisive repulses.

Now from the eastern flank of the battlefront comes information in fragments that the French are exercising determined pressure. This in spite of the fact that the German force, which has been endeavouring to penetrate a barrier line of the French forts, is undoubtedly made up of some of the finest troops in the Kaiser's immense army, for it is unbelievable that the Crown Prince would be placed in command of other than the flower of German militarism.

Attacks in East.

It has been reasonably established that the army of General Von Kluk although heavily reinforced by the troops relased after the reduction of the Antwerp forts, has been effectually held. From western Belgium along the entire battle line there have been reported a succession of successes of more or less importance on the part of the allied arms.

Now there appears to be developing in the rolling, rugged country between the Meuse and the Moselle valleys a vigorous offensive by the French troops. A few weeks ago the Crown Prince delivered attack after attack upon the French line and succeeded in driving a wedge into the allies front, the apex of that wedge crossing the Meuse in the vicinity of St. Mihiel. The French, however, forced the Germans back across the river and now appear to be exerting a steady pressure, compelling a general retirement of the Germans to the northward.

Can't Bombard Verdun.

South of the road from Metz to Verdun the French troops have moved forward and the invaders at this point are being driven gradually back into German territory. Even were the Germans to bring up their siege train with the object of assailing the fortress of Verdun now they are not in a position to begin an effective bombardment. Undoubtedly the heaviest howitzers that Germany possesses have been tried against the forts with apparently negligible effect.

At the commencement of hostilities in the western theatre of operations the French advanced into Lorraine, but were compelled to abandon their objective. That the invasion was premature became obvious later, but with the possibility of further flanking movements cut off on the extreme left of the line on the north a sudden aggressive drive by the French against the German left is now not only possible but extremely likely.

CANADIANS WIN TITLE OF "THE COMPLETE ARMY"

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Bulford Camps, Salisbury Plain, Saturday. — The happy, healthy army from the Dominion, who are beginning to get settled on the new canvas city on this historic training ground, were up with the lark this morning and again hard at working making things ship-shape. They needed no lesson from the English "Tommies," who looked on in admiration. On the contrary there were many things done that British officers admired. No leave has been granted and few people were admitted to the West the North, and the South Down camps, which are the official names of the encampment, and as a result there were many friends and relatives of men who were disappointed.

Relaxing a Little.

But the military authorities relaxed a little for the first time and allowed several correspondents to visit the various units. What has set the British soldiers, officers, and men wondering is the splendid comradeship that make the relations between those in command and the rank and file. "They call each other Bill and Jack, and officers and privates when off duty walk about arm in arm," declares "Tommy Atkins," with surprise, but he recognizes that on duty there is quite as strict discipline as in the British army.

Alderson Meets Hughes.

General Alderson had not arrived early this morning. He with Colonel Sam Hughes was watching the completion of disembarkation. All the artillery and horses and tons of stores are already in place.

Canadian staff officers dashing about in motors, which still bear Quebec number plates, handle the various battalions as they entrain. Despite the long trip on the steamer and train, the infantry regiments marched in heavy kit to their various quarters.

Carried Their Own Fuel.

The commissariat, even coal and wood, has been provided by the Canadians themselves. One British staff officer who was watching the operations with a friendly eye remarked on the perfection of everything, and at the British camps Canadians have already won the title of "The Complete Army." The Army Medical Corps were in their places and early yesterday afternoon they were attending to minor cases bound to happen during the making of camp. As yet there are no Canadian nurses here. They have been invited to be guests of St. Thomas Hospital in London for a week or so until the camp is completed.

King to Inspect the Corps.

On good authority I hear that about Thursday niyht the King will inspect his army from overseas, and possibly that Earl Roberts, as honorary commander, will unofficially look over the camp on Monday.

London military correspondents have nothing but praise for our army and the enthusiasm of everybody, whether from far off Vancouver or from Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, has particularly struck them.

BIBLE CLASSES' SOCIAL EVENING

Two Organizations From the George Street Sunday School Spent Pleasant Evening at Home of Mr. R. B. McGill

On Friday night two Adult Bible Classes from the George Street Sunday School spent a very enjoyable evening at the home of Mr. R. B. McGill, 187 London street. The Men's Social Class taught by Mr. A. Stewart, and Mrs. Carlisle's Bible class of ladies, were the two organizations who combined forces for an exceedingly pleasant time.

A splendid musical programme was given during the evening, including solos by Miss M. Armstrong and Mr. Chas. Coleman. Several very fine instrumental offerings made very welcome contributions to the musical end of the evening, and added greatly to the pleasure of the gathering. Mr. McClaren gave some bright readings, his elocution was effective and was greatly enjoyed by all present.

Besides the programme the members of the two Bible classes, owing to the arrangements of the host and hostess, which were very much appreciated, spent a delightful social time. Towards the close of the evening refreshments were served, and the affair was from every standpoint an unqualified success.

A GENTLE HINT.

LONDON, Oct. 10.— While one of Lord Kitchener's staff officers was showing his confreres a handsome dressing case he was taking to the front with him, K. of K. entered, looked at the gold-stopped bottles and elaborate fittings and inquired cuttingly: "What is your taste in hairpins?"

East City Ratepayer Approves of a More Equal Distribution of the City's Moneys

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I notice in Mr. Hay's letter to the ratepayers of East City, that he advocates "among other things," better lighting of this ward. I am pleased to note this, and also pleased to know that Mr. Hay is not afraid to state his platform. I like a man that has convictions and is not afraid to express them. I hope the ratepayers will elect Mr. Hay, and I trust that one of the first things he does is to see that we have a more adequate lighting system in this ward.

I have been a resident and taxpayer of East City for over 25 years, and I have noticed that we have been badly neglected on this side of the river this last few years.

I do not advocate the expenditure of more money in our city (our taxes are plenty high enough), but I do advocate a more equal distribution of the city's monies, and if that is done I know that there will be a much larger amount spent in this ward.

We want bright, energetic, influential men to represent us in the City Council, and in Mr. Hay (one who has spent nearly all his life in the city), I feel sure we will have a live, wide awake representative.

Thanking you very much, Mr. Editor, for the use of this valuable space.

Respectfully,
East City Ratepayer.

"AN EDUCATED WILL IS THE SECRET OF SUCCESS"

Rev. Dr. J. L. Gordon, of Winnipeg, Spoke to Very Large Congregation at the George Street Methodist Church Last Night.

A SPLENDID OPENING

The George Street Methodist church was crowded last night when Dr. J. L. Gordon, the Winnipeg orator, opened his series of addresses by an inspiring talk on the greatest mistakes in the life of a young man. The very large congregation was deeply impressed with his message and very greatly pleased with the manner and the language with which he delivered it. Had the George Street church been a theatre the S.R.O. sign would have been hung out before time for the service to commence, Dr. Gordon in opening explained that his talk would pave the way for the address he is going to give in the St. Paul's church to-night, when he will take for his subject, "The Greatest Mistakes in the Life of a Young Woman." His talk to-night, said the speaker, will be exceedingly plain — so plain in fact that some of the young ladies might object, but he was here to talk squarely in these matters and intended to do so.

"Wealth," said Dr. Gordon, "understands wealth; poverty understands poverty; sympathy understands sympathy; love understands love. Men understand men and women understand women. A young man understands young men as nobody else in the world can do. It was as a young man that he intended to speak to the young men of Peterborough.

It was a mistake for young men to sneer at the Bible. The Bible was the master book and the mother of books—the lion in the realm of literature. The Bible has produced the civilization which it crowns, and crowned the civilization which it produced. The knowledge of the English Bible was in itself a liberal education. The man who sneers at the Bible is an ignoramus and is classing himself low in the estimation of intelligent people. He sneers at the brightest thing in our Christian civilization. The Bible is an inspired book because it inspires. It is an infallible book because it infallibly points to an infallible Christ.

It was a mistake that a young man profane the name of Jesus Christ. A young fellow must be poverty stricken in his intellectual realm when he was to pad his conversations with oaths and blasphemies. Even Bob Ingersool, the genial agnostic of the past generation, had too much respect for Jesus Christ to traduce His name. He told his publisher to forget all about his references to Jesus Christ made in the enthusiasm of his early days and ordered everything cut out of his writings that would reflect on the Nazarene.

The young man will make a mistake who thinks more of money than of manhood. The poorest man in the world is the man who has riches and nothing else. The man is a fool who exchanges character for coin, principle for power, manhood for money, his soul for silver and his God for gold.

It was a mistake for a young man to burn out the fabric of brain and body with strong drink. Wherever there was drink there was danger. A man who could drink or leave it alone, usually drank. "My boy, cut it out. It will dig your own grave for you."

That man has blundered somewhere who does not possess decision of character. The greatest mistake in the life of a young man is the lack of decision of character. Luther exclaimed "Here I stand, God helping me." Even staunch Roman Catholics cannot help admiring his splendid manifestation of courage. An educated will was the secret of success. One man had as much will power as another. The question was, will he exercise it? "Young man, if you think you are right have your say. If you know you are right, have your way."

In concluding, Dr. Gordon enlarged on the mistake that young men were making in neglecting things eternal, and in trampling upon a mother's love.

His address made a profound impression on all who were present, and there can be little doubt that many of them will be listeners at many of Dr. Gordon's week night meetings.

Two splendid solos were rendered by Mr. Greenlay, whose resonant bass voice greatly pleased the congregation. He is a fitting soloist to accompany the eloquent clergyman from Winnipeg.

RETURNED FROM CHIEFS' CONVENTION

Alderman G. W. Green, chairman of the Fire committee, and Chief Howard, returned on Saturday from the Fire Chief's convention at Stratford. Bishop of Kingston Will Conduct St. John's Mission

The Mission services at St. John's Church, which were arranged early in the summer, will be begun on Tuesday evening by His Lordship the Bishop of Kingston. The services will be of entirely informal character, and will be taken by the Bishop in the evenings, at 8 o'clock, and in the afternoons, at 4.30 o'clock. The hour of service for the afternoon has been set at 4.30 o'clock to allow the men, as well as the women, to participate. It was announced yesterday that persons could enter or leave the Church at any time during the services, which will be of short duration. They will be concluded on Sunday next, when the Bishop will take all the services and conduct a special meeting for men at 3 p.m.

The Bishop of Kingston was the special preacher at the services held in St. John's on St. George's Day, April 23rd, when he made a most decided impression by his preaching. He is a comparatively young man, having been consecrated some three years ago as an assistant to the Bishop of Ontario. Although the evening services begin on Tuesday, the afternoon services will not commence until Wednesday.

Paving Finished In A Month

Work of Laying Asphalt Surface Was Started To-day on Charlotte and Water Streets

The laying of the asphalt surface, which marks the final stage of the paving of the local streets, was begun this morning on Charlotte and Water streets. This process will take slightly longer this year than last, for Messrs. Foley and Gleeson are putting on what is known as a binder between the concrete base and the asphalt top. This is supposed to greatly increase the permanency of the pavement. It is expected that the work planned for this year will be completed by the middle of next month. It is not thought that the weather will interfere with the construction work.

EVANGELIST CROSSLEY

Will be but two nights more in St. James' Methodist Church, corner Romaine and Aylmer Streets. Hear him to-night on "Mind Your Own Business," and be at the grand closing meeting on Tuesday evening.

SACRED HEART CHOIR MAKING GOOD PROGRESS

Rev. Dean McColl preached a special sermon on "The Apostolic Succession" last night at the Church of the Sacred Heart. At the Cathedral Rev. J. J. O'Brien delivered the Vespers sermon, his subject being "Revelation." There was a large attendance at each church. During the fall months these special Sunday sermons will continue.

The Sacred Heart church choir at the 10.30 mass yesterday displayed a choral resonance and depth equal to the special work of some past festive singing. It is understood that the choir has recently received new members. Although the departure of Mr. Peter Henshaw was a loss, several new tenors have been recently added and the choir is making good progress. At the Offertory yesterday, Mr. Ed. Bartley sang, "Ave Maria" in splendid voice and expression.

ONLY THE BEGINNING

Empire of 400,000,000 Can Never Lack Men, Says London Times

(Canadian Press Depatch.)

LONDON, Oct. 17.— The Times' military correspondent replying to the Frankfurter Zeitung's statement that Great Britain was unable to raise more than 600,000 troops, says:

"We have at the present moment exactly double that number, namely 1,200,00 men, and the number grows almost faster than we can cope with it This is only the beginning.

"It is our way to begin to raise our armies after war breaks out, and to go on raising them until our ultimate ends are achieved. With 1,200,000 men at home, the army in the field and hundreds of thousands forming in India, Canada, Australia, and elsewhere are merely the nucleus upon which our armies will eventually be built.

"It is only a question of time. It stands to reason that an Empire of 400,000,000 can never lack men. This war for us has hardly begun.

"We have sent merely an advance guard into France. In the spring the remainder of the advance guard will follow, and somewhere toward the end of 1915 the main body will begin to come within view.

"We are sorry for the allies that we are even slower than Russia in making our weight felt, but a year or so hence, when the allies need a rest, we shall be in a position to make good war.

"Nothing can arrest the steadily ascending figures of our army. Their cost is of little account since Germany will ultimately have to pay—in territory as well as in money.

"Imagine things at their worst. Imagine the last Cossack on the Urals, and the last French doorkeeper evicted from Bordeaux. Then we would begin a maritime war against Germany and still be no worse off than when we began war with Napoleon."

GREETINGS TO THE CANUCKS

Mayors of Several Cities Send Messages

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Lord Mayor of London sends the following message: "The Mansion House warmly welcomes the arrival of the Canadian contingent. London gratefully recognizes once again the loyal affection and the aid our great Dominion of Canada gives the Motherland at this time. We feel sure the contingent will by their services reflect increased honour on their already distinguished record.—Van Stittart Bowater, Lord Mayor of London."

Will Crooks, the Labour leader, says: "Poplar, East London.— Sons of the Empire! A thousand welcomes to England, and love to those who sent you to uphold our honour for humanity's sake.—Will Crooks."

The First Lord of the Admiralty sends me the following message: "On His Majesty's Service, the Admiralty, London.—Canada sends her aid at the timely moment. The conflict moves forward to its terrible climax, and fiercer struggles lie before us than any which have yet been fought. And in these supreme trials Canada will strike her blow and make her sacrifice for the life of the British Empire and the democratic civilization of the world.—Winston Churchill."

Other messages are as follows:

"Our fellow citizens from the Dominion are welcome! with grateful heart. God bless them and send them back safe and victorious.— Edward Carson."

"Glasgow.—I am delighted to hear of the safe arrival at Plymouth of the Canadian contingent. Canada's action at this juncture is in keeping with what I expected of the men of all classes and all shades of opinion whom I met when I visited the great Dominion last autumn.—Stevenson, Lord Provost of Glasgow."

"Plymouth.—Conveyed through the fortress commandant. Hearty welcome and best wishes for success of the arms and hifh appreciation of the lofty patriotism of the splendid Canadian force landed yesterday.—Mayor."

HOW GET CAPITAL FOR NEW INDUSTRIES?

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Enclosed please find copy of a poem received from a friend in England, perhaps you can find a place in your esteemed paper for it. I have been very much interested reading the articles in the daily press regarding manufacturing Canada's requirements in Canada. To my mind, the greatest difficulty is found in getting the capital necessary for such industries. How would you suggest obtaining the necessary capital to start manufacturing here in Peterborough, woven goods that have hitherto been imported from Germany and Austria, and not manufactured by the present manufacturers in the city? Thanking you for any information you can give me. Please do not divulge my name and treat it confidential.

Yours truly,
CHARPENTIER.

THE LIFE OF A WATCH

It should be cleaned and oiled once a year. Many good watches are allowed to go without cleaning and oiling, and the result is the oil is entirely dried up, the pivots become cut and rusted so badly that it costs nearly as much as a new movement to put it in proper condition again. The old saying "a stitch in time saves nine" holds good.
